PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 19, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With all the resources of an infinite God available to them that ask Thee, forgive us, O Lord, for our lack of faith that begs for pennies when we could write checks for millions; that strikes a match when we could have the sun. Give to us the faith to believe that there is no problem before us that Thy wisdom cannot solve. As Thou hast guided men in the past, so guide these men today. At every desk may there be the whisper of Thy counsel. Help our leaders to weigh their words, that their words may carry weight, and, what is more, the echo of Thy will, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 24, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 568) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

PROCEDURES ON TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAMS—EXECUTIVE ORDER AND STATEMENTS RELATING THERETO

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Executive order relating to trade agreements which was issued on the 25th of February by the President, together with a statement issued by the President, and also a statement issued by Hon. William L. Clayton, Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, with respect to the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made; and if the Chair may be permitted the indulgence, he asks that there be printed in the same connection the statement made on the same subject by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] and the Senator from Michigan last evening. The Chair hears no objection.

The Executive order and statements are as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER PRESCRIBING PROCEDURES FOR THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes, including section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (46 Stat. 698) and the Trade Agreements Act approved June 12, 1934, as amended (48 Stat. 943; 59 Stat. 410), in the interest of the foreign affairs functions of the United States and in order that the interests of the various branches of American production shall be effectively safeguarded in the administration of the trade-agreements program, it is hereby ordered as follows:

PART I

1. There shall be included in every trade agreement hereafter entered into under the authority of said act of June 12, 1934, as amended, a clause providing in effect that if, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the concession granted by the United States on any article in the trade agreement, such article is being imported in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause, or threaten, serious injury to domestic producers of like or similar articles, the United States shall be free to withdraw the concession, in whole or in part, or to modify it, to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent such injury.

2. The United States Tariff Commission, upon the request of the President, upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party when in the judgment of the Tariff Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, shall make an investigation to determine whether, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the concession granted on any article by the United States in a trade agreement containing such a clause, such article is being imported in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers of like or similar articles. Should the Tariff Commission find, as a result of its investigation, that such injury is being caused or threatened, the Tariff Commission shall recommend to the President, for his consideration in the light of the public interest, the withdrawal of the concession, in whole or in part, or the modification of the concession, to the extent and for such time as the Tariff Commission finds would be necessary to prevent such injury.

3. In the course of any investigation under the preceding paragraph, the Tariff Commission shall hold public hearings, giving reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence and to be heard at such hearings. The procedure and rules and regulations for such investigations and hearings shall from time to time be prescribed by the Tariff Commission.

4. The Tariff Commission shall at all times keep informed concerning the operation and effect of provisions relating to duties or other import restrictions of the United States contained in trade agreements heretofore or hereafter entered into by the President under the authority of said act of June 12, 1934, as amended. The Tariff Commission, at least once a year, shall submit to the President and to the Congress a factual report on the operation of the trade-agreements program.

PART II

5. An Interdepartmental Committee on Trade Agreements (hereinafter referred to as the Interdepartmental Committee) shall act as the agency through which the President shall, in accordance with section 4 of said act of June 12, 1934, as amended, seek information and advice before concluding a trade agreement. In order that the interests of American industry, labor, and farmers, and American military, financial, and foreign policy, shall be appropriately represented, the Interdepartmental Committee shall consist of a Commissioner of the Tariff Commission and of persons designated from their respective agencies by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor. The chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee shall be the representative from the Department of State. The Interdepartmental Committee may designate such subcommittees as it may deem necessary.

6. With respect to each dutiable import item which is considered by the Interdepartmental Committee for inclusion in a trade agreement, the Tariff Commission shall make an analysis of the facts relative to the production, trade, and consumption of the article involved, to the probable effect of granting a concession thereon and to the competitive factors involved. Such analysis shall be submitted in digest form to the Interdepartmental Committee. The digests, excepting confidential material, shall be published by the Tariff Commission.

7. With respect to each export item which is considered by the Interdepartmental Committee for inclusion in a trade agreement, the Department of Commerce shall make an analysis of the facts relative to the production, trade, and consumption of the article involved, to the probable effect of obtaining a concession thereon, and to the competitive factors involved. Such analysis shall be submitted in digest form to the Interdepartmental Committee.

8. After analysis and consideration of the studies of the Tariff Commission and the Department of Commerce provided for in paragraphs 6 and 7 hereof, of the views of interested persons presented to the Committee for Reciprocity Information (established by Executive Order 6750, dated June 27, 1934, as amended by Executive Order 9647, dated October 25, 1945), and of any other information available to the Interdepartmental Committee, the Interdepartmental Committee shall make such recommendations to the President relative to the conclusion of trade agreements, and to the provisions to be included therein, as are considered appropriate to carry out the purposes set forth in said act of June 12, 1934, as amended. If any such recommendation to the President with respect to the inclusion of a concession in any trade agreement is not unanimous, the President shall be provided with a full report by the dissenting member or members of the Interdepartmental Committee giving the reasons for their dissent and specifying the point beyond which they consider any reduction or concession involved cannot be made without injury to the domestic economy.

PART III

9. There shall also be included in every trade agreement hereafter entered into under the authority of said act of June 12, 1934, as amended, a most-favored-nation provision securing for the exports of the United States the benefits of all tariff concessions and other tariff advantages hereafter accorded by the other party or parties to the agreement to any third country. This provision shall be subject to the minimum of necessary exceptions and shall be designed to obtain the greatest possible benefits for exports from the United States. The Interdepartmental Committee shall keep informed of discriminations by any country against the trade of the United States which cannot be removed by normal diplomatic representations and, if the public interest will be served thereby, shall recommend to the President the withholding from such country of the benefit of concessions granted under said act.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1947.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

I wish to reaffirm the faith of this administration in the Cordell Hull reciprocal-trade-agreements program, which became effective in 1934 and which has been extended by Congress all these years. This program is based on the principle of negotiation between this and other countries for the reduction of trade restrictions and elimination of discriminations on a mutually advantageous basis; for each concession granted by the United States a corresponding concession is received. This program has become an integral part of our foreign policy and has widespread support from industry, labor, and farmers.

I am today issuing an Executive order which formalizes and makes mandatory certain existing trade-agreements procedures and which, in addition, makes some procedural changes. I wish to make clear that the provisions of the order do not deviate from the traditional Cordell Hull principles. They simply make assurance doubly sure that American interests will be properly safeguarded.

This order is the result of conversations between Under Secretaries of State Acheson and Clayton and Senators Vandenberg and Millikin, and has been carefully considered by the interdepartmental trade-agreements organization. This organization is composed of representatives of the Departments of State, War, Navy, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, and the Tariff Commission.

The United States is preparing to meet with 18 other nations in Geneva on the 10th of April to negotiate on policies affecting world trade. We plan to complete the draft of a charter establishing common principles of world trade policy and setting up an international trade organization. We also shall negotiate the reduction of tariffs, the removal of other barriers to trade, and the elimination of discriminatory practices. I am very happy that Senators VANDENBERG and MILLIKIN agree that we should go forward with the Geneva negotiations.

All of us must now recognize that bipartisan support of our foreign economic policy, as well as of our foreign policy in general, is essential. If we are to succeed in our efforts, through the United Nations, to organize the world for peace, we cannot refuse our cooperation where economic questions are involved. Here, as elsewhere in our foreign relations, we must abandon partisanship and unite in our support of a foreign policy that serves the interests of the Nation as a whole.

FEBRUARY 25, 1947.

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE WILLIAM L. CLAYTON, UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC AFFAIRS, RELATING TO THE PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER ON TRADE AGREEMENTS

The Executive order issued today by the President with regard to the reciprocal trade-agreements program formally establishes the interdepartmental organization which has been set up to administer the Trade Agreements Act, and specifically outlines the procedure which this organization is to follow.

The order was prepared after the most careful consideration in this Department and in other agencies concerned with administration of the trade-agreements program, and after extensive conferences with leaders of both parties in Congress. It substantially meets the proposals on this subject which were made on February 7 by Senator VANDENBERG and Senator MILLIKIN. Those proposals symbolized their desire for agreement on nonpartisan support for the foreign economic policy of the United States, and should provide reassurance of wholehearted participation of this country in the forthcoming negotiations at Geneva next spring for a trade agreement with 18 foreign countries which will carry forward the principles of reciprocity as developed under James G. Blaine and Cordell Hull.

The contents of the order may be summarized as follows:

1. The Tariff Commission, a long-established bipartisan agency, will play a more formal and precise part in the trade-agreements procedure. This body is made responsible for keeping the President and the Congress fully informed concerning the operation and effects of trade agreements. The Commission must report its findings to the President and to the Congress at least once a year. Heretofore, the Congress largely depended upon the hearings in connection with renewal of the trade-agreements authority for reports on the operation of the agreements.

2. The Executive order makes mandatory the previous commitments of the interdepartmental trade-agreements organization to include in future trade agreements a safeguarding clause, along the general lines of that in our trade agreements with Mexico and Paraguay. This clause provides that if, through unforeseen developments, and of a concession granted in a trade agreement, imports enter in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers of like or similar products, either party to the agreement shall be free to withdraw or modify the concession.

3. The Tariff Commission is made responsible for investigations and recommendations under this safeguarding clause. On its own motion, on request of the President, or on application of any interested party who can show good and sufficient reasons, the Tariff Commission will make an investigation to determine whether the safeguarding clause should be invoked, hold public hearings in connection with such investigations, and report its findings and recommendations to the President.

4. The Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee which has heretofore operated on an informal basis is established as the organization through which the President shall seek, as prescribed by law, information and advice prior to concluding a trade agreement. Furthermore the membership of the committee is broadened by adding the Department of Labor to the Tariff Commission, the Departments of State, Treasury, War, Navy, Agriculture, and Commerce, already represented.

5. Before the negotiation of any trade agreement the Tariff Commission will make an analysis with respect to each dutiable import item which is considered by the Interdepartmental Committee for inclusion in a trade agreement. This analysis shall include facts relative to competition, production, trade, consumption, and the probable effect of granting a concession thereon. Digests of this information shall be submitted to the Interdepartmental Committee and the nonconfidential material shall be published by the Tariff Commission.

These analyses have already been made for practically all of the products which are being considered for inclusion in the forthcoming trade-agreement negotiations at Geneva, and the nonconfidential portion of most of the digests relative to such products have been published.

The Department of Commerce will make, for the use of the Interdepartmental Committee, an analysis with respect to each export item which is considered for inclusion in a trade agreement.

6. In case any recommendation of the Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee to the President concerning the inclusion of a concession item is not unanimous, the President shall be provided with a full report by the dissenting member or members of the committee as to the reasons for their dissent.

7. The order makes mandatory the inclusion in every trade agreement of a provision designed to obtain most-favored-nation treatment for American exports to the maximum possible extent.

It makes the Interdepartmental Committee responsible for the findings and necessary recommendations to the President for withholding concessions from any country whose discriminations have not been corrected through normal diplomatic channels.

Since the Hull trade-agreements program was inaugurated in 1934, changes and improvements have been made in the procedure and machinery for administering the Trade Agreements Act when it was found practical to do so. These changes demonstrate that the trade-agreements machinery is adaptable to the needs of the country. The businessmen and other interested persons who appeared at the recent hearings before the Committee for Reciprocity Information appeared to be convinced that they had been given full and fair opportunity to present their views and the reasons for those views in the hearings. The information presented at the hearings is now receiving the most careful analysis and consideration by the trade-agreements organization which is preparing the recommendations for the forthcoming negotiations at Geneva.

The agreement which it is proposed to negotiate at Geneva will be an essential step in the establishment of an International Trade Organization and the formulation of a code of fair principles for international commerce, under which nations can cooperate in expanding their trade multilaterally and on a nondiscriminatory basis, thereby increasing employment, production, and exchange of goods, and raising standards of living in all countries.

International accord with respect to trade policy is essential to the successful operation of the other international agencies which have already been established in the field of economic affairs. Cooperation among nations in economic affairs is, in turn, a prerequisite of international cooperation in political and security affairs.

FEBRUARY 25, 1947.

JOINT STATEMENT BY SENATORS VANDENBERG AND MILLIKIN

We welcome the President's order as a substantial advance in the legitimate and essential domestic protections which should be part of an equally essential foreign trade program. The President refers to the fact that his order is the result of suggestions by us. This is entirely true in respect to the provisions for post-agreement appeals if and when affected domestic interests may be jeopardized. Here the United States Tariff Commission has responsibility to make direct, protective recommendations to the President. The President's order differs, however, from our suggestions that the Tariff Commission should have somewhat similar direct responsibilities to prevent errors before they occur. But in the main we count the President's order as highly useful progress in a desirable direction. As to the proposed Geneva negotiations for a new world trade organization, we shall of course reserve our positions and our judgment until the completed agreement is submitted for constitutional approval.

RULING ON REFERENCE OF BILL PROPOSING UNIFICATION OF ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to say to the Senate that under the unanimous consent agreement entered into on Monday last the Senate began to operate under the limitation of debate therein provided at 12 o'clock today. The Chair, however, is in receipt of a letter from the President of the United States presenting the so-called merger bill, involving the unification of the armed forces, which involves the question of reference. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the question and then submit his ruling to the Senate, provided the Senate is willing to proceed with that matter at the moment. Therefore the Chair asks the Senate whether it is willing to suspend the unanimous-consent agreement pending the determination of the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the course suggested by the Chair will be satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Senate will proceed on that basis, and the Chair suggests that there ought to be a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chair to restate what it is that requires a quorum call before the Senate proceeds under the unanimous consent agreement? Is it proposed that the unanimous consent agreement be withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not suggesting that it be withdrawn. He is suggesting that it be suspended pending the determination of the point of order to which he has referred, and that a quorum should be present.

Mr. GURNEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Murray
Baldwin	Hayden	Myers
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Conor
Barkley	Hill	O'Daniel
Brewster	Hoey	O'Mahoney

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business, and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 26, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
President of the Senate pro tempore,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On January 17, 1947, I informed you that representatives of my office and of the armed services were engaged in drafting a bill to be submitted to the Congress for its consideration concerning a plan of unification. This draft, entitled "National Security Act of 1947," has now been completed, and I am enclosing herewith a copy of it.

This proposed bill has the approval of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

It is my belief that this suggested legislation accomplishes the desired unification of the services, and I heartily recommend its enactment by the Congress.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference of this proposed bill involves a matter of basic and substantial controversy between two of the standing committees of the Senate. The Chair therefore wishes to make the following statement to the Senate:

Knowing that this question of reference would arise, the Chair has given serious study to the matter. It is typical of several other problems of reference which have confronted the Chair. Decisions frequently are difficult under the Legislative Reorganization Act, because of conflicting interpretations which can be put upon the language of the act. It is not unusual that a thoroughly persuasive argument can be made, on the basis of the language of the act, for jurisdiction in one of two or three of the new standing committees of the Senate. Under such circumstances, the decision of the Chair unavoidably becomes a policy decision. When the Chair finds no explicit and indisputable instructions in the Reorganization Act, the Chair must weigh the rival interpretations which are possible and base his decision upon the preponderance. This becomes then a matter of judgment. It is not a matter of serious import in the ordinary routine, but it may become a major decision in policy in such instances as the present one. In such cases the Chair believes the Senate itself should decide, in the final analysis. The Chair will not seek escape from responsibility in such instances. The Chair will make his ruling and his reference, but he will immediately bring such decisions to the direct attention of the Senate so that the Senate itself can decide on the basis of an appeal from the ruling of the Chair if there is disagreement.

In the present instance, the Army-Navy-Air merger bill, in the opinion of the Chair, can, under the language of the Reorganization Act, be referred either to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments or to the Committee on Armed Services, within the meaning of the act.

The jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments might seem to be specifically established by the language of the act which assigns "reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government" to this committee. The merger bill clearly involves reorganization in the executive branch.

On the other hand, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Armed Services would seem to be just as specifically established by the language in the act which assigns "the common defense generally," "the War Department and the Military Establishment generally" and the "Navy Department and the Naval Establishment generally" to this committee. The merger bill clearly involves "the War and Navy Departments generally" and the "Military and Naval Establishments generally," and certainly no legislation could go so directly to problems of "the common defense generally."

In the presence of this statutory conflict, the Chair—and ultimately the Senate—must choose between the two, on balance.

Such a choice is not difficult for the Chair. Needless to say, the Chair's decision has nothing to do with the personnel of either committee. The Chair has equal respect for both. The decision is a policy decision which must determine which of the committees, all things considered, has the preponderant right of jurisdiction.

When the President's letter, announcing the merger, came to the Senate, in the first instance, the Chair referred that original letter to the Committee on Armed Services, in agreement with the view of the Parliamentarian. In spite of the language in the Reorganization Act regarding reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government, the Chair frankly states that it did not then seriously occur to him that a measure involving the entire fundamental structure of the Army and the Navy should not go to the new Committee on Armed Services, which is charged with responsibility for the Military and Naval Establishments. That is why the question was not submitted to the Senate in the first instance, but now the direct issue has been joined.

It continues to be the opinion of the Chair that the merger bill should go to the Committee on Armed Services. It seems to the Chair that nothing could be more fundamental in the entire future work of this committee, charged with total and exclusive responsibility for the common defense generally than the basic organization of these defense forces. It seems to the Chair that the Committee on Armed Services is cut off from these responsibilities at the very roots and at the very threshold of its labors, if it is denied authority over the basic structure of the Military and Naval Establishments which it is specifically charged with the duty to supervise.

Its predecessor committees are the ones in which all the preliminary explorations and all the studies and all the debates took place. The Chair doubts whether it would ever have occurred to any Senator in the Seventy-ninth Congress, when this merger problem was at white heat, that the problem should have been taken away at that time from the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs and referred to what was then the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The point was never even indirectly raised. If there is anything to be said for continuity in the Senate's operations—and that is supposed to be one of the Senate's unique attributes—then the successor committee to the former Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, bearing precisely the same name, cannot logically inherit duties and obligations previously inherent in the former committees dealing with the armed services.

Yet we do face the clear mandate in the new law that any merger in the executive departments, being a reorganization, belongs in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It is a conflict which must be resolved. The Chair can only surmise that the Congressional Reorganization Act thought of reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government as being ordinarily concerned chiefly with a consolidation of expenditures—as indicated by the title of the new committee. It was thinking in fiscal terms.

While the pending merger certainly has its fiscal phase and certainly involves the expectation of joint economies, the merger far transcends this limited objective and is being projected, in the Chair's view, to improve the common defense generally. In the Chair's view this is its overriding purpose.

It is for these indicated reasons that the Chair rules that the merger bill should be referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Reorganization Act clearly states that "all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following subjects"—and subject (B) is "Reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government"—shall be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, it was the unanimous opinion of the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments when we met in executive session about 2 weeks ago that the merger bill, if it were a bill of the nature such as was being currently reported in the newspapers, should be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Unquestionably, the bill provides for a reorganization of the Government and is of the greatest moment. My natural impulse, as chairman of the committee, is to appeal from the decision of the Chair referring the bill to the Committee on Armed Services. However, no member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has had an opportunity to examine the bill. We are not in position today to argue an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill may lie on the table until Friday, and in the meantime the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will have an opportunity to examine the bill; also to study the decision of the Chair, and to determine by that time whether an appeal will be taken from the ruling of the Chair.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may lie on the table until Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont that the bill and the decision of the Chair lie upon the table until Friday, to become a special order when the Senate convenes on that day?

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill remaining on the table until Friday, but I may say that when I first learned that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments had a desire to assume jurisdiction of the bill it was certainly a surprise to me. I am sure that the members of my committee, the Committee on Armed Services, are in complete agreement with me when I say that our committee is ready to hold hearings on the bill and consider it as expeditiously and as efficiently as possible. Our committee expects to handle the bill. Should we not be given the responsibility of determining whether or not it is the kind of a bill the Senate wants, I am sure our committee would at the start feel that it was denied the opportunity to consider measures affecting the security of the United States, for certainly the security of the United States is bound up in this bill. I have no personal objection to allowing the decision to lie on the table until Friday of this week.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I have no disposition to object to the request of the Senator from Vermont, but I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry so that we may be clear as to what the parliamentary situation will be. If the unanimous-consent request is granted, then when the Senate convenes on Friday will this matter automatically come up? What will be the parliamentary situation with reference to it? Suppose no action is then taken on it. Suppose no Senator rises to appeal from the decision of the Chair, what then happens?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent request as stated by the Chair, the bill and the decision of the Chair will lie upon the table until Friday, when it will be a special order for immediate attention at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. In other words, it will come up automatically at 12 o'clock, when the Senate convenes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the way in which the unanimous-consent request is stated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, may I state to the distinguished Senator from Vermont and also the majority leader that it seems to me the situation with respect to the concurrent resolution dealing with the budget would be simplified if the Senator from Vermont would agree to restate his unanimous-consent request so that the question of the reference of the merger bill and the decision just made by the Chair would go over until Friday; or, if the unfinished business had not been disposed of when the Senate then convenes, that the special order would come up after the budget resolution has been disposed of? I make that suggestion to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I hope we can obtain some kind of unanimous consent respecting the so-called merger bill, because I feel that it is possible and probable that in the meantime, so far as the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is concerned, a satisfactory arrangement may be worked out. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments if he will not modify his unanimous-consent request so that the merger bill be made the special order of business immediately after the vote on the pending resolution is had, so that the merger question will not interfere with consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me on that point?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is entirely possible that the pending resolution will consume all of today and be disposed of late in the afternoon today. Certainly we would not want to take up the merger question today. The request of the Senator from Vermont is that it go over until Friday in order that Senators may study both the bill and the decision of the Chair. Regardless of the disposition of the pending resolution, it seems to me that is a reasonable request, and that it ought not to depend on the disposition of the pending question.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. My suggestion was that the unanimous-consent request be modified so as to provide, in the event the budget resolution is not disposed of today, that the merger question shall be delayed as a special order until after the budget resolution has been disposed of.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I had the same point in mind. If the pending resolution is disposed of today naturally we would not want to take up the merger question now, because it is the intention to try to work out an agreement between now and Friday. But if the budget resolution is not disposed of today, and its consideration is continued until Friday, then I believe we should consider the budget resolution until it is disposed of before taking up the merger question.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I might say that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is perhaps not so much concerned with the consideration of the bill itself as with compliance with the Reorganization Act and the establishment of precedents which might be occasioned by the ruling of the Chair. I realize that the Reorganization Act must have considerable amending and smoothing out before it will operate in the manner in which I think it should operate. Under the Reorganization Act conflicting jurisdiction over bills and other measures exists in various committees. It is immaterial to me whether the merger proposal is taken up immediately on the convening of the Senate on Friday or on the disposition of the pending question. I simply want Senators to accommodate themselves to some plan which will obtain the necessary unanimous consent to take up the merger question on Friday and give the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments an opportunity to examine the bill and also to study the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont wish to amend his request?

Mr. AIKEN. If it is agreeable to the Senator from South Dakota I will modify my request, but I realize that he can object to it.

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure the Senator can modify his request if he so desires.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator from South Dakota agree that we may dispose of the matter now pending in the Senate before debating the ruling of the Chair, assuming that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments decides to appeal from the ruling of the Chair? We have not appealed it yet.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I have no desire at all to be technical. I simply want to know that there will be no delay in the reference of the bill, for it deals with a very important matter, and for my part I am sure our committee wants to begin work on the bill as soon as possible. With the assurance that it will be decided on Friday, I have no further objection.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Chair and the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services that there will be no attempt to prolong the debate on this question, because we are all anxious to reach a prompt determination on the final reference of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Vermont is that the bill and the decision of the Chair lie on the table until Friday, and that the subject be a special order upon the convening of the Senate on Friday, if the pending unfinished business shall have been concluded; otherwise that it be a special order on the termination of the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Without objection, the communication from the President and the bill will lie on the table (H. Doc. No. 149).

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] members of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, to fill existing vacancies thereon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

DETAIL OF MILITARY AND NAVAL MISSIONS TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of May 19, 1926 (44 Stat. 565), as amended by the acts of May 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 218), and of October 1, 1942 (56 Stat. 763) providing for the detail of United States military and naval missions to foreign governments (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT OF OPERATIONS UNDER BOULDER CANYON PROJECT ADJUSTMENT ACT

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fifth annual financial report of operations under the Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Public Lands.

CENTRAL VALLEY FEDERAL RECLAMATION PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report presented to the Secretary of the Interior by the Bureau of Reclamation on August 6, 1946, on the Central Valley Federal reclamation project in California (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

POSTHUMOUS PROMOTION OF COL. EARLE L. JOHNSON

A communication from the military aide to the President, enclosing a memorandum from the Secretary of War recommending that the name of Col. Earle L. Johnson, national commander, Civil Air Patrol, who was killed in an airplane accident on February 16, 1947, remain on the promotion list, and that the promotion be posthumously awarded (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Armed Services.

PERSONNEL CEILINGS

A letter from the Director of the Executive Office of the President, Bureau of the Budget, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report on personnel ceilings (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Civil Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"House Joint Memorial 5

"To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas the Congress, in furtherance of the prosecution of World War II, enacted the War Powers Act granting to the President of the United States extraordinary powers, which powers are wholly unwarranted in peacetime; and

"Whereas the said War Powers Act among other things provided that the President of the United States might by Executive order transfer the duties of Government agencies from one to another, but expressly provided that the powers granted therein could be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the war; and

"Whereas the President of the United States on January 16, 1942, promulgated Executive Order No. 9024 whereby there was created a Government agency known as the War Production Board; and

"Whereas by Executive Order No. 9040, promulgated on January 24, 1942, the primary duty of the said War Production Board was to 'exercise general direction over the war procurement and production program,' and said order further provided that the Chairman of said Board may exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by such order and in such manner as he might determine, and that his decisions are final; and

"Whereas on October 4, 1945, long after the unconditional surrender of our enemies, the President of the United States promulgated Executive Order No. 9638 whereby he abolished the said War Production Board, and created another Government agency designated as the Civilian Production Administration, and conferred upon it all the extraordinary war emergency powers theretofore possessed by the said War Production Board; and

"Whereas the said Civilian Production Administration has since purported and is now purporting to exercise power and authority over every person and corporation throughout the United States who undertakes to erect or repair a building or structure at a cost of even a nominal sum, and among other things has decreed all such construction to be unlawful unless first authorized by such Civilian Production Administration; and

"Whereas government by such Executive fiat is wholly contrary to the American system of constitutional government, and is not within the powers delegated to the Federal Government by the several States of the Union, and such exercise of authority by a Federal agency over the lives of the people of this State has not increased housing facilities, but on the contrary has created more chaos and confusion, and the assertion of such authority by said agency, and the exercise of such extraordinary powers by the President of the United States should be promptly terminated: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized and requested, and this Forty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon does hereby petition that honorable body, to abolish the said Civilian Production Administration and to promptly terminate all the functions and activities assumed by said agency pursuant to the aforesaid Executive order, or any other order or statute; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress and to each Senator and Representative therein representing the people of the State of Oregon.

"Adopted by house February 6, 1947.

"JOHN H. HALL,
"Speaker of House.

"Adopted by senate February 14, 1947.

"M. E. CORNETT,
"President of Senate."

By Mr. GEORGE:

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Georgia; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Resolution 20

"Whereas the State department of forestry is undertaking and striving toward a State-wide forest-fire-protection and forestry service; and

"Whereas the Federal Government has acquired in Georgia 1,330,623 acres of Georgia's forest lands; and

"Whereas under the existing laws and policies the protection and use of said lands are the sole concern of the Federal Government, and the revenues from the use of these lands go to the Federal Government, with the exception of 25 percent of the gross receipts from the national forest which goes to the counties in which said national forest is located; and

"Whereas the management and forestry control of said Federal lands by the State would greatly assist the State in its State-wide forestry service and fire control; and

"Whereas said Federal forest lands under good State management and control and with selective cutting and sale of timber would produce an annual income of $2,000,000, and State management would release the Federal Government of the expense of patrol and management: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, and it is hereby resolved by the General Assembly of the State, That the Senators from Georgia and the congressional delegation from Georgia introduce and secure passage of legislation providing for cooperative-agreement contracts between the State and Federal Governments for the management and control of said Federal forests in Georgia, and that said congressional delegation use its influence to secure cooperative-agreement contracts whereby the State of Georgia should manage and control said Federal forest lands in its State-wide forest-protection and forestry services system, with the cost therefor to be borne from the selective sale of products of said forest; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Senator GEORGE, Senator RUSSELL, and each Member of Congress from the State of Georgia."

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Concurrent resolution memorializing and petitioning the Congress of the United States to make such appropriations and take such other steps as may be necessary in order to discover and effect a cure for the dread disease of cancer

"Whereas it is estimated that 17,000,000 of the approximately 140,000,000 men, women, and children now composing the population of the United States are doomed to die of cancer; and

"Whereas because other diseases that once exacted a frightful toll of life have, through the progress of science and medicine, been robbed of much of their life-destroying character, thus leaving the likelihood that more and more lives must fall a prey to cancer; and

"Whereas the disease of cancer is often prolonged and involves unusual pain, suffering, and expense of treatment beyond the means of the average individual and family; and

"Whereas it is believed that nature has not been so unkind to man as to inflict upon him death and suffering from a disease for which she has provided in her limitless bounty no cure; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States through the marshaling of unlimited financial resources, scientific knowledge, and skilled personnel unleashed in a relatively short time upon the horizon of a world at war the staggering and awesome power that since creation's dawn has slept within the atom: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully urged, memorialized, and petitioned to enact such legislation looking to the attainment of a cure for cancer and shall provide unlimited funds, the most modern research facilities, and enlisting the services of the ablest men of science and medicine conversant with this field and alive in our country today, to the end that from this untiring and mighty endeavor may emerge to bless mankind with a cure for the appalling disease of cancer; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of the honorable bodies of Congress, to each Member from South Carolina in these bodies, and to the Surgeon-General of the United States."

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution adopted by the Wyoming State Bar Association in session in Casper, Wyo., favoring an amendment to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, relating to right of action of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate commerce for injury to or death of employees due to the employer's negligence. I request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Employers' Liability Act creates rights of action against common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate commerce for injury to or death of employees due to the employer's negligence, and provides that actions therefor may be brought in the district of residence of the defendant, or in which the cause of action arose, or in which the defendant shall be doing business at the time of commencement of the action (U. S. C. A., title 45, sec. 56);

Whereas suit is frequently brought on such claims in far-distant places, such as Chicago, Minneapolis, and Salt Lake City, even though the accident happened in Wyoming and the injured employee, at the time the cause of action arose, was a resident of Wyoming, which practice is burdensome on and expensive to the parties: Now, therefore, it is hereby

Resolved by the Wyoming State Bar Association, now in session in Casper, Wyo., That the association and its members shall and hereby do express their request for and support of an amendment to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, which in principle will limit the venue of such actions to the county, or, if brought in the United States district court, to the Federal judicial district, in which the cause of action arose or in which the injured employee resided at the time of the injury; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of the association to each United States Senator and to the Members of the National House of Representatives from Wyoming, and to the American Bar Association.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 591) to amend the act of January 5, 1905, to incorporate the American National Red Cross, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 38) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Civil Service, I ask unanimous consent to report, with amendments, the bill (S. 459) to amend the Civil Service Act to remove certain discrimination with respect to the appointment of persons having impaired hearing to positions in the classified civil service. I will state for the information of the Senate that it is a unanimous report of all the members of the Committee on Civil Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORT ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. LANGER, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which was referred for examination and recommendation a list of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted a report thereon pursuant to law.

By Mr. GURNEY (by request):

S. 728. A bill to amend the last proviso of section 5 of the Act of April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 557), as amended, in order to provide commissary and post exchange privileges; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. GREEN:

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution designating September 17 of each year as Constitution Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill designed to amend the Trade Agreements Act so as to grant relief to American producers who may be injured by the effect of such agreements. I also ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with a statement by me in connection therewith be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 719) to amend section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, was received, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by adding at the end of such section a new subsection, as follows:

"(e) If any trade organization or industrial, mining, or agricultural group or substantial section thereof shall complain to the President that any article or articles are being imported into the United States in substantial quantities and increasing ratio to domestic production of any like or similar competitive domestically produced articles or under such terms or conditions as to render ineffective or seriously endanger the maintenance of such domestic production or any wage or hour agreement entered into in pursuance of the laws of the United States or any State thereof, the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission as a preferred matter. If after such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, the President shall find the existence of such facts he shall direct that the article or articles concerned shall no longer be admitted to the United States at the rate of duty specified in any reciprocal trade agreement heretofore or hereafter made pursuant to the authority of this section. The sale or offer for sale in the United States of such foreign made article or articles at a wholesale price less than the domestic cost of production delivered in the same market with a reasonable profit shall be presumptive evidence that the maintenance of domestic production is seriously endangered within the meaning of this subsection."

The statement presented by Mr. BUTLER is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BUTLER

Mr. President, the proposal I am introducing today is designed to amend the Trade Agreements Act so as to grant real relief to American producers who are injured by the effect of these agreements. In my judgment, my bill is in line with the spirit of the so-called Vandenberg-Millikin proposals on this program which were adopted by the President in an Executive order issued yesterday. I see no reason why enactment of this bill would hamper the negotiations for additional trade agreements in Geneva in April.

The thought and much of the language of this bill is drawn from a New Deal piece of legislation, the NIRA. At that time, just as at present, our costs and our price level were out of line with the costs of our competitors abroad, and it was recognized that it would be impossible to maintain our own standards without some such protective legislation as this. I believe this provision was made use of several times to raise tariff rates by the National Recovery Administration in 1933 or 1934. By the same reasoning it is equally necessary today.

This proposal has been brought to the attention of Under Secretary Clayton and I have discussed it with him. In fact, until yesterday I was in hopes that it might be included in the President's Executive order.

Just last Monday Mr. Clayton indicated to me that his principal objection was the difficulty of applying the cost-of-production standard set forth in my proposal. His position on this point seems rather absurd to me in view of all our experience with tariff-making in this country. The Tariff Commission has been making practical application of cost-of-production standards in the actual setting of rates for many years. In fact, one of the principal arguments for the trade-agreements program has been the claim that administration experts could determine rates more scientifically than could the Congress. Now Mr. Clayton denies that his method of tariff-making is or can be scientific.

In my opinion, the President's order of yesterday is merely a gesture—a paper concession that will make no real difference because it will be administered by the same men who are driving us so rapidly toward free trade and who have no real interest in protecting domestic industries. My bill sets a definite standard to be used in determining the extent of injury and the need for relief. I know of no reason why it should not be generally acceptable even to the most ardent supporters of the trade-agreements program if they are sincere in their statement that "no domestic industry is to suffer serious injury from the operation of the program." In the words of the President, quoting from his order of yesterday, this bill would "make assurance doubly sure that American interests will be properly safeguarded."

LEGISLATIVE BUDGET—AMENDMENT

Mr. SALTONSTALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. MILLIKIN, the Committee on Civil Service was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 58) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act approved May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to exempt annuity payments under such act from taxation, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases, was read twice by its title, and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATUE OF LATE SENATOR BORAH, OF IDAHO

Mr. DWORSHAK submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Borah Memorial Statue Commission of Idaho is hereby authorized to place temporarily in the rotunda of the Capitol a statue of the late William E. Borah, of Idaho, and to hold ceremonies in the rotunda on said occasion; and the Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE TO SIT DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is conducting a conference today with top-flight railroad men, top-flight steel men, and top-flight car-builders of the country, involving 60 or 70 persons and dealing with the critical freight-car shortage. It is our desire to continue the conference this afternoon, these gentlemen having come from their home cities to take part in the conference. I, therefore, as chairman of the subcommittee, ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee be given the permission of the Senate to meet this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, such order is made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a list of the men who are present at the conference to which I have referred.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] striking out, in lines 6 and 7, the numerals "31.5" and "24.0" and inserting in lieu thereof, respectively, "33.0" and "25.1." On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Chair calls attention to the following order of the Senate:

Ordered, That after the hour of 12 o'clock meridian on Wednesday, February 26, 1947, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 20 minutes on the pending concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948, etc., or on any amendment, substitute, or motion relating thereto. (February 24, 1947.)

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, in considering the pending resolution I am reminded of an old story about the Shah of Persia who reigned in Persia about the fifteenth century. It was his custom, on the anniversary of his natal day, to gather his people below the palace yard and to address them from the balcony and give them good advice. On one of these occasions, as was the custom, his people gathered in the courtyard. The Shah came out on the balcony, looked them over, and said "My good people, do you know what I am about to say to you today?" With one voice they chorused back "No, Shah; no." He replied "I cannot speak to so ignorant a people," and went inside. The next day the crowd gathered again. The Shah again came out on the balcony, looked them over, and said, "My good people, do you know what I am about to say to you today?" Having had the experience of the day before, they answered as one, "Yes, oh Shah; we know." Then he said, "If you know, there is no use for me to tell you," and he walked inside. On the third day they gathered again. He again came out on the balcony and addressed the same question to the people. He said, "My good people, do you know what I am about to say to you?" A spokesman replied, "Oh, Shah, half of us know and half of us do not know." The Shah replied, "In that event, let those who know tell those who do not know," and he walked inside.

Mr. President, I feel that we in the Senate are somewhat like the crowd in the courtyard, because we have not been told upon what facts or what evidence the committee which brought forth this resolution bases its desire that the Senate approve its act. Let there be no mistake. I am for economy, and I shall endeavor to prove it by the votes I cast on specific appropriation bills; but since I have been a Member of this body I have tried not to cast an unreasoning and unintelligent vote, and so long as the people of my State see fit to keep me here, I shall not consciously do so.

Would we be casting an unreasoning and unintelligent vote, Mr. President? I call to witness the fact that the esteemed chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the very able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] in the proceedings before the joint committee, when asked how much would be cut from the military budget stated, to the point and honestly, that he did not know.

The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who spoke in favor of the $4,500,000,000 reduction, went as far as he could when he said that he was making what he called an intelligent guess. He further stated that he did not have much information upon which to predicate what he denominated an intelligent guess.

The President pro tempore of the Senate, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and my good friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], stated on this floor only a few days ago that we were engaged in a gigantic speculation. I submit that this is not a matter about which we can afford to speculate; we cannot afford to guess; we cannot afford to act on what the Senator from Colorado has termed "rough judgment." In view of the condition of world affairs, in view of the necessity for maintaining strong our defense against possible external enemies, the condition we face is not one with respect to which, in justice to ourselves or in justice to the people of the United States, we can afford to guess.

Mr. President, the District of Columbia is one of the few jurisdictions in the United States which licenses fortune tellers. The license fee is $250 a year. There are 37 licensed fortune tellers in the District of Columbia. I submit that when we cast our vote on the basis of the record—or rather the lack of record—which exists in this case, we can eminently qualify for membership in the Society of Fortune Tellers of the District of Columbia.

I announced to the Senator from Ohio that I intended, if permitted by the rules of the Senate, to vote "present" when the roll was called on the pending concurrent resolution. I have seen no facts which would change my determination: I realize that when a Senator casts his vote against the $6,000,000,000 reduction, or against the $4,500,000,000 reduction, he will be immediately criticized, not only in the press, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] stated the other day, but in this Chamber, notwithstanding the clear statement of his determination to vote for economy on measures which come before the Appropriations Committee of this body.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are working for the first year under the Reorganization Act, the only sensible thing for the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget to have done, would have been to ask for an extension of time, so as to be able to retain a staff, and interview those who are responsible for our safety, and then to have come before the Senate with a reasoned, intelligent conclusion upon which men of intelligence could predicate a sound judgment.

Mr. President, I think that concludes about everything I have to say on this matter. I have heard it said that one should never vote against an appropriation bill or against a tax reduction bill. It is going to be interesting to note what happens when the Senate gets down to work. When the roll is called we shall see. I think the people of the United States should know that the vote which is taken today means absolutely nothing and can mean nothing in face of the fact that the votes which will be cast will be cast without resort to what I call reasoned intelligence.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise to discuss very briefly the pending concurrent resolution and the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

As between the sum of $6,000,000,000 suggested in the resolution and the sum of $4,500,000,000 suggested in the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. Whether, if it should be adopted, I shall finally suport the resolution as it may then appear I cannot state at this time.

In the first place, I wish to declare my wholehearted support of the Reorganization Act. Whether it was enacted under circumstances that were conducive to the greatest degree of efficiency and foresight in determining its terms may be open to question. Whether the 15th day of February allowed sufficient time to enable the joint committee to submit an intelligent report upon the President's budget may be a matter of opinion. There is one thing that I am certain of, and that is that the 15th day of February gave the Joint Committee ample time and opportunity to present an infinitely more intelligent report than that which it has submitted to the Senate.

I wish, for the RECORD, if for no other purpose, to invite the attention of the Senate to the proceedings of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget. The joint committee was made up of members of four committees of the House and Senate, the two Appropriations Committees and the two taxing committees, the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means. Altogether there were 102 members of the joint committee. It was obvious that an attempt to deliberate upon an over-all budget by 102 members would be like undertaking to do it in a town meeting. Therefore the full committee decided to appoint a subcommittee made up of 5 members from each of the four committees referred to, constituting a subcommittee of 20.

The subcommittee held its first meeting and had before it the voluminous Budget of the President, together with a sort of break-down of that Budget prepared, I think, by the Bureau of the Budget. There was a meeting for at least an hour and a half on that Budget. Finally it was determined to call before the subcommittee the fiscal officer of the Treasury, Mr. Bartelt, and the Director of the Budget, Mr. Webb, on a following day.

The subcommittee met and heard all morning Mr. Bartelt of the Treasury, whose function it was to advise the subcommittee chiefly with respect to the prospective income or revenue of the Treasury. That was a fairly simple matter. Based upon our present national income and the present rate of taxation, and based also upon the assumption that the excise taxes which expire on the 30th of June would be extended, it was fairly easy to arrive at the conclusion that the revenue of the Government for the fiscal year 1948 would be approximately $39,100,000,000. There was a slight difference between the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and the Treasury, but not enough to make much difference. So the committee, practically by unanimous sentiment, accepted the figure $39,100,000,000 as the probable revenue of the Government for the fiscal year 1948. Of course, that depends upon the preservation of the present tax structure. The present rates of taxation may be modified or changed by action which the Congress may take between now and the fiscal year beginning July 1, or during that fiscal year. But the $39,100,000,000 figure was based upon the present situation.

When the subcommittee had arrived at that figure Mr. Bartelt, the fiscal officer of the Treasury, had performed his functions and the duties for which he was summoned before the subcommittee.

In the afternoon the subcommittee was in session and heard Mr. Webb, the Director of the Budget, explain how the budget was arrived at. He explained that the various departments submitted their estimates and requests to the Budget Director. They were there sifted by the Budget Director through a process which I have not the time to detail. After the estimates and requests had been sifted by the Budget Director and by the Budget Bureau officers, the budget was submitted to the President. The President thereafter undertook his own sifting process, and the result was that the budget was cut by a sum in excess of $5,000,000,000 below the estimates of the department heads as they were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget. A part of this reduction was made by the President himself, after the budget had reached him. Efforts were made in the subcommittee to have the Director of the Bureau of the Budget point out what were termed the soft places in the budget where cuts might be made. Obviously, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget could not do so without placing himself in controversy with the President, who has submitted the budget of $37,500,000,000.

That was all that happened on that full day of hearing before the subcommittee and through the testimony of those two witnesses. The subcommittee then adjourned, subject to call. It was not called again for a week or 10 days.

During that period, various informal meetings were held, I suppose—no one knows where; at least, I do not—and presumably they were called by the chairman of the subcommittee by personal invitation or by nodding the head or by motioning the fingers for some certain members of the subcommittee to meet with him to go over the budget. No minority member was ever given the wink or ever informed where the meeting was to be held or when it was to be held. Out of that week or 10 days of informal telephone-booth conferences which were going on from day to day, the $6,000,000,000 figure was arrived at as the amount by which the budget should be cut. When finally the subcommittee was called together for the purpose of making its recommendation to the full committee, efforts were made by various members on both sides to ascertain by what rule or by what process the figure $6,000,000,000 was arrived at as the amount by which the budget could be cut and by what process the conclusion was reached that the subcommittee should recommend to the full committee that amount as a reduction. However, no such information was given to the subcommittee. No authorized figures representing the consensus of views on the part of any group of the members of the subcommittee were given. Finally, one member pulled out of his pocket a sort of memorandum of his own, and suggested that the $6,000,000,000 cut could be arrived at by cutting the appropriations for the armed services $2,225,000,000. But so far as any vocal agreement regarding that estimate was concerned, it was not forthcoming. The same Senator also suggested that the Department of Agriculture appropriations could be cut $250,000,000, and he likewise suggested one or two other items at which he had arrived in his own mind in order to justify the total cut of $6,000,000,000. That is all the information the subcommittee had; but when the report of the subcommittee was made to the full committee, not even that information was given to the full committee. The member of the subcommittee who had reached up into the skies and pulled down figures with respect to the armed services and the Department of Agriculture was unwilling to stand by those figures when the matter came to the full committee. So I say, and I do not believe anyone can sucessfully contradict the statement, that neither the subcommittee nor the full committee had any accurate way of justifying the $6,000,000,000 amount by which it was said the budget could be cut.

Mr. President, personally, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to eliminate from the Budget every item which properly can be eliminated, so long as we can do so safely in connection with the national interest and the national defense, and the performance of our obligations to our own people, which in my judgment means the performance of any obligations in an international sense, because, as I feel very strongly, and as the distinguished Presiding Officer expressed the other day in his very able speech, we cannot be safe in our own enjoyment of our own independence and security so long as the world outside of our country is insecure and unsafe. We cannot prosper as a nation so long as the rest of the world is prostrate. We may conjure up a sort of hectic prosperity for a season; but regardless of whether we want it or whether we wish it, the world is tied together politically and economically, and we cannot long prosper as a people so long as the rest of the world is prostrate; and the rest of the world will be prostrate unless we ourselves cooperate to lift them up and aid them, in the hope that all nations may march forward together to security and prosperity.

I should like to cut the budget $10,000,000,000, if those objectives could be arrived at while making such a reduction. I am satisfied that the President of the United States himself would like to cut the budget $10,000,000,000, if the safety and security of our country could at the same time be guaranteed. Approximately a year ago, in an address which I delivered to a group of businessmen in New York City, I stated that in my judgment after we had discharged the obligations growing out of the war as a sort of hangover from the war, and were able to strike a dead level of expenses and taxes, we would be able to reduce the annual budget of our Federal Government to somewhere between $22,000,000,000 and $25,000,000,000. I was absolutely sincere in making that statement. I still believe it can be done when we have discharged these obligations; but we have not yet discharged them. Therefore, I wish to call attention to some of what I think are the irreducible items in the budget, so as to see what we have left to work on as a flexible figure within which we can reduce expenses.

We know it will cost $5,000,000,000 a year to pay the interest on the public debt. No one who has any conception of sound fiscal policy will seek to reduce that figure or repudiate the obligation of the United States Government to the people of America who have bought these bonds and hold them.

For 1948 the outlay on account of veterans will be $7,000,000,000. The test as to whether that item can or will be reduced will come when the individual appropriation bills are on the floor of the Senate and Senators are asked to vote to reduce the benefits which we already have guaranteed to our veterans. We know they are not going to be reduced. We may talk about economy here, and we may say we can reduce all the way across the board, but we know we are not going to reduce the $5,000,000,000 for paying the interest on our public debt, and we know we are not going to reduce the benefits to our veterans. They are more likely to be increased, rather than reduced. We have not yet arrived at the peak in the payment of benefits to the veterans of our wars.

It is true that some of the expenses involved in the educational program will fall off as students finish their courses and leave college, and go into private industry or private life. There will be some reduction automatically. But it is an interesting fact that whereas under the GI bill of rights 3,500,000 ex-servicemen have applied for educational benefits only a million and a half have thus far been able to be accommodated; so that as some fall out by reason of completing their courses others will come in, and it is doubtful whether that item can be materially reduced within the next fiscal year, if at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall take some time on the resolution.

The two items I have mentioned will amount to $12,000,000,000, and I think they are irreducible.

The amount of refunds which the Treasury must pay to men and companies who have paid into the Treasury more taxes than they should have paid is in excess of $2,000,000,000. That, added to the $12,000,000,000, makes $14,000,000,000, which, it seems to me, is an irreducible sum.

There are grants to States. I cannot go into all the details, but there are various grants to States to which Congress has committed itself, which do not include a single item for public works, and such grants amount to $1,043,000,000. That makes $15,000,000,000.

There are international obligations to which the Congress has committed itself, including the British loan. The Treasury has been advised that the British Government will draw down, under the terms of that contract, $1,200,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator entertain any notion that under this economy program the States will not take the billion dollars and more which has been granted to them from the Federal Treasury?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course not; they are going to be asking for more, but that is an irreducible minimum to which we are already committed; and it does not include any public works.

The total of our international commitments, already made by Congress or authorized by Congress, amounts to $3,387,000,000, which, added to the other items, makes a sum in excess of $18,000,000,000 which cannot be cut or reduced.

There are other miscellaneous irreducible items which make the aggregate $20,351,000,000.

How much does that leave of the President's budget, not of what we are considering? It leaves only $17,000,000,000 of the President's budget, out of which all expenses for the armed services and the national defense must be paid, out of which all ordinary expenses of the Government must be paid, and for all other items for which Congress will appropriate money.

If we take $6,000,000,000 away from that $17,000,000,000, as is provided for in the pending resolution, we have left only $11,000,000,000, which is the amount estimated for the item of national defense in the Presidential budget. So there would be left only $11,000,000,000 for our national defense, for the expenses of our Government, and for the discharge of every other obligation outside veterans' obligations—interest on the public debt, our international obligations, and the refunds of taxes. If any mathematician or economist can figure out for me how we can out of $11,000,000,000 take care of the armed services, provide for other obligations, and operate the Government of the United States, I should be most interested in seeing such a calculation.

So, Mr. President, I intend to vote for the $4,500,000,000 amendment, as between that and the $6,000,000,000, because I believe that when the appropriation bills have been finally enacted and the aggregate has been found, as they come in from time to time, it will be utterly impossible to reduce expenditures by $6,000,000,000, and I am not willing to hold out to the American people any false hope about what will be the ultimate result. I am not going to point to a mirage which looks like a pool of water until one approaches it, and then turns out to be dry sand. My friends from the West understand that allusion.

Mr. President, I am assuming that the $4,500,000,000 amendment will be adopted. It seems very likely that it will be. Then the question will arise as to what shall be the attitude of Senators on the resolution so amended. In my opinion, every Senator will have to exercise his own judgment in regard to that. I realize that no one desires to go on record against any possible economy which may be effectuated; but of course, as is stated in the report, the resolution does not bind the Congress, it does not bind a single committee, unless it may be regarded as imposing some moral obligation upon the committees and upon the Congress.

I should like to save $6,000,000,000, I should like to save $4,500,000,000, I should like to save $10,000,000,000. There is one part of the able speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] with which I agree, that whatever we may be able to save by reducing the President's budget should be applied to the public debt. I was amazed a day or so ago to read in the press that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] announced that it was more important to reduce taxes than to pay the public debt. Coming from the leader of a great party which has always boasted of its sound fiscal views, that sounded to me like the rankest of heresy.

Mr. President, I do not know anything that could more completely reinspire the American people, and bring about the investment of money in enterprises, than to see our national budget balanced and the public debt on its way toward liquidation.

We are making an income of 165 to 168 or 170 billion dollars, twice as much as we ever made in all the peace years of our national history, and more than we made in the hectic war days. There may be some injustices to be found in the tax laws, but I believe that the American people are not willing to hand on to future generations $260,000,000,000 of public debt. I believe the American people would like to see us begin the reduction of that debt while the national income is on such a high level. It is possible that trend may not continue without some interruption, and it has been estimated that a reduction in the national income of $10,000,000,000 would result in a reduction in the revenues to the Treasury of $3,500,000,000. If we undertake, before we know where we are going, to reduce taxes, we might conceivably find ourselves in such a position that, instead of reducing the public debt, we might have to increase it. I do not want to see that come about.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am in favor, first, of balancing the budget; and, second, I am in favor of applying not less than the amount suggested by the amendment of the Senator from California, $3,000,000,000, to the reduction of our public debt. For the time being I should prefer that all the reduction be applied to the public debt. After we have done that, if we can then reduce taxes and feel that we can retain the reductions in the years to come, I should look with sympathy upon such a proposal.

Mr. President, there should not be any politics in either the budget or the tax program. With the greatest respect for the ability and the industry of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], I am bound to call attention to the fact that there is more economic politics in this proposal than there is political economy.

So, Mr. President, on the ground that it is the best we can do in the interest of a sound fiscal policy, I shall support the $4,500,000,000 amendment as against the $6,000,000,000 proposal, although I have very grave doubt whether in the final analysis we can reduce the budget by as much as $4,500,000,000. Likewise I shall support the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] requiring that out of whatever may be saved not less than the amount suggested by the amendment shall be applied to the public debt. I think we can defend such action before the American people; we can defend it before industry and labor, and before all classes of our people. We can defend it better than we can defend a temporary, improvident provision that before we set our financial house in order we shall first reduce a few taxes, in the hope that thereby a few votes may be garnered in some election, either senatorial or presidential.

As to the final adoption of the resolution, assuming that four and one-half billion dollar reduction shall be agreed to, and assuming also that the requirement for minimum application to the public debt shall be adopted, I am sure that no political equation will enter into the final vote on the resolution itself. Every Senator will exercise his own judgment, as he would, anyway, upon such a matter. I assume the resolution in that form will be agreed to by the Senate, and that then it will be up to the conferees of the House and Senate to agree on some figure.

I regret that it has already been announced on the other side of the Capitol that no matter what we may do with it there will be no receding on their part from the $6,000,000,000, which they plucked out of the sky, without any information upon which to do the plucking.

I assume that the Chair indicates that my time is up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator still has 5 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not use it; I turn it back to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thanks the Senator for his generosity; it is unique.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, supplemental to my previous remarks, I desire to make a brief statement.

In recent days the statement has repeatedly been made that it is proposed, and already decided, to reduce the appropriations for national defense to a point that would dangerously cripple, if not destroy, our whole defense structure. Statements such as a 10-percent cut would "immoblize" the entire Navy and lay up all of our fleet in the harbors; that any reduction whatever in the Army appropriations will destroy the effectiveness of this arm of our defense, have been broadcast over the radio, and in the Congress, and through the press, and yet the effort is transparent: to invest all military expenditures with a "halo" of untouchability; that Congress must not dare to eliminate the waste and extravagance existing in nearly every operation, but must accept without question the estimates of national defense cost as submitted by the military forces and approved by the President.

As a member of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, I emphatically deny that any decision has been made which includes a reduction in the appropriations to the armed services which would cripple national defense. Senator BRIDGES, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who has been a staunch advocate of preparedness all through his career, has said time and time again that he does not favor a reduction in the defense appropriations to the extent of impairing the national defense program. I have earnestly supported national military preparedness. No decision has been made by the Joint Budget Committee or the Appropriations Committees, and the figure of reduction for the Army and Navy so often quoted is speculation on the part of those who persist in using it to make it appear that a decision has already been made by the Appropriations Committees of Congress to make such a crippling cut.

It is idle for anyone to say that there cannot be substantial economies effected in the Army and Navy expenditures. We have emerged from the most wasteful and destructive war in all history. It is true, I think, beyond a question of doubt, that many of the extravagances of war still persist in the peacetime operation of our Army and Navy. In the third year of peace it is time to eliminate the waste of war and place our national-defense expenditures on the most efficient possible peace basis.

As one who has been a long and steadfast advocate of preparedness, I think the best service that can be rendered the cause of national defense is to perform it with economy and efficiency so as to give confidence to the people of America that their money is not being wasted.

Roughly, the President's budget provides for total expenditures in the fiscal year 1948, which begins July 1, 1947, for the Army and Navy as follows for all purposes:

	Billions
National defense for the Army	$6.9
Civil expenditures for the Army	1.3
National defense for the Navy	4.5
Total	12.7

This is for expenditure in the next fiscal year.

This money will come from a system of taxation, the most burdensome and onerous under which America has ever lived.

The national-defense budget in peacetime 1948 is nearly one-half the total cost of World War I and is 11 times the national-defense cost in the year preceding Pearl Harbor.

Unless the people of America have the assurance that this great cost throughout the years to come is both efficiently and wisely expended, I predict that the day will come when the American people may demand reductions in the national defense that will, in real fact, seriously cripple its operations. We must look at national defense as a long-range program. It is important now, but it may be more important in the years to come. It must be so conducted as to be within the ability of the people to pay, and with the utmost economy.

To the Army and Navy officials, and to those who believe the military estimates are sacrosanct, I call attention to one item of expenditure wherein I am convinced the opportunity exists for a great saving. In 1939, the Army and Navy employed 222,136 civilian employees, including industrial workers. On January 1, 1947, the Army and Navy had 1,006,577 civilian employees for all activities including industrial workers. In other words, there were about 2 civilian employed for every 3 soldiers. In World War II there were 2 civilian employees for every 15 soldiers. The cost of this civilian personnel is about $3,000,000,000 annually, or 25 percent of the entire national-defense expenditures for 1948. I am convinced that the Army and Navy officials have not explored all of the possibilities for economy in reducing this $3,000,000,000 item for civilian personnel. It is, of course, true that thousands of the military personnel likewise perform clerical duties.

Again I call attention to the fact that the over-all cost per man around the world during the war was $6,960, while in the budget the average cost per man in 1948 will be $6,790, which means that the Army and Navy propose to expend as an over-all average only $170 less per fighting man in peace than in combat. These figures include all expenditures made by the armed forces during the war as compared with those estimated for 1948—expenditures for ships, planes, ammunition and everything else that was consumed in combat. This item certainly needs a clear explanation.

I merely cite these matters to show that the Army and Navy should not be untouchable but should be required to give adequate national defense on a basis of the most economical and efficient management possible.

Economic security and national defense must go hand in hand. Without the capacity to finance national defense we cannot have it. I favor the $6,000,000,000 cut in spending in order to protect our future solvency.

BUDGET BALANCING AND TAX REDUCTION

Mr. President, after 17 years of deficit spending, we must put first things first. The first thing is to restore the confidence of the people in the future solvency of our Government by balancing the budget on such a sound basis that it will remain in balance.

As of this date, the budget of the Federal Government is still in the red and will remain so until July 1, 1947, with an estimated deficit of $2,000,000,000 in this fiscal year. Under the President's budget recommendations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, if adopted, a continued deficit is very likely, as only a very minor margin is provided between outgo and income, so that a recession of only 2 percent in the national income would result in another unbalanced budget for the next fiscal year.

The hardest task in reducing expenditures is yet before us. The adoption of an over-all ceiling does not reduce appropriation bills. This can only be done by action taken by both branches of Congress in appropriating amounts for specific purposes. There the real fight will come, and it will be a bitter one. Already the various bureaus and agencies of the Government have begun a campaign of propaganda in the effort to prove that any reduction in the President's budget will be destructive. We will meet the opposition of highly organized and powerful minorities who are now beneficiaries of public spending. The Federal bureaus will be active in opposition to any effort to reduce their power, funds, personnel; and many of these bureaus will not hesitate, as they have done in the past, to use the radio, mails, and other means to disseminate propaganda at public expense in opposing any retrenchment move that affects them.

America has a great responsibility in maintaining here a solvent government, as any impairment in the solvency of the United States Government may mean the financial collapse of the currency of the governments of nearly every other country, and a world economic catastrophe will follow.

I favor tax reduction at as early a date as is wise; but as important as tax reduction is, a balanced budget on a sound basis is more so. We should provide, too, for a reasonable annual sum to pay on the Federal debt. I, therefore, will vote for the Knowland amendment, providing for the payment of not less than $3,000,000,000 annually on our public debt. The payment in future years should be increased, as, at this rate, it will take more than 80 years to discharge this indebtedness.

The time to pay a debt is when you enjoy prosperity. Today we have a prosperity in America, as evidenced by our national income, such as we have never experienced before. We should take advantage of this era of prosperity, so long as it lasts, to reduce our indebtedness, because we know when a recession of this prosperity comes the demands on the Federal Government will increase, and the difficulty in paying off the public debt will become much greater than now.

Naturally our financial stability is weakened by a Federal indebtedness of $260,000,000,000. If America is forced to fight another war before this debt is greatly reduced, then we will accumulate such a debt as to destroy our Government of free, private enterprise. Any tax reduction made should be made effective only when we have assurance that this tax reduction is permanent. Should we, by miscalculation or hasty action, prematurely reduce taxes and then be forced to reinstate them in order to obtain a balanced budget, the effect would be most injurious to our economy. If appropriations are reduced by Congress and rigid economy practiced in our affairs of Government, I believe that tax reduction can safely be made effective on January 1, 1948. It is most unwise, I think, to make tax reduction retroactive to January 1, of this year. That would result in doubling the deficit for this fiscal expenditure year by adding $2,000,000,000 to it.

Furthermore, to make tax reduction effective July 1, in the middle of the tax year, would confuse the taxpayers by requiring returns for the calendar year at two different rates of taxation.

I have already pointed out in the Senate, Mr. President, the unstable condition of our tax revenue. With the reenactment of the excise taxes, the tax revenue is estimated in the next fiscal year to be $38,800,000,000. This, however, is merely an estimate depending upon the continuance of a high inflationary level of national income. This estimate is actually based on an anticipated national income in the next fiscal year, which begins on July 1, 1947, of $167,000,000,000. This is higher than the national income estimate for the current fiscal year. As our existing tax system relies heavily upon income taxes, if our national income goes down, the decline is immediately reflected in the Federal tax revenue. Tax experts, both of the Treasury and of the Joint Taxation Committee, agree that should the estimated national income be reduced by as much as 5 percent, there would be a loss in the Federal-tax revenue under the existing tax system of approximately $4,000,000,000, thus reducing the estimated revenue of the Federal Government to thirty-four billion five hundred million in the next fiscal year. Again, if the national income should fall to $150,000,000,000, a reduction of about 10 percent, the total tax revenue would be $32,000,000,000 instead of thirty-eight billion eight hundred million. It is easily possible for the national income to fall, within the next fiscal year, as much as 10 percent, or more, and in such case there would be nothing left for tax reduction even though the Congress reduced the President's budget by six billion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement of the total national income for the years 1929 to 1946, inclusive, with the estimate for the year 1947.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total national income, including compensation of employees, net income of incorporated business, net income of proprietors (including agriculture), interest, net rents, and royalties

1932	39.9
1933	42.3
1934	49.4
1935	55.7
1936	64.9
1937	71.5
1939	70.8
1941	96.8
1942	122.2
1943	149.2
1944	160.6
1945	160.9
1947 (estimate)	167.0

Under our present system and existing rates, total receipts of the Federal Government at various levels of national income would be as follows:

National income (billions):	Receipts (billions)
$80	$14.0
$90	16.5
$100	19.0
$110	21.5
$120	23.5
$130	26.5
$140	29.0
$160	34.5

I then give the expenditures since 1930, including the President's budget for 1948:

Expenditures of the Federal Government 1930–48

1931	4,091,598,000
1932	4,947,777,000
1933	4,325,150,000
1934	6,370,947,000
1935	7,583,434,000
1936	9,068,886,000
1937	8,281,380,000

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it is plainly the course of prudent management first to reduce appropriations and then await some trend in the national income during the present calendar year before tax reduction is actually made effective. We must avoid an unbalanced budget or the necessity of reimposing taxes that have been removed or reduced.

While I know the political attractiveness of reducing taxes, yet those who favor a tax reduction which may be premature should take cognizance of the dangers involved and not bring about a situation whereby the taxes taken off must be put back. Business and the people generally will be encouraged by a balanced budget beginning July 1, 1947, and with justified hopes for a tax reduction effective January 1, 1948, I am confident that business activity will be stimulated.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement prepared by me in regard to War Department expenditures and other budget confusion.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

WAR DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES AND OTHER BUDGET CONFUSION

During the debate on the so-called legislative expenditure budget there has been much discussion and some confusion, both in and out of Congress, about the estimated appropriations, obligations, and expenditures, and particularly about those for national defense.

This confusion appears to have developed from:

1. Loose or interchangeable use of the terms appropriations, obligations, and expenditures.

2. The Legislative Reorganization Act requirement for a legislative budget in terms of expenditure, whereas traditionally the budget has been enacted in terms of appropriations and obligations and executed on the same basis.

3. The use of a dual presentation of the budget by the President, who in his budget message to Congress discussed it in terms of expenditures and appropriations by functional categories which cut through departments and agencies, such as National Defense, etc., whereas budget items are generally set up on a departmental basis.

With these sources of confusion in view, it should be kept in mind that:

When we speak of appropriations we are talking about the sums provided by Congress for specified purposes against which, first, obligations and, ultimately, actual expenditures may be made.

When we speak of obligations we are talking about the commitments of funds from appropriations for actual payment at a time when the specified services have been performed, the specified goods have been received, etc.

When we speak of expenditures we mean the actual cash withdrawal from the Treasury against the appropriation account in accordance with the obligation which was established.

Thus it follows that:

Congress, between now and June, will enact appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 beginning next July 1, and from that time obligations may be made against the appropriations throughout the year; but it is anticipated that some of the goods and services for which obligations against 1948 appropriations are made will not be delivered or performed until sometime during the subsequent fiscal year or later. Since payment will not be made in advance of delivery or performance the actual expenditures for these items will not be made until fiscal year 1949, or later.

By the same token we shall make actual expenditures in fiscal year 1948 pursuant to obligations set up against 1947 appropriations and those made for prior years.

As to the second source of confusion:

Those in Congress now who drafted the Legislative Reorganization Act, who considered it in committees and those who voted on it, know that the objective of section 138 was to deter, if not avoid, deficit spending.

Therefore, whatever legislative budget expenditure ceiling is determined here now was expected to be in terms of cash withdrawals from the Treasury during the fiscal year, just as receipts estimates to which the expenditure ceiling is pegged were expected to be in terms of cash receipts during the fiscal year.

Morally, at least, the inescapable effect of the expenditure ceiling fixed in the pending resolution will be the establishment of a control on expenditures allowable in the fiscal year 1948 against appropriations enacted in this and prior sessions.

If Congress appropriation is under expenditure controls which are necessary to keep within its legislative budget expenditure ceiling, it follows, of course, that execution of the appropratlons by the executive branch also must be under expenditure control.

However, I am advised semiofficially that at least in some important places in the executive branch there is an inclination and a preference to interpret the legislative budget expenditure ceiling in terms of obligations against which expenditures may or may not be made during the fiscal year 1948. And, I am advised further—semiofficially—that there is no executive accounting machinery for control of actual expenditures.

This situation is mentioned in some detail because further discussion is to be expected, and if it is not thoroughly understood the whole matter will become even more confusing.

As to the third source of confusion:

It should be kept clearly in mind that the combined expenditures in 1948 as estimated for the War Department as a whole and those for the Navy Department as a whole are neither identical nor synonymous with the estimated total for national defense as described and discussed by the President in his budget message to Congress.

The combined expenditure for all War and Navy Department purposes in 1948 total $12,765,328,654.

The President, in his functional or categorical national defense budget, estimated expenditures for this purpose by War Department, Navy Department, along with other departments and agencies, would total $11,256,000,000.

The distinction to be made, of course, lies in the fact that the President's categorical national defense estimate cuts across departmental budgets, and in the further fact that not all of the expenditures from the War and Navy Department budgets fall within the President's definition of national defense expenditures.

For instance, the item of $645,000,000 for government and relief in occupied areas is set up in the War Department's civil function budget, but it is not included in the President's national defense estimate. None of the War Department's public-works programs in its civil function budget are included in the President's national defense estimate, and neither are the Panama Canal estimates. Similar items in the Navy Department budget are omitted from the President's national defense estimate.

The total estimated expenditures by the War Department for all purposes during fiscal year 1948, from all appropriations made now and in prior years, amounts to $8,254,658,654.

The total estimated expenditures by the Navy Department during the fiscal year 1948, from all appropriations made now and in prior years, for all purposes amounts to $4,510,670,000.

Total, $12,765,328,654.

The War Department over-all expenditures for all purposes include $6,700,403,846 for military activities; $645,000,000 for government and relief in occupied areas. This item is carried under War Department Civil Functions. The President did not set it up in his National Defense Budget, but he did carry it in his budget for the International Affairs and Finance category of expenditures; $24,000,000 for cemeterial expenses. This figure is carried under War Department Civil Functions and was not included in the President's National Defense Budget. He carried it in his categorical budget for general government; $689,400,000 for War Department public works under the Corps of Engineers, including rivers and harbors and flood control projects, etc. This item is carried under War Department Civil Function and was not carried in the President's National Defense Budgets. He carried the items in other categorical budgets; $1,610,000 for the Signal Corps Alaska Communications System. This item is carried in the War Department Civil Function budget, but it was omitted from the President's national defense estimate. He carried it under another category; $517,500 for soldiers homes. This item is carried under War Department Civil Functions. The President did not list it in his national defense estimate but carried it under another category; $25,526,338 for Panama Canal. This iter is carried under it own heading in the War Department budget. The President did not include it in his National Defense Budget, but listed it in another category; $168,000,000 in supplemental items to be requested, but not itemized. Of this amount $36,000,000 would be for additional cemeterial expenses, $58,000,000 for military post construction, and $74,000,000 for Engineer Service military activity.

Of the total Navy item aggregating $4,510,670,000, the President included $4,423,000,000 in his national defense category. The difference is almost entirely in Navy public works items.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia a question, in view of the very fine speech he has just made, and for which I commend him. He always presents a good case in connection with such matters as the one under consideration.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to ask the Senator if he is aware of the fact that in the occupied countries, especially in Germany, the Army has taken off the pay roll of the Army men who were receiving $300 a month and blanketed them into civilian service at a pay of $540 a month apiece for doing exactly the same work as they did while they were in the Army and living on exactly the same plane?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I am not aware of that. I have not made any investigation of that particular activity.

Mr. LANGER. I might say to the distinguished Senator that the committee of which I am chairman has developed that fact quite fully, and there is not the least doubt about that being done.

Mr. BYRD. I hope the Senator will go very fully into that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Overton
Bricker	Holland	Pepper

Fulbright	Maybank	White
George	Millikin	Wiley
Green	Moore	Williams
Gurney	Morse	Wilson
Hatch	Murray

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, let me say at the outset that I shall support a $6,000,000,000 reduction in the President's budget, simply because it is the largest reduction I have the opportunity to support. It should be less for the first peacetime budget.

I shall support the bill introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], which I had discussed with him in detail prior to its introduction, proposing an independent audit of all the Government bureaus, boards, and commissions for the last 14-year period.

As an example of some of the reductions that might be made, it will be noted, by comparing the 1939 budget and the 1948 budget, that in 1939 the Department of Commerce expended less than $45,000,000, and that in 1948 it proposes to expend more than $199,000,000, which does not include an item which will come before us later, for the completion of national airports. No doubt that is a very laudable objective, and its fulfillment will further increase the budget. So in the case of one department, there is an increase, roughly, of $155,000,000 from the 1939 peacetime budget.

While I am a freshman in this body, having been here less than 2 months, I venture to suggest large reductions can be made in the appropriations for the Department of Commerce, and similar reductions, though, perhaps, not proportionate, can be made in the appropriations for every other Government department.

I am not proposing that the Department of Commerce go back to a budget of $44,000,000, but I am proposing that we get our feet on the ground and arrive at a reasonable peacetime budget. It is my present opinion, that such a reduction as is proposed can be made without impairing or injuring in any way the proper support of the armed services and efficient peacetime budget for the operation of the United States Government.

Our Appropriations Committee is confronted with an almost superhuman job in arriving at a proper understanding of the responsibilities and necessities of our Government. I suggest giving them unlimited facilities and assistance; provide them the independent audit suggested by the Robertson bill, and then make an effort to arrive at an adequate and efficient peacetime budget for the operation of our governmental machinery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to do more than register my position on the question which is before the Senate.

Having served as a member of the general committee and also as a member of the subcommittee which reported the concurrent resolution, I should like to state the reasons upon which I base my own conclusions.

I rise in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], although I am not certain that a total reduction of $4,500,000,000 in the budget can be made. I should as enthusiastically support a larger cut in the budget if I believed it were possible to make such a cut.

I am aware, Mr. President, that the acid test will come not on this vote, but on every vote that is taken in the House or the Senate on every item in the various appropriation bills. Nevertheless, I am convinced that we can make some cuts in the budget, and I am hopeful, at least, that we can cut the budget by four and one-half billion dollars, as has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. I base my figures upon the following facts:

The President's budget is estimated at $37,569,000,000, in round figures. That budget, however, contains in round numbers only about $32,000,000,000 of new money. The balance, of course, represents unexpended balances from appropriations of prior years. It is very difficult to study the budget, because the budget of this Government is not like the ordinary budget of income and expenditure that one would expect to find and would find in almost every well-regulated business organization.

I think the personnel reductions should be first considered, and I commence with that thought in mind. In 1941, when we were already moving into war, the Government had on its pay rolls approximately 1,600,000 employees of various kinds. The President's budget is based upon an average Federal personnel of 2,100,000. Actually, as of today there are on the Federal pay rolls nearly 2,300,000 employees. Nevertheless the average personnel budget as estimated by the President in his annual budget message totals 2,100,000. I think this figure can be cut by 500,000. Cutting it by 500,000 would make it arrive at approximately the level of Federal personnel in 1941. To assert that the Federal personnel cannot be reduced to the 1941 level seems to me to be ridiculous.

The average salary of Federal employees is approximately $2,500, but the total cost of the 500,000 employees which I estimate may be the reduction below the President's estimate would result in a saving of possibly a billion and one-half dollars, because to the amounts for salaries must be added mileage, traveling expense, and the incidental expenses which go with each employee.

The expenditures for the armed services have been discussed at great length, Mr. President. The expenditures for the armed services, outside and exclusive of the item for atomic energy, total more than $11,000,000,000. My own study of the budget, as imperfect as it has been, convinces me that in this estimate for the armed services are carried very many items, such as cost of utilities, rentals, contractual services, and so forth, which will justify a reduction of $1,000,000,000 in this whole item. I do not think a reduction of $1,000,000,000 in an appropriation of more than $11,000,000 000 is an unreasonable reduction to make. I am confident that if the question were put squarely to Secretary Forrestal and if he were allowed to make his reductions, he would be able to save his proportionate part of a $1,000,000,000 cut in the expenditures for the armed services. I have equal confidence in Secretary Patterson in that respect, if he were called upon to discharge the same duty.

Mr. President, in looking through the budget, we find that there are various items for public works. Some of them are carried under items for the War Department; some are carried under appropriations for the Interior Department; some are carried under items for the Veterans' Administration; and some are carried under various other heads. As nearly as I have been able to estimate, these public-works expenditures, as set forth in the budget, will total between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000. But taking the lower figure, namely, $2,000,000,000, I have not the slightest doubt that that item can be cut by $500,000,000, or one-half a billion dollars.

We come, then, to a consideration of the so-called irreducible items contained in the Budget. We have the irreducible item for debt service, which is carried in the budget at $5,000,000,000, although it is not quite $5,000,000,000, and will not run quite that high. The cost of administering it, plus the cost of the debt service itself, may run to approximately $5,000,000,000.

We have tax refunds, which of course must be made. We have veterans' benefits which must be paid; and the veterans' benefits, the debt interest, and the tax refunds will total approximately $14,000,000,000. These are relatively irreducible items. There are also certain commitments which have been made to the States, and they, too, may be regarded as irreducible items. There are approximately $1,500,000,000 worth of them.

Then we have the foreign commitments, which in my judgment are irreducible items. Considering the condition of world affairs at the present moment, it may well be that this Congress will have to increase by more than twice the amount which is carried in the President's budget the proposed expenditures for rehabilitation and for support of peoples in other lands.

I have already discussed the more than $11,000,000,000 worth of defense items. When the $10,000,000,000 is added, we arrive at a point where we have approximately $17,000,000,000 left. That $17,000,000,000 is made up of an estimated $1,500,000,000 of new appropriations recommended by the President; it represents all sorts of programs, as well as by the operation of the General Government itself. I think it entirely reasonable that in the third year after the war, this general item of $16,000,000,000 or $17,000,000,000 might be cut by 10 percent, but I have not based my figures upon that. I have, rather, reached the conclusion that the total reductions which could be made in these reducible items would amount to $1,000,000,000.

So, Mr. President, my own thought leads me to the conclusion that we can reduce the President's budget by $4,000,000,000. It is possible that a further reduction can be made by means of recapture from the Federal corporations of approximately $500,000,000, although with respect to that item I would not be in favor of any recapture from the Export-Import Bank, because in my judgment the Export-Import Bank will be called upon to extend to certain foreign countries, during the present year, even larger credits than those which have been extended.

But I assume that we can cut some $500,000,000 from the items for the Federal corporations. One billion and thirty million dollars of new money is carried in the budget for these Federal corporations, besides $890,000 which might be likened unto a cash balance already in hand. I do not pretend to understand the budget entirely, but that is my best interpretation of it. So out of this $1,030,000,000 of new money which the Federal corporations will have a right to call upon the Treasury for during the next fiscal year, and out of the amounts which they already have on hand, and without reducing the amount available to the Export-Import Bank, it is quite likely that we can reduce this budget by another $500,000,000—or a total reduction of $4,500,000,000, as has been suggested by the Senator from Colorado in his amendment now pending before the Senate.

Mr. President, just a word about the income, because whether we cut the budget by $4,500,000,000 or whether we cut it by $6,000,000,000, if we were able to do so, it does not follow at all that we are going to have the surplus which ordinarily is accepted as the surplus remaining after these indicated cuts have been made. The income of the Federal Government is estimated—and the estimate is correct, based upon present conditions—at approximately $39,100,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. Of course, we have not yet arrived at the beginning of the fiscal year 1948, but the present, current earnings of corporations form the basis of the corporation tax which will be paid into the Treasury in 1948. That is not true of the income tax, it is not true of the excise taxes, it is not true of the customs duties, it is not true of any current income such as may arise from the sale of surplus war property, and the like.

So that only the one significant item we can safely count upon now as the basis of an estimated income of $39,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948 is the present current earnings of corporations. Those earnings are running very high, and in the case of some of the corporations they are running entirely too high, in my judgment. They convince a careful student of affairs that some businesses in the United States are yet perfectly willing to take all the traffic will bear; and that is a very short-sighted policy, from the standpoint of American business interest.

The only safe item on which this estimate is based is the current income of corporations, which, of course, will be accounted for after and during the fiscal year 1948.

I am not a pessimist, and I do not wish to strike a note of pessimism, but how anyone, looking at the economic picture of the world today, can think that the whole of fiscal year 1948 is certain to be a rosy year in our affairs, is wholly beyond me.

Chinese currency is gone, even if that currency system had application only in its cities, in its commercial centers. Chinese purchasing power is virtually vanishing. I think everyone knows the real strength of the French franc, and I am sure everyone knows that the whole German economy in central Europe is stagnant, doing nothing.

I am sure that some of my colleagues know very well that even before we opened the debate on the British loan—and I am sure the distinguished President pro tempore, now presiding, will bear me out in this—I had the strong view that the British loan would not enable the British government to maintain the pound sterling at its present value. I am merely recounting these facts because, as responsible representatives of the American people, I think we must look at the facts as they are.

Mr. President, the pound sterling today stands at substantially the same level at which it stood eight years ago, before the most devastating war in all history. Already there are evidences of the dissolution of the old British Empire. I do not say that Britain will disappear; I do not think so. I do not think her contributions to law and to political organization, certainly to art and science in the field of government, as well as in general fields, will disappear. In the travail through which she is now passing she may be making the greatest contribution to the democracy of the world the British people have ever given to the peoples of the earth. Be that as it may, it would not seem conceivable that the British pound sterling could remain where it was eight years ago, in the face of everything that is happening around the globe.

If there is any marked decline in the pound sterling it is not conceivable that Canadian currency can escape its influence, because Canada is tied intimately with the British. The ties are too strong to permit any student of affairs to think for a moment that any market decline in the pound sterling can fail to make a very definite impact upon our neighbor to the north of us, yet a young country, yet compelled to export because she has not any great reserves of capital.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall take a few minutes more on the resolution, if the Chair will indulge me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. So, Mr. President, when we look at the picture as it is and know that we are talking about a fiscal year which will not commence until July 1 next, and which will run for a full 12 months, we cannot be overoptimistic about a Federal income of $39,000,000,000.

I know that the budget must be reduced, and it is all right to reduce the budget, and I am assuming it is going to be reduced by $4,000,000,000, and if possible by $6,000,000,000. Certainly I shall do all I can to reduce it as far as it can be reduced, but even if it is reduced, we may not have any very comfortable surplus to play with after the account of the next fiscal year has been cast up.

Then we come to the question of what we are to do with the surplus, assuming we have one. It seems to me the only sensible thing to do with the surplus is to apply it to the national debt. I do not know that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from California is in exactly the right words, because it requires an application of $3,000,000,000, and we may not have three billions to apply. But I assume, of course, that he means $3,000,000,000, or a proportionate part if there is not a surplus of $3,000,000,000.

Then what about tax reduction? I know very well the necessity of tax reduction. If the American people gave a mandate to anybody in government I consider that mandate was directed to me just the same as it was to any Republican Senator on the other side of the aisle, because if the American people have spoken, it is the duty of the representatives of the American people in this body to recognize their mandate.

I know the necessity of reducing taxes, because at best there is a Federal tax estimated for the next fiscal year of $39,100,000,000. There are State, county, and local taxes amounting to more than $10,000,000,000. There is close to $50,000,000,000 to come out of the pockets of the American taxpayers.

In the long run we will have great difficulty in holding our place as a producing and selling country with that enormous tax burden resting upon us. Unfortunately, that is not the only cost item in our economy which has a lack of flexibility at the moment, because under our laws, regulations, and rules of wages—and I have always favored high wages, so far as that goes—have little flexibility. The total amount paid for wages and the total amount paid for taxes, which are the two great items of cost in the production of everything that we must offer to the outside world, have very little flexibility left in them.

When we look at the whole picture, Mr. President, I have the strongest doubt that we shall have any large surplus, when every Member of this body who desires economy shall have voted for every cut in every appropriation bill that can be made.

At any rate, the only sensible thing is to apply whatever surplus we have to debt reduction, and to forget tax reduction effective before January 1, 1948. I know very well that candidates who have run on a tax-reduction program effective at once, and for 1947, have an obligation which they must meet if it is possible to do so; but I do not believe it will be possible to proceed intelligently and safely with any tax reduction effective for 1947. If we make the cuts we ought to make in this present budget—and by that I mean in all the appropriations that come before us—we may be able to have some tax reduction commencing in 1948.

I, myself, am not worried about how the tax reduction is to be made, because I do not see any sizable surplus out of which a tax reduction is possible. If I am at all right in anticipating what may happen in our own country and also in the world, for we cannot escape entirely the economic influences that exist beyond our own borders, I do not see that we shall have a surplus justifying more than a reasonable application to our national debt. I wish that we could have it. I certainly hope that we can effect great economies. I hope that when the appropriation bills are finally totaled we shall have a surplus that will justify some slight tax reduction; but it does not seem to me to be reasonable to expect it. It may be disappointing to people who are expecting a tax reduction in 1947, but I do not believe it will be possible to make it and at the same time meet all of our other obligations.

I have said very frankly the basis on which I think we can make a reduction in the budget of four and one-half billion dollars. I have said very frankly that I think it involves a cut of approximately $1,000,000,000 for the armed services and for all the related services and expenditures. I think we ought not to hesitate to make it, because I believe that America, as a strong economic force, is far more powerful in the councils of the world than she can be by mere reliance upon her armed forces.

Indeed, Mr. President, I have never had a great deal of enthusiasm for the kind of philosophy which says we must have back of the Secretary of State, who is the spokesman for the United States, a tremendous armed force. If we do not have a great moral power, coupled with the great strength of our economic system, that gives us a voice in world affairs, then I do not think we are going to advance the cause very much by a great military show. I do not want to reduce the Army and the Navy or any branch of the armed services beyond the necessary strength that should be maintained at this time—and that is a very great strength—but it seems to me that in excess of $10,000,000,000 expended in that field certainly ought to provide the necessary military force and power.

Ah, Mr. President, when today one looks at the whole of Europe and sees what is going on in the British Empire, and then lifts his eyes to China; when one takes a serious look at the affairs of this earth as they are, our chance will be to disregard niggardly and quibbling policies regarding our obligations to the poor and the starving peoples of the earth. Our great power, and the great strength of our voice in international affairs will come from the sheer moral force and the convictions of the American people, backed by a sound economy that will enable us to do our part in the saving of the world at this time. So, for my part, whatever surplus we have, by my vote and to the extent that my vote will have the slightest bearing on it, it will go into reduction of the debt, and I shall dismiss now any thought of tax reduction in individual income rates, prior to January 1, 1948. That will be in the middle of the year 1948, but it will not be in the early part, or prior to the beginning of that year.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I expected to, but, having served on the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, I felt that I should say frankly why I think a cut can be made of at least $4,500,000,000, and why I shall vote for that motion.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I do not want to hold up action on this matter. What I shall say now is not addressed to any particular amendment but to the concurrent resolution and all the amendments to it. I feel it my duty to ask consideration by this body of certain factors that have been only partially cleared up.

As every Member of the Senate knows, our Government, through conditions beyond our control, in the past few years has been called upon to assume duties and responsibilities which require the outlay of cash as well as the use of personnel. We were party to a war which we did not seek, and which has created economic and social chaos in the world. In self-protection we must assist in reducing this chaotic condition abroad, else it will spread to our own borders.

As a result of the war, we agreed to bear a great share of the expense of the economic as well as the personal service burden of reducing chaos abroad.

If we cannot help the people abroad to get away from fear and starvation, eventually we are going to reap the whirlwind that brought about that condition. We cannot maintain an island of order and prosperity in a world of chaos. Thus, if we would go through with the program, we must be slow and careful in trimming our budgetary requirements.

There is one danger to the lump-sum idea of fixing the size of the budget, in that having adopted a resolution reducing expenditures there comes immediate pressure also to reduce income; and then, if it should become necessary at a later date—and after not a very much later date—to expand again to take care of the problems involved, we shall have reduced the amount of cloth that we have to cut, and we shall not be able to take care of the new situation.

At the present time, Mr. President, according to the Civil Service Commission, there are approximately 296,000 Federal civilian employees outside the continental United States. This figure includes employees in the Territories, possessions, and foreign countries.

I have cited this example, Mr. President, to show that it would be a very unwise policy to start cutting at random. We cannot merely say, "We should cut from the budget this amount, and we should dismiss this number of employees who are working abroad on foreign problems or are working in Territorial possessions of the United States." We cannot make a blanket cut in the budget.

Civil-service figures also show that we have approximately 2,000,000 civil-service employees within the continental limits of the United States.

The War and Navy Departments, the Veterans' Administration, and the Post Office account for all but slightly more than half a million Federal employees. So if Congress should take the position that a million employees should be separated from the Federal pay roll, it would also have to decide how much to curtail the four vital services which account for three-fourths of the total number of Federal employees within the continental limits of the United States. In other words, all the other agencies have less than one-half million employees, and, of course, it is impossible to make a million cut from such a number. So if we are to drop from the Federal pay roll a million or three-quarters of a million employees, the majority will have to come from the War and Navy Departments, the Veterans' Administration, and the Post Office Department.

Mr. President, I desire it to be distinctly understood that I am very much in favor of reducing the budget, and the purpose of my remarks today is to show how the budget should be reduced. I should like to refer to a little of the background. We, as a Congress, created a Budget Director and we have up until the present time thrust upon him the job of producing a workable budget. Now suddenly we decide we are going to become the budget directors. Before taking such action, however, we should have set up within Congress an organization to prepare a budget, so that we could ourselves upset the figures prepared by the Budget Director who was created by Congress, or shall we say that the agency which he heads is a congressional agency, although it comes within the executive department?

Aside from our responsibilities in connection with world economic affairs and our own national defense program, our Nation also has assumed and is faced with vast responsibilities of a so-called home-front nature. Many individuals for various reasons, are now questioning the wisdom of the Government assuming these responsibilities. We hear such questioning every day.

I do not want to be accused of being political in my remarks or in taking a defensive attitude, and for that reason I shall quote at this point from an article which appeared in the February 17 issue of Newsweek magazine. On page 70 there is an article entitled "Policy: A Businessman's Credo for Business."

The article states:

William A. Irwin, a straight-talking Scotsman who has been educational director and chief economist of the American Bankers Association since 1937, created a sensation in banking circles last week. At the twenty-eighth midwinter conference of bank trust officers at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York he challenged the brains of business to solve some fundamental problems.

He began quietly enough:

"Americans still believe in individual initiative, in private property, in the accumulation of wealth, and in the principle of inheritance. Even American workingmen believe in them. Ask the first man who is wearing a union button: 'Would you like some day to be your own boss?' That means the American system can be preserved. Furthermore it means that it must be worth preserving to have such an appeal. Yet it can be preserved only if those who wish to see it preserved will ask themselves the question: 'Why is it being curtailed?'"

Irwin then gave his answers:

"Because the system has within it weaknesses that ought to be eradicated. It has failed on its own initiative to try to find the remedies for the crushing impact of business depressions. That it has left to the economists and the bureaucrats."

Mr. Irwin is speaking of business throughout these remarks. He continues:

"It has failed to find the remedy for unemployment or to take care of those thrown idle through no fault of their own. That it has left to opportunistic politicians.

"It has, up to this date, provided only a pittance for those grown old and dependent in its service. That has been done by Government, when it could perfectly well have been done by business itself.

"It has continued, and still continues, to create huge aggregations of wealth in corporate form that sometimes seem to overshadow even Government itself. And in recent years, on the other hand, we have seen legalized the operations of similar aggregations of labor as the workingman's counter-offensive, with tragic results."

THE WAY OUT

"These things cannot continue and leave our American system of private enterprise safe. They need not and should not continue. The brains of American businessmen can and must find the cure for the business cycle. They have never tried to. They apparently have wanted to accept it as inevitable, with all its economic tragedy.

"The same brains can find either a remedy for unemployment or the means to take care of those unwillingly unemployed. They have never tried to. They apparently have wanted plenty of surplus labor, whether tragedy is involved or not.

"Those same brains, applied assiduously to the production of wealth, can find the ways and the means to take care of the human victims of economic obsolescence.

"With few exceptions, they have never tried to. Their interest has seemed to die when then the worker was severed from the pay roll. That an incomeless man was a lost customer did not seem to occur to them. And when Government began the job with a pittance, the same businessmen have cussed it for doing so, because it involved some taxes. If we fail to do the things that the history of the past fifty years has taught us need be done, we shall deserve whatever we get. American business can preserve the American way—if it but will. It has the brains; it has the means. And the time for action is here now!"

The address by this very able economist, speaking for the American Bankers Association, I think speaks for itself and shows to us the reason for the domestic economic demands with which we are faced.

Mr. President, as I previously stated, if we make a blanket cut of the budget based, as some have said, upon a fair estimate, without full knowledge of where the cut is going to apply, we remove the opportunity of taking care of the vital essentials which are recognized by Mr. Irwin in the maintenance of our domestic economy, in the prevention within the United States of suffering such as might bring about, and once before would have brought about had it continued, a change in the entire American system of business and government.

Mr. President, that is another reason why we must go slowly and carefully in dealing with the question of cutting the budget. We must not simply undertake to fulfill a campaign promise. We must not simply take action with a lump sum in view. If we are to usurp the duties of an office created by Congress to do a job we must do the job ourselves with the same care that we would require of the office we created to do the job.

I think the whole budget question, as debated upon the floor of the Senate, is well represented by what one of the editors of my State, the editor of the Wheeling News, termed "an epidemic in Congress of 'lumpsumitis'"—cutting from the budget a lump sum of $6,000,000,000, shall we say, or reducing by a lump sum the number of employees by 1,000,000, without saying how, when, and where they are to be reduced, without a study of the needs of a complicated domestic and foreign economy and the policies engendered thereby, and without a careful study of the need for debt reduction.

I am in favor of applying surpluses to debt reduction, rather than creating a deficit which may have to be met later out of a vacuum. If we build upon the basis of a lump-sum cut, conditions may bring about such a situation that we must exceed the amount of revenue for the current year. If that should happen, the opportunity to create a balance would be removed. That is one of the dangers of a lump-sum cut without careful study. For example, if we ask a department to reduce its budget by a lump sum, we may cut out a very essential part of that department. For the past 2 years the Congress—and the Senate in particular—has relieved itself of all sorts of burdens with reference to monopolies by adding at the end of a bill a tag-end paragraph, as Members of this body who were here during that time well remember, to the effect that it would be left to the Department of Justice to determine whether or not by a certain action monopoly would be created. Then we slashed the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and removed from that department the only organization capable of rendering the opinion which we as a Congress demanded from the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, I want a sensible reduction of the budget. I want it done as any good business firm or corporation would do it. The Government is the greatest corporation in the world, and we are its board of directors. I want the reduction made as any good business firm or corporation would make it. I want it made on the basis of a study of the aims and objects of the corporation during the next fiscal year, and what it will cost economically to administer those aims. I do not want it done on the theory of cutting off so much money at the top and making those down the line tailor the cloth to fit the cut.

I realize that there are always inefficient workers in the Government. By a careful study such inefficient workers can be eliminated. But we cannot eliminate inefficiency by cutting the budget. We must do it by establishing stronger civil service standards and higher standards of duty. There are other ways of eliminating inefficiency in the Government than by cutting the budget. Such action does not eliminate inefficiency. It may tend to increase it.

Before we vote on the pending resolution or any of the amendments thereto we must realize several things. First, we cannot intelligently act in a state of hysteria based upon demands from isolated groups which know nothing of the over-all picture. As my good friend, the West Virginia editor, says, we should not give an exhibition of "lumpsumitis" in the reduction of the operating expenses of the one great safeguard left in the world for representative government.

Secondly, we must take a little time to consider. Never were truer words spoken than, "Haste makes waste." We have found that to be true repeatedly in this body. I expect to vote with that thought in mind. Before drastic action is taken, before slashing off a certain amount and forcing the organization which is left to tailor a suit from insufficient cloth, we should study the needs of our people, as represented by government.

As was well stated by the economist for the American Bankers Association, many of the activities about which we complain, and which are handled by various civilian agencies, were thrust upon the Congress as a result of the carelessness and neglect of employers and industry throughout the United States in the performance of their functions.

Having studied the needs of government, we should then take action, not by making a lump-sum cut, but by determining the essential needs of every department. Having discovered those needs, I join with the Senator from Georgia in saying, Let us take as much of the balance as we can and apply it on the national debt, thus relieving our children, who fought this war and paid for it with their blood, of the necessity of also paying for it with their earnings.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have no desire to consume a great amount of the time of the Senate this afternoon, nor shall I do so. I speak at this time only because of the uncertainty of the ground upon which we are treading at this moment in considering our expression with regard to the reduction of the budget recommended by the President.

Had the Appropriations Committee of this body had an opportunity to review, to study, to examine, and then to recommend for each department the minimum needs of government, I might take an entirely different attitude toward the question of the reduction which I would favor. Were this anything but an expression of intention and determination in connection with the reduction of governmental expenditures, I might take a different view as to the amount of such reduction that I would favor. But what we have been debating for the past several days is only an expression of the direction which we expect public expenditures to take in the future, and the degree of reduction.

We all know that governmental expenditures have risen during recent years from a total of $3,000,000,000 to a Presidential budget this year of $37,500,000,000.

A while ago the distinguished and able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] called an ominous fact to the attention of the Senate, namely, that more than one-third of all the earnings and production of the American people today goes to feed the maw of government, State and National.

Again I want to call attention, as I have before, to the fact that the degree of freedom and progress of a free, self-governing people is almost in exact proportion as they are entitled to retain and control that which their efforts produce. Today more than a third of our actual production is the servant of Government. If progress is again to be made under the American system, we must begin to allow the American people to have and control more of that which they produce; and there is no time when it is more important to begin that process than at the close of a great war when we, a free people—or at least a majority of us, I am convinced—desire to reestablish opportunities, progress, and development under a free self-governing system.

We talk much about the budget. I am quite sure that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will substantially bear me out in the statement I am about to make. For the past 2 years I had the privilege of serving on the Civil Service Committee and working with the senior Senator from Virginia along certain lines which we thought were beneficial to a reconverting economy. Without going into detail, that experience convinced me that the Civil Service Commission not only has done nothing to reduce and curtail unnecessary employment by the Government, but, in fact, has encouraged employment by constantly and repeatedly blanketing under the civil service, willy nilly, everyone who had come into the Government on an emergency or temporary basis, so as to give such workers a permanent status. I am also convinced that the Bureau of the Budget has done nothing to attempt to curtail the extravagant and irresponsible expenditure of money in the conduct of government. I am convinced that we shall not have the maximum of efficient public service and better government until the executive department itself feels keenly the importance of this matter and attempts conscientiously to do a progressive and honest job in the curtailment of Government expenses and in the establishment of efficiency. We must remember that Congress is not an executive or administrative body, but is the legislative body, charged by the people with husbanding their money, and, as such, it can express itself in the only way open to it and that is by limiting the amount of money derived from the production of the American people that the great agencies and departments of the Government may spend. We are bound to place the responsibility upon the executive departments so to rearrange their activities that they can live and perform the duties resting upon them within the limitations of the funds appropriated.

As I said a moment ago, if the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations had been able to detail the minimum needs of all departments and could lay those needs before us as a result of study, such study might show that we could not reduce the budget by more than $2,000,000,000, or it might show that it would be possible to reduce it by $10,000,000,000. I should give great weight to such a study. But what do we have before us? We have two things before us, Mr. President: One is a proposal for a reduction of four and one-half billion dollars, based upon estimates which are not implemented by studies of this body up to this point. The alternative is a reduction of $6,000,000,000.

I shall vote as an expression of my view as to the path down which I want to see our Government proceed. I shall vote to express my desire that every effort be made to attain at least a $6,000,000,000 reduction in the public expenditures of the Government. I believe it can be done.

I stand just as strongly for an adequate Army, Navy, and Air Force as does any other Member of this body. I shall examine with great care any proposed curtailment of the armed strength of the United States, and, if necessary, I shall vote for the maintenance of the desired strength, even though we cannot attain a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in the budget, if the needs of our armed forces demand it. I shall do everything I can to support the balancing of the budget, because I do not believe we should continue to resort to deficit financing. I believe that the national debt must be serviced. The important place where we can reduce, Mr. President, is in the sprawling governmental agencies that have mushroomed up in the last 12 or 14 years and have spent money for projects, some of which were necessary but a great many of which involved irresponsible squandering.

It is in that field, Mr. President, that the administrative and executive departments of our Government must under their responsibility curtail expenditures and reform their approach to public government.

I do not know whether we can obtain a reduction of four and one-half billion dollars. I have no figures resulting from a study of the budget that would so indicate. I do not know whether we can attain a reduction of $6,000,000,000; but, in the interest of the reestablishment of the right, the privilege, and the opportunity of the American people to own, control, and use more of that which they produce, I am voting today that we make every attempt to attain a reduction of at least $6,000,000,000, so that we may begin the process of putting not only government but private initiative back into the hands of the American people.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I have listened with interest to what the Senator has had to say, but I should like to inquire how long a time he would want the Committee on Appropriations to examine the subject before he would approve or vote against this resolution?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I would not put a time limit on it, but we have had sufficient reports to cause me to say that the reduction should be between $4,500,000,000 and $6,000,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest to the able Senator that the only way he can really examine the appropriations is to obtain and consider all the evidence possible. It would have been impossible to do that in time to bring forth the resolution according to law.

I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what the national income is going to be. He could study the problem until next December without knowing any more about it than he knows now, especially if he took some of the advice of the experts. I have sat here for 2 weeks and heard suggestions that if the Committee on Appropriations had done this or that, so and so would have been the result. I should like to know how much longer the Senator wishes to have the Appropriations Committee work on appropriations, following which he would have the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget make its report, which under the Reorganization Act must be made by the 15th of February. I know of nothing which can be done in that respect.

Mr. President, as one member of the Appropriations Committee, I should like to know whether the distinguished Senator will suggest a time limit and what he wishes to have done other than what has been done. If he will make such suggestions, I shall be glad, so far as I am concerned, to comply with them. But such things cannot be done if we are to observe the spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act, which requires that the report of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget be made by the 15th of February.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his observations, and I trust that he is not unduly exercised about my attitude. Perhaps my meaning was not clear, Mr. President. I was not attempting to blame the Appropriations Committee. I was merely stating the fact that there is now no completed study.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I assume that the Appropriations Committee will not complete its studies on the budget for several weeks.

Mr. WHERRY. It cannot do so even by that time.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I assure the Senator from Nebraska that I did not mean to criticize the Appropriations Committee for not having completed its studies for the fiscal year by February 15.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his explanation. I should like to ask him another question. He is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I should like to have him or any other member of that committee state whether there is a contemplated foreign commitment or loan, which Senators generally do not know anything about, which might be requested during the current year.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I can speak only so far as my knowledge goes. I know of none presently standing.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the Senator's answer. I should like to ask the question of any other member of the Foreign Relations Committee who cares to answer it, because in the past few hours I have been informed that one of the reasons why this cushion of $1,500,000,000 is requested is the very fact that a foreign loan is contemplated for the current year. Therefore, I should like to have any member of the Foreign Relations Committee state whether that is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have listened to the debate of the past 2 weeks, and if my memory serves me correctly I have not heard one Senator say he is sure the budget can be cut $6,000,000,000.

We have before us a resolution which in effect means practically nothing, because, although it calls for a cut, it also recognizes the fact that the appropriation bills must later be passed by the Senate and the House of Representatives, and they in effect will determine what cuts are made.

Let us see what we have done in the past. In 1945 the appropriation bills which were passed by the Senate and the House for the fiscal year 1946 carried items totaling $102,291,000,000. At that time we anticipated that the war would continue. However, both the war with Japan and the war with Germany concluded sooner than it was anticipated they would. So we find that the appropriation items were reduced, not by the House and the Senate but by the President and the departments. In particular, the War Department and the Navy Department made cuts, and the budget was reduced to $63,714,000,000.

In 1946 the appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1947 were passed, and again cuts were made. The total was cut from $63,714,000,000 down to $42,823,000,000—a cut of approximately $21,000,000,000.

Again, in the recommendations made by the President in his budget for the fiscal year 1948, he has cut approximately $5,000,000,000 from the appropriations which were made for the fiscal year 1947.

But now the Republicans say, "We will cut $6,000,000,000 more from the budget." Mr. President, have they told us where they will make such cuts?

I wish to state a few of the figures which make up the President's total budget, and I wish to know where the Republicans expect to make the cuts.

I notice that there is an item of $11,200,000,000 for national defense. Do the Republicans intend to cut anything from it? Then there is an item of $2,100,000,000 for tax refunds. Can the Republicans cut anything from that? Then I notice an item of $5,000,000,000 for payment of the interest on what we owe, the national debt. Can the Republicans cut anything from that? Those items alone constitute a total of $18,300,000,000.

Then I wish to know what the Republicans expect to do with the veterans who fought for the life of this Nation. At the present time 2,000,000 veterans are attending school. Are the Republicans going to keep any of them out of school, even though it is anticipated that we shall have at least 100,000 more of them in school in 1948, as compared with the number of veterans attending school in 1947.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from South Carolina is discussing the subject of schools, and I know he is referring to GI's and others who attend school. However, if such a limitation is imposed, what does the Senator think the effect would be upon Federal aid to assist the public schools in the country, under local supervision?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Florida has brought up that point. In short, if Senators who would vote for such cuts mean what they say, we might as well withdraw at this time all bills on such subjects, for any future talk about them would be useless if such cuts were made.

I notice that at the present time 3,150,000 of our people are receiving pensions or similar compensation. Are we going to reduce such compensation, or do away with it entirely? I am informed that in 1948 the number of persons receiving such compensation will be 50 percent greater than it is at the present time or than it will be in 1947. Then, how are cuts to be made in that field, for veterans' services, which we now appropriate $7,343,000,000?

Five items—interest, refunds, national defense, international affairs, and veterans' benefits require expenditures of $29,200,000,000; or almost four-fifths of the total budget as submitted by the President. This sum approaches rather closely the amount which the Republicans have set as a total of expenditures in 1948, without including appropriation items for other branches of the Government.

Under those circumstances, Mr. President, what will the Rural Electrification Administration do? What will flood control do? What will the public works projects do? What will happen to them? What will happen to the Clarks Hill development in South Carolina and Georgia? What will happen to the hot lunches the school children are receiving? What will happen to Federal aid for schools? What will happen to social security? Do Senators mean to increase the items for the social-security program? I have heard some Senators say they mean to see that more money is spent in that field. Can that be done if the budget is cut $6,000,000,000? We might just as well face the facts now and when the vote is taken.

In international affairs we will spend in 1947 $6,394,000,000. The estimate for that item in the fiscal year 1948 has already been cut by the President's budget to $3,510,000,000. Is there a desire to cut that any further?

Someone has said we should cut the appropriation for the General Government. Do Senators know that we spend only $1,492,000,000 in that field at the present time? Then how much can be saved if we cut that out entirely? Not $6,000,000,000, but only $1,492,000,000. We are only fooling ourselves when we say we can cut the budget $6,000,000,000 at this time without injuring the national defense, and many other useful activities in the United States.

While we are here today cutting down on national defense, we find that Russia is keeping up the appropriations for her national defense. I do not have to go into that in detail in order to have Senators realize what might happen should we cut our appropriations and other nations not cut theirs. I am one who would like to see all nations get together and agree to cut armament appropriations, but I am not in favor of the United States cutting her appropriations for national defense and other nations keeping theirs up.

We have finished with the firing of the guns, but the war is not yet over. During 1948 we will have approximately 1,070,000 soldiers in the Army alone. But with the proposed cut we would probably have to go far below that number. Remember, we have increased the pay of the soldiers, and they must get their increased pay from the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. President, I am in favor of cutting what we think we can save as the various appropriation bills come before the Senate, but I am not saying today that we can cut the appropriations $6,000,000,000.

I shall vote for the amendment proposing a cut of four and a half billion dollars, and I am not so sure that if that amendment carries and we then vote on the amended resolution, I shall not vote against the adoption of the resolution as amended.

So, Mr. President, let us think before we vote. I do not believe the Senate is going to vote for a $6,000,000,000 cut. I hope not.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish briefly to summarize my position on the proposal now pending before the Senate. I have already spoken at some length on it, but I think it very important, as we are about to get to a vote, that those of us who think a $6,000,000,000 cut in the budget, which is not based upon any facts, is not in the best interests of the country make the record perfectly clear as to our reasons for taking that position.

I wish to say at the outset that I am preparing and will introduce in a few days an amendment to the Reorganization Act which will call for the submitting of the legislative budget to the Congress by the Budget Committee on March 15 rather than on February 15. If we have not learned anything else from this debate, we have certainly learned that the law as it now stands does not give the Budget Committee ample time to do a thorough job in the preparation of a legislative budget. If we cannot have a budget that is based on some scientific analysis of the budgetary problems of our Government, it is better that we have no legislative budget at all. If time is the factor which will determine whether or not we get a carefully prepared legislative budget, then I think we owe it to ourselves and to the country to so amend the law that in the future there will be sufficient time for the careful preparation of a budget.

But, Mr. President, we have to take the law at this time as it is, and taking it as it is, I am of the opinion that the most efficient use of time was not made by the Budget Committee, because if it had used its time most efficiently, then I think we would have had a report which would have been based upon at least some facts. However, it is admitted by all, even including the members of the Budget Committee, that this proposed budget at best purports to be an "intelligent guess." I do not think the Congress of the United States should submit to the American people a budget based even upon an intelligent guess. In my opinion, the American people are entitled to have a budget based upon what the Congress knows to be the facts, not guesses. Hence I cannot vote for a budget based upon allegedly intelligent guesses.

I shall vote against the Millikin amendment, which calls for a $4,500,000,000 budget cut, and I shall vote against the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut. I shall vote against both proposals because, as this debate shows, there is not a scintilla of evidence in the entire record of the debate or in the report of the Budget Committee on which I can base a vote in support of either one of the proposed budget cuts.

As a lawyer I know something about the rules of evidence. As a lawyer I cannot vote for such a proposal as this without any evidence at all upon which to base my vote. I certainly cannot justify to my constituents in the State of Oregon a vote for either the Millikin amendment or the committee proposal on the basis of the argument of the senior Senator from Ohio that the cuts represent intelligent guesses. There can be no intelligent guesses without some evidence on which to base a guess.

I am willing to grant that the Budget Committee did not have enough time under the existing law to prepare a thorough scientific analysis of the Federal budget, but if it had properly used the time it did have at its disposal it could have given us at least some evidence in support of its recommendation for a $6,000,000,000 cut.

I want the RECORD to show for future reference that what the proponents of the $4,500,000,000 cut and of the $3,000,000,000 cut are saying to us is, "Gentlemen, we ask you to vote blindly for these cuts because we tell you that we have made intelligent guesses that lead us to believe that we can cut the budget that much safely." I think such a position is an untenable one, and I shall never support it with my vote.

I repeat that the committee had time to give us some evidence on the budget. The chronological date record proves my point on that matter. The records of the Senate show that our Senate committees were appointed on January 8, 1947. The President's budget was transmitted to the Congress of the United States on January 10, 1947. What did the Budget Committee dc from January 10 to February 15, 1947? It had more than a month to make at least some analysis of the budget. Certainly a month's time for study and analysis of the budget is at least ample to bring forth from the committee something more than just guesses even though some of the members of the committee claim that their guesses are intelligent guesses.

I am at a complete loss to understand why the committee failed in more than a month's time to produce some evidence; just a little evidence; at least a scintilla of evidence in support of the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut. Other speakers have pointed out how arbitrary, secretive, and apparently political the procedures of the Budget Committee have been. Those charges have not been successfully refuted. I am convinced they cannot be. Hence, in view of the record which has been made against the Budget Committee, I do not propose to vote for any of its recommendations.

The next point I wish to make as a reason for my opposition to the $6,000,000,000 cut is based upon a statement made by my very good friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I think he is one of the most able Members of the Senate, certainly a man whose conscientiousness cannot be questioned by any Member of this body. In the RECORD for February 21, at page 1338, appears a statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire which, in my opinion, goes to the very crux of the problem we are discussing, so far as I am concerned, when this colloquy took place:

Mr. BRIDGES. Under the Reorganization Act would the Senator present a complete break-down showing in detail where reductions are to be made?

Mr. MYERS. I would give as much information as I could; but the committee has given us no information.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would not that be prejudging the work of the Appropriations Committees?

Mr. MYERS. No. The Senator's committee has given us no information.

Mr. BRIDGES. I can tell the Senator very simply where the cuts will come. They will come within every single department of Government, down the line.

The Senator from New Hampshire meant what he said—he always means what he says. On February 21 he spoke as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and told us, with the honesty which characterizes the man, that as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations his intention is to make the cuts down the line in every department.

Mr. President, I say that such a fiscal program would be a most unfortunate policy of budget making for the Eightieth Congress to adopt. When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations tells us that a horizontal budget-cut principle is the underlying principle he is going to apply, knowing the tremendous power the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has in the fixing of any budget, I am willing to take him at his word, but I must rise to oppose the application of that principle. There is nothing fair or scientific about a horizontal-cut principle. It is an arbitrary rule-of-thumb principle.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am very sorry I cannot yield, in view of the very great limitation on time imposed on me. If I can possibly cut my remarks so that the Senator may reply, I shall certainly give him the time.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wanted to say just a word in explanation.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say, Mr. President, that there are departmental budgets which should be increased if we are to protect the national welfare. Hence, I wish to point out to the Members of the Senate that if they vote for the proposed cut, they are not only underwriting the sort of arbitrary, unjust, horizontal budget-cutting principle proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, they are not only underwriting a guesswork pattern, admitted by all who have had anything to do with this proposed cut to be a guesswork pattern, but they are voting in the dark; they are voting blindly on this budget. When they vote for that principle they do not know in what degree some great functions of the Government may be sacrificed or injured by the type of budget cut proposed.

Let me repeat what I said on February 7 and on February 14. I want the Government to save every dollar it can, out of wasteful expenditures. I want to put a stop to all wasteful expenditures in Government.

I will vote for that sort of saving. However, I think it is time that the Senate of the United States recognize that there is one division that ought to be made in the budget, and that is a division which separates administrative costs of government, much of which I think can be pared down and can result in some savings, from capital investments or expenditures for wealth-creating projects so sorely needed throughout the entire country. These wealth creating projects should be increased and not decreased. Now is the time, Mr. President, to see to it that we lay the foundations of prevention, in order to avoid the next depression. If we do not do it now, I do not know when we are going to do it. Thus I say that there are some great wealth-creating investments, and some capital investments that ought to be separated from so-called administrative expenditures, because for the most part they are self-liquidating, and they are very essential if we are going to develop a stable economy for the country. They are necessary if we are going to prepare to meet the threat of unemployment, which is going to come as surely as we sit here today, in not too many years hence, unless we do something to change the economic policies for the country that this Congress is already beginning to lay down as its pattern. That trend of those policies being proposed by some Republican leaders in the Congress is clearly a return to the economic patterns of the 1920's. As one voice in the Republican Party, I am going to continue to try to be heard against the Republican economic policies of the 1920's. My party perpetrated those depression-causing policies on the American people and as I said the other day, it must assume the chief responsibility, as a party, for the costly, devastating depression of 1932 and the years following.

If we are going to prevent the repetition of that type of economic cycle, then, Mr. President, we ought to prepare now for some great capital investments that will result in wealth-creating projects, out of which new tax dollars may flow. Such projects will give some assurance of employment to millions of men that in the not too distant future may be faced with unemployment.

I refer, Mr. President, to the great reclamation projects of the West. I refer, for example, to the great flood-control projects of the West. As we sit here today, the streams of the West are overflowing their banks, and millions and millions of dollars of national wealth are being washed into the sea, never to be recovered by the people of the Nation. The value of this precious top soil is far in excess of any sum that will be found in this year's budget for a reclamation and flood-control program.

We have no right, in the interest of our national welfare, to follow such a blind policy of soil destruction. If a cut is made down the line, department by department, you and I know, Mr. President, that money needed for the conservation of our precious natural resources will not be appropriated.

I want to point out that conservation of the natural resources of the country is right squarely before us in this session of Congress. I want to say to the American people from this platform that they need to take heed to the millions and millions of dollars of unrecoverable natural resources that are being lost each year because the Congress, in the past and now, has not shown an adequate inclination to appropriate the necessary funds to prevent that sort of waste. Are we going to be guilty of turning great areas of our Nation into another eroded and flood-destroyed China?

Our attitude on reclamation, our attitude on flood control has been a "penny-wise and pound-foolish" attitude. The Congress is deceiving the American people when it does not appropriate the necessary funds to prevent the terrible loss that we are suffering to our irreplaceable fertile lands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I am sorry, I do not want to yield until I am sure I can finish within the time that has been allotted to me; then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky. Take my State, Mr. President, for example. Within a very small area, an area of not more than 40 square miles, last year 6 percent of the entire Nation's flood damage was suffered by a flood on the Willamette River. For years the people of my State have been pleading with the Congress to get busy and appropriate the funds which everyone admits, if appropriated, will prevent the serious annual flood damage in the Willamette Valley, running up into millions. Yet it is expected by some here that I should sit and vote blindly on a budget when no one in the Senate can tell me what the effect of a $6,000,000,000 or a four-and-a-half-billion-dollar cut is going to have on the problem of conserving the natural resources of my State of Oregon as well as other parts of America. I am not going to do it, Mr. President.

I am going to do everything I can, when this budget is approved, if the appropriations come out with not enough money in them to prevent the type of loss from floods which I have been pleading about, to place the responsibility where it belongs. If it belongs on my party, I shall put the responsibility there. I am going to do what I can to have the Republican Party step up and measure up to its responsibility in conserving and preserving the natural resources of the country.

Go on out through the western country, and take a look at what is happening to soil conservation because of failure on the part of the Congress to appropriate enough money soon enough. We are cheating future generations in the name of a false economy. We should not play politics with their rights. Then let us go into this problem of building the great self-liquidating power dams of the Pacific Northwest. I refer not only to completing Grand Coulee, but to starting McNary, Hungry Horse, Foster Creek, and rest of the proposed dams on the Columbia and the Snake Rivers.

The private utilities of the West, for the first time in our history, are now begging for a completion of these dams. Why? Because these dams are their chief sources of power. Existing power plants, public and private, cannot provide the necessary power already being demanded in the great Pacific Northwest. The private power companies must depend on the completion of these dams if they are to supply their customers. Thus, I offer, Mr. President, and ask to have incorporated as a part of my remarks at the end thereof, a letter signed by Mr. C. A. Erdahl, chairman of the Tacoma power conferences held on January 7, 11, 22, and 23, 1947, by the private utilities and by the representatives of the various governmental agencies that are charged with the responsibility of proceeding with those dams, together with attachments.

There being no objection, the letter, with attachments, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. MORSE. It will be found, Mr. President, in this material—and I shall not take the time to read it—that the officials of the private utilities and the governmental officials concerned came to one mind on the imperative importance of completing these great wealth-creating projects.

What will the budget cuts do to them, Mr. President? I do not know. It is a big secret that the budget committee has not been willing, if it knows, to disclose to us. But let me say that in my judgment the people of the Pacific Northwest are entitled to ask us in the months to come, "What was your position when the budget was before the Congress? Did you raise your voice in protest about the dangers inherent in a budget when the makers of that budget could not tell you what the effect of it would be on these great reclamation and irrigation and power-development and flood-control projects of the Pacific Northwest?"

Mr. President, I am trying to make my voice of protest heard. I think the people of the Pacific Northwest will know that it was heard before we get through with this fight, because a fight it is. We are going to have to find out whether or not we of the western empire are just going to be tail-enders on appropriation allowances, or whether the Congress of the United States is going to recognize the great wealth potentials of the Pacific Northwest and the other Western States and what those potentials mean to the entire economy of the country.

I also wish to point out that we have some other conservation problems. We have a great forestry conservation problem. I am not going to go into the statistics of it now, Mr. President, except to point out that our Department of Agriculture, through the Forestry Service, points out that we are cutting at a very rapid rate in excess of reforestation. Let me tell the Senate that when a nation sacrifices its timber resources, the effect thereof upon the entire economy of the country is tremendous.

Take a look at those countries of the world which are not self-sustaining. You will find that almost without exception they are without adequate timber resources. In many instances they destroyed their forests and failed to take adequate conservation steps necessary in a sound reforestation program. Their unsound policy of exploiting their forests was one of the things that produced their economic weakness.

Our national security should compel us, Mr. President, to insist upon appropriating whatever sums are necessary to conserve our forests. We need to put into effect immediately a sound reforestation and sustained-yield program. We must stop the plundering of our forests now. I speak out of first-hand knowledge when I tell you that the lumber interests of this country will cooperate wholeheartedly in an intelligent, adequately financed reforestation and sustained-yield program. But I ask what chance is there for such a program under either one of the proposed budget cuts? I do not propose to go back to the State of Oregon and tell my people who are living with this problem that I failed to point out this issue before any budget cuts were adopted by the Senate. Denude the mountainsides of the West, mow down the forests now growing on them, leave those areas to the erosion of the elements, and you will be guilty, Mr. President, of cheating future generations of Americans out of 10 times and more of the total cost of preventing such waste by a sound conservation and reforestation program. We cannot do the job that is needed in saving the forests of America and cut the conservation program in the budget. This is an item that should be increased, not decreased.

Mr. President, we of this generation do not own these natural resources. Oh, if we could only get the American people to see that they are guilty of larceny against future generations by the exploiting methods they are using in devastating the natural resources of America. All we have is a trust of use, that is all. Just a trust of use. How are we keeping the trust? We are remiss in keeping that trust as far as conserving our natural resources are concerned. We have no right to do what we are doing to the soil of America, to the forests of America, to the minerals of America. The way to prevent that type of exploitation is through a friendly and cooperative government working hand in hand with those who are seeking to use those resources in the best interest of our private property economy. I have found the lumbermen of my section of the country, I have found the mining men of my section of the country, I have found the public-utility men of my section of the country, and the farmers too, perfectly willing to cooperate with the Government in support of sound conservation. They recognize, too, the great danger of the sacrifice of the natural resources, but they would tell the Senate, Mr. President, if they were on the floor here this afternoon, that they cannot do it if the heart is cut out of a conservation budget.

However, their eyes are watching us. I am sure the people of the West are going to hold us responsible for what we do this year on the budget. They know that they have a right to expect my party to support as well as talk about a conservation program. The funds we appropriate will be our answer to them. They have a right to have those funds increased, not decreased. Any other fiscal program on this national emergency problem would be false economy.

Mr. President, I move to the next point on which I wish to comment and that is that I want assurance that whatever savings we make will be applied to the national debt. Therefore I am going to support the amendment proposed by the Senator from California that whatever savings we make at least the first $3,000,000,000 thereof shall be applied to the national debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. MORSE. I will take time on the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is recognized on the resolution.

Mr. MORSE. I feel that the Government, Mr. President, should act as honest men act. It should pay on its debts when it has the money to pay on its debts. I was brought up in that way. That was my training as a youth. I can remember my dad saying many times, "When you have the money, pay on your debts. Keep your debts within your earning power." I think it is a pretty sound economic principle for a government to apply. If our Government does not pay a substantial sum on the national debt in 1947, when does any Member of the Senate think it will pay on the national debt? If we cannot pay on the national debt out of whatever savings we can squeeze out of the budget this year, Mr. President, then I say to the American people that our failure to go along with the amendment proposed by the Senator from California is a confession that we have no intention of paying on the national debt at any time. The issue becomes this, Mr. President: Either repudiation or paying the debt. Which is it going to be? I take the position that we must pay on the national debt this year if we are going to instill any confidence in the taxpayers that we have any intention of ever paying on the national debt.

Oh, it is said that it is more important to reduce taxes than to pay on the national debt, because if we reduce taxes that is going to be a stimulus to production and out of production we are going to get more tax dollars with which we can pay in the future on the national debt. I think that is a highly and thoroughly fallacious argument. I think it is based on the false premise, Mr. President, that we have got to bribe the manufacturers and the businessmen of America to produce in the public interest. It is a reflection on their patriotism. I do not know such businessmen. I do not know such manufacturers. But I know scores of businessmen and scores of manufacturers who are greatly concerned with what we are going to do on the national debt. They are much concerned about the value of the American dollar, and they know very well that when that dollar becomes a cheapened dollar, depreciated in value, American business firms by the thousands, as in the 1930's, will be faced with bankruptcy.

Let me say by way of gratuitous advice to my party that if it thinks that by a tax-reduction program rather than a payment on the debt it is making friends in American industry, it has another guess coming. American businessmen are greatly concerned about the value of the American dollar. They want to see us pay substantially on the debt this year. Promises, promises, promises have become the stock in trade of my Republican Party. I say the time has come to make good as a party. There is no better way to start than paying on the national debt.

I think the proposal made by the Senator from California is keeping good faith with American industry. I do not propose to bribe American industry into producing by paying them, through tax reductions to produce. It is in their interest as it is in the interest of all groups of Americans, including labor, to produce now as they never produced before if we are going to save the economy of this country. I think we should pay at least $3,000,000,000 on the national debt, if we can save that out of the budget, and I hope we can. I hope we can save more, once we get the facts, but I think we should pay at least the first $3,000,000,000 saved on the national debt. The psychological effect as well as the economical result on this country would be remarkable if we made such payment.

And then do not forget that when we retire a debt, when we pay on a debt we automatically increase the productive forces of the country. We eliminate nonproductive charges. Service charges on a debt are not productive charges. They do not create wealth. If we get rid of those charges then we help put our economy in a condition where it can enjoy the confidence of the people participating in the economy.

That is the way to stimulate production in this country. The greatest stimulation we could give the country today economically would be to serve notice on the American people that as honest men in the Congress we are to apply the good old principle that when one has the funds he pays on his debts.

One further point, Mr. President, and I shall be through. I think it is true, as some have said, that the "chips" are down in relation to the fiscal policy of this Government. I certainly agree that it should be a principle of the Republican Party that wasteful expenditures in Government, which are always characteristic of a war, and which are always characteristic of meeting any emergency we have not planned to meet, should be eliminated. There was a great deal of waste, not only during the war, but in the nineteen hundred and thirties, because of the great depression. We were then meeting an emergency for which we had not prepared; and my party must assume its share of the responsibility for that ill preparation. There were a great many wasteful Government expenditures during the nineteen hundred and thirties. I do not want that condition repeated. I want to assist now in preparing to lay the fiscal foundation for meeting any future depression which may threaten on the horizon. That is why, speaking particularly to Senators from the West, I say to them that I believe that in the interest not only of our region of the country, but our entire national economy, we, the western Senators, must be able to answer the question, "What would be the result of a $6,000,000,000 cut on the great wealth-creating projects of the West, on the conservation program so sorely needed if we are to save for the future generations of America millions of dollars of national wealth now being destroyed by a failure on the part of the Congress to appropriate the money necessary to save those resources?"

So the action we take today will come back time and again to face western Senators. In my judgment, the eyes of the people of the West will be on the action taken here today and, come July 1, when the budget is finally approved, they will want an answer to the question, "What was your position when it was proposed blindly, by guesswork, to cut $6,000,000,000 out of the budget, when you did not have one iota of factual information showing what effect that cut would have on the great projects of the Western States?"

This statement today, Mr. President, along with the speeches which I have made on the subject of the budget in the Senate on February 7 and February 14 set forth the budget issues as I see them.

I have endeavored to give fair warning of what I think the people of the country expect us to do about appropriating money necessary for national security, conservation, reclamation, flood control, power development, REA, and many other wealth-creating projects. I have endeavored to warn my party with complete frankness that if it follows the fiscal pattern and the economic policies which it adopted in the 1920's it is headed for serious trouble with the voters of this country. I am convinced that the underlying economic pattern on which these budget cuts rest constitutes a blind return to the Republican economic policies of the 1920's. I regret it. I shall continue to do everything I can within the party to prevent such a serious mistake.

EXHIBIT A

CITY OF TACOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES,
Tacoma, Wash., January 30, 1947.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
The United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: There has just been concluded in Tacoma, with the undersigned as chairman, a series of conferences between executives of privately and publicly owned power utilities in the area, jointly faced with a common problem—how to meet impending needs for more generating capacity.

After conferring with representatives of the Federal agencies concerned, the utilities unanimously agreed to a statement of policy with regard to provision for future supplies of electric power adequate to maintain continued industrial, agricultural, and utility development in the Pacific Northwest.

We are enclosing a copy of this statement of policy in order that you may be fully informed as to our power needs, and respectfully request that it be given your careful consideration.

We welcome the opportunity of furnishing any additional information desired.

Very truly yours,

C. A. ERDAHL,
Chairman, Tacoma Conferences of January 7, 11, 22, 23, 1947.

STATEMENT OF POLICY

It is recognized that provision for future supplies of electric power adequate to maintain continued industrial, agricultural, and utility development in the Pacific Northwest depends upon the construction of multiple-purpose projects on the Columbia River and its tributaries. The Federal Government, by numerous acts of Congress, has assumed responsibility for the construction of these multiple-purpose projects.

The assumption of this utility responsibility by the Federal Government has caused investors and management of both publicly and privately owned industrial and power-distribution enterprises in the States of Oregon and Washington to plan their investments and developmental programs in the belief that this Federal policy will continue.

Recognizing that the existing generating capacity in the Northwest is now fully utilized and that the maintenance of an adequate power supply is of extreme importance, the undersigned privately and publicly owned utilities, after conferring with representatives of the Federal agencies concerned, have given careful consideration, first, to the power requirements by year through 1953; and, second, to the requirements for the construction of additional backbone transmission circuits needed to bring power supplies from Federal projects to the region's load centers.

As a result of these extended deliberations and detailed load studies it is determined and agreed that new Federal generating capacity in the amount of 318,000 kilowatts over and above the 745,000 kilowatts of generating units now on order will be required between now and November 1, 1949, to meet the present critical power-supply problem; and 1,565,000 kilowatts will be required by November 1, 1953, as set forth in detail in the attached memorandum. To meet these requirements it is urged that the necessary appropriations be made available as rapidly as possible to the Corps of Engineers and to the Bureau of Reclamation.

Inasmuch as these Federal generating plants are located a considerable distance from the region's load centers, and inasmuch as present transmission facilities of the Bonneville Power Administration are already approaching conditions of full load, it is agreed as essential that appropriations for backbone transmission facilities be made available to the Bonneville Power Administration on an annual and continuing basis adequate to provide a means for the delivery of power to load centers.

Finally, it is the belief of the undersigned that provision for these facilities will permit the development of a strong regional economy which will prove to be of lasting benefit to the Nation as a whole.

Adopted at conference in Tacoma, January 22, 1947.

The Washington Water Power Co., K. M. Robinson, president; Portland General Electric Co., F. M. Warren, Jr., executive vice president; Pacific Power & Light Co., P. B. McKee, president; Northwestern Electric Co., T. E. Roach, vice president and general manager; Puget Sound Power & Light Co., H. C. Webb, vice president; City of Seattle, Department of Lighting, E. R. Hoffman, superintendent of lighting; City of Tacoma, Department of Public Utilities, C. A. Erdahl, commissioner.

New Federal generating capacity needed in the northwest to 1953

[1] Includes 1 additional Coulee unit (120,000 kilowatts) for reserve.
[2] 1 unit at Alder Dam of Tacoma, 25,000 kilowatts, and seventh unit at Grand Coulee, 120,000 kilowatts.
[3] Eighth and ninth units at Grand Coulee, 120,000 kilowatts each.
[4] Tenth, eleventh, and twelfth units at Grand Coulee, 120,000 kilowatts each.
[5] City of Seattle contemplates installation of a unit of 40,000 kilowatts peaking capability in 1949. This has not been allowed for in the figure shown.
[6] While additional Coulee units would take care of necessary peaking, they would not supply the energy required to carry the load without additional upstream storage.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION—PROGRAM FOR PACIFIC NORTHWEST POWER DEVELOPMENT

This program is outlined in three steps: (1) Estimated regional power loads for the 6-year period 1947–53; (2) action required to assure adequate program of generating installations; and (3) Bonneville Power Administration power-marketing policy.

1. ESTIMATED LOADS AND REQUIREMENTS, 1947–53

In conference in Tacoma on January 22, 1947, representatives of the major utility systems and of the chambers of commerce in the area agreed upon estimated regional power loads and requirements for the period 1947–53. This agreement is attached hereto as exhibit A.

	Peak		Average
	Area load	Increase over 1946–47	Area load	Increase over 1946–47
1946–47	2,574		1,856
1947–48	2,825	251	2,015	159
1948–49	3,121	547	2,215	359
1949–50	3,517	943	2,476	620
1950–51	3,830	1,256	2,685	829
1951–52	4,179	1,605	2,925	1,069
1952–53	4,482	1,908	3,137	1,281
1953–54	4,764	2,190	3,359	1,503

In the foregoing estimates the major utilities have estimated their own loads, and BPA has estimated its own direct service load other than service to the major pool utilities. In BPA's estimates is included an allowance for new industrial loads totaling 452,000 kilowatts peak, 380,000 kilowatts average by 1953. This is an average allowance for the 6-year period of 75,000 kilowatts per year.

2. ACTION REQUIRED TO OBTAIN GENERATING FACILITIES FOR PROGRAM

The Tacoma agreement does not outline a program for expanding generating capacity except where such capacity is already on order. At the present time 745,000 kilowatts are on order consisting of six main Grand Coulee units, and one unit of 25,000 kilowatts for Alder Dam of the city of Tacoma. The six Grand Coulee units on order will make a total of 12 units at Grand Coulee Dam by 1949 according to present schedules. It is imperative that these schedules be maintained and that additional Grand Coulee units be increased to 18 units at the earliest possible date. BPA's recommendations to meet power loads are as follows:

I. Complete full installation of hydro units in existing dams.

1. Complete Grand Coulee installation to a total of 18 units according to following schedule (to be speeded up if possible): No. 7, November 1947; No. 8, February 1948; No. 9, May 1948; No. 10, April 1949; No. 11, July 1949; No. 12, September 1949; No. 13, April 1950; No. 14, July 1950; No. 15, October 1950; No. 16, 17, and 18 in 1951.

2. Take necessary measures to have eight additional units (160,000 kilowatts) installed at Rock Island Dam at earliest possible date. Four of these units should be in service for the fall of 1949–50 with full installation completed before the fall of 1951.

3. Install one additional unit ($45,000 kilowatts) at Ariel Dam of Pacific Power & Light Co. in time for winter peak 1949–50.

II. Press for first priority new projects on Columbia River and its tributaries.

1. McNary Dam with estimated total cost of $186,000,000 and $3,000,000 appropriated to June 30, 1947. Not less than three units should be available from this dam for the fall of 1952. This is the schedule stated by the Army to be possible if adequate appropriation is provided. According to their schedule, they would require at least $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 for this schedule for fiscal year 1948.

2. Hungry Horse Dam with revised estimated total cost of $97,500,000 (before Congress on original project basis of $48,319,000) with $2,560,000 appropriated to June 30, 1947, and only $4,500,000 proposed for fiscal year 1948. Present schedule is to have 1,000,000 acre-feet of storage in 1950 and 2,860,000 acre-feet of usable storage with two generators in 1951. The Bureau of Reclamation will have to supply the estimated amount needed in 1948 to meet this schedule.

3. Foster Creek Dam with total estimated cost of $136,000,000 and no appropriations to date and no appropriations proposed for 1948. First three units should be ready for service in September of 1953. We do not know the Corps of Engineers' appropriation requirements to meet this schedule.

4. Lower Snake River projects consisting of four to six dams with a total estimated cost of approximately $270,000,000 and no appropriations to date and none proposed for fiscal year 1948. Required schedule:

No. 1 plant, 1952.
No. 2 plant, 1953.
No. 3 plant, 1954.
No. 4 plant, 1955.

We do not know the Corps of Engineers' appropriation requirements to meet this schedule.

5. Detroit Dam with estimated total cost of $36,000,000 and $3,977,000 appropriated to June 30, 1947. First unit is required in 1951.

3. POWER-MARKETING POLICY

It is the policy of the Administration to make this limited amount of power available on the following basis:

First. Bonneville will take care of the requirements of public agencies and cooperatives in accordance with the preference and priority provisions of the Bonneville Act.

Second. Bonneville will meet the loads of its existing industrial customers and those to whom the Administration has made commitments.

Third. Bonneville will supply to the extent of its capability the requirements of the private utility company loads above and beyond that which the utilities can meet with full utilization of all their available facilities including additional generators that can be installed in order to meet needs of all the people of the region.

All remaining power will be available for new industrial loads.

STATEMENT OF POLICY PASSED FEBRUARY 4, 1947, BY THE NORTHWEST PUBLIC POWER ASSOCIATION

The Northwest Public Power Association has reviewed the statement of policy issued January 22, 1947, by the private utilities of the region and the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, and heartily endorse this demonstration of unity in behalf of the regional welfare. The association is in agreement with three of the four major points set forth in the statement of policy, namely:

1. That the economic development of the Northwest is directly dependent upon the continuing construction by the Federal Government of multiple-purpose projects on the Columbia River and its tributaries.

2. That the utilities of this region have planned their operations and proceeded upon the assumption that the Federal Government has undertaken the responsibility for developing and marketing the hydroelectric energy of the Columbia River Basin as an integral part of its program for improvement of navigation, irrigation, and flood control.

3. That additional generating capacity in the minimum amount of 318,000 kilowatts above the 745,000 kilowatts now on order will be required between now and November 1, 1949, to meet the critical power shortage which now exists in this area, and that a total of 1,565,000 kilowatts will be needed by November 1, 1953, to keep abreast with growing demands in the area.

However, the statement of policy regarding transmission-line construction adopted by the Northwest Power Pool in our judgment fails to give full consideration to the problems and rights of the 34 municipal power systems, 19 public-utility districts, and 40 electric cooperative associations presently operating in this area, which by congressional enactment are given a preferred status in the purchase of Columbia River power.

These cooperative and nonprofit systems serving a large number of the people of Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington, have undertaken to distribute hydroelectric energy from the Federal projects under a specific congressional policy making the benefits of these developments available to all consumers within economic transmission distance. To avoid the monopolization of power from Grand Coulee and Bonneville Dams, Congress has enacted legislation and appropriated funds for the construction of transmission lines to serve not only major load centers, but smaller municipalities and rural areas as well.

As a matter of justice the fulfillment of this congressional policy, and the recognition of the equal rights of smaller business enterprises and farm groups to share in the benefits of the Federal development, require the correlated construction of such transmission lines other than "backbone" lines, as are economic units of the Federal transmission system, for which the Government will be fully reimbursed under existing wholesale rates.

Along with the Federal responsibility for the development of the Columbia River, there exists a mutual responsibility by the utilities of the region to proceed with the immediate installation of unused generating capacity in all existing dams in order to meet the grave emergency facing this region in the next few years.

Approved by the board of directors of the Northwest Public Power Association in Portland, Oreg., February 4, 1947.

JOHN S. DICKSON,
President.

House Joint Memorial 6

We, your memorialists, the Forty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully request and petition as follows, to-wit:

Whereas Oregon and the Pacific Northwest with the aid of low-cost power took rapid strides towards industrial development before and during the war and have retained and expanded those advances during the postwar period; and

Whereas the only source of low-cost power in Oregon and the Pacific Northwest in quantities adequate for their development is the energy in our rivers which can be converted to hydroelectric power; and

Whereas the Federal Government, by numerous acts of Congress has assumed the responsibility for development of this hydroelectric power through the construction of an integrated system of Federal multiple-purpose projects on the Columbia River and its tributaries; and

Whereas your memorialists are advised that Congress has under consideration not only curtailment of the construction program for Federal multiple-purpose projects in the Columbia Basin, but also an increase in the power rates of the Bonneville Power Administration on the grounds that those rates are inadequate to meet the repayments of construction costs required by law; and

Whereas existing generating capacity in the Pacific Northwest is now fully utilized and reliable estimates of future power requirements of the States of Oregon and Washington indicate that installation within the next 7 years of about 1,500,000 kilowatts of new Federal generating capacity over and above that now ordered is essential to maintain continued industrial, agricultural, and utility development; and

Whereas official reports of the Bonneville Power Administration and independent audits of its operations by certified public accountants show conclusively that power revenues under existing rate schedules are more than sufficient to meet all repayment obligations required by law in connection with the Bonneville Dam project and the Columbia Basin project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring therein), That your memorialists hereby respectfully petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to make on an annual and continuing basis the appropriations necessary for providing urgently needed additional Federal generating capacity in the Columbia Basin and not to require any increase in the power rates of the Bonneville Power Administration which would destroy the key of low-cost hydroelectric power needed to unlock other natural resources in Oregon and the great Pacific Northwest, permitting the development of new opportunities and new jobs and the creation of new taxable wealth; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be authorized, and is hereby directed, to forward immediately certified copies of this joint memorial to the President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the Members of the congressional delegation from the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana, and the presiding officers of the legislative bodies of the last three named States.

As one of the large power users in the Northwest, Crown Zellerbach Corp. fully supports the Bonneville Power Administration program as defined in the "statement of policy" signed by officers of all the public utilities operating in the Northwest, which advocates additional power generation of approximately 1,560,000 kilowatts by 1953. Contracts for construction and equipment have been let by our corporation totaling $20,000,000 by two mills in the Portland area. We expect this program to be completed by the end of this year. This program will require an additional 36,000 kilowatts of power, and must be furnished either directly or indirectly by Bonneville Power Administration. If this power is not made available it means the start-up of the new plants may be delayed for approximately 2½ years, with the resultant lack of employment of the manpower necessary for their operation, until we can purchase and install our own generating equipment. If our capital expenditures are restricted to the installation of papermaking equipment it will result in the employment of considerably more men than would be the case if a large sum must be set aside for power generation which is strictly a function of the Bonneville Power Administration. The House Appropriation Committee is now holding hearings on the budget for Booneville Power Administration. We believe it to be in the best interests of Oregon and the Pacific Northwest for you to support the Bonneville program as outlined above. This wire is being sent to the entire Oregon delegation.

CROWN ZELLERBACH CORP.,
F. N. YOUNGMAN,
Vice president.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to compliment the Senator from Oregon on his able address. I assure him that I share his concern. I so stated to the Senate on Monday last.

As an example of what the Senator from Oregon is talking about, in the State of Washington last week the Secretary of the Interior was handed a check in the city of Yakima as a final payment on a project called the Teton project, which was authorized by Congress under the first Reclamation Act of 1906. The Congress has put into that project, as a self-liquidating project, exactly what the Senator from Oregon is talking about, exactly what the proposed cut would hit—approximately $3,000,000. That project has not only paid for itself, but it has paid all interest and maintenance charges, and the Government has collected from the people who have moved into the area because of the project more than $12,000,000 in taxes. The project has provided more than 13,000 people with their livelihood.

That project came under the fire of the economy-minded when cuts were proposed, as did all our dams, which impound millions of acres of water flowing into the sea from the Columbia River. I remember that a number of years ago, when I was a Member of the House, a similar economy wave was in progress. We could not find out where the cuts were to be made. With respect to the Grand Coulee Dam and other dams, as well as various reclamation projects, we were asked, "What are you going to do with the power?"

The same kind of fight was waged as the Senator from Oregon is waging today. We built the Grand Coulee Dam. We built the Bonneville project. On the Columbia River we integrated the greatest power pool in the history of the world. We created TVA; and if we had not had the foresight to do that—the same foresight which the Senator from Oregon is exhibiting here today—we would not have had the atomic bomb or even half the necessary aluminum to build airplanes to fight World War II.

As the Senator from Oregon has well said, we are asked, "What are you going to do with the power?" In the Pacific Northwest prospective users of power are standing in line. Time and time again I have said to those who I thought should understand the situation, "Let us have economy in Government; let us cut where we can; but where are we going to cut?" The only answer I have ever received was, "We will cut the military. They can stand it. We will also cut some of the popular projects."

The Senator from Oregon and I, and others who have grown up in the development of the Pacific Northwest and who are familiar with its great conservation projects and great power potentials, know what is meant when "popular projects" are mentioned. It means projects which would create wealth for the Nation and afford it an opportunity, at least in that area, to obtain revenue with which to pay off the tremendous burden of debt.

Like the Senator from Oregon, until I can get some inkling as to where the cuts are to be made, I am constrained to vote as he will vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I was downtown today and had my eyes examined. Drops were placed in them, so that I cannot see very well. As I have gazed toward the other side of the aisle and listened during the progress of this debate it has seemed to me that there are many Herbert Hoovers sitting over there. Perhaps my ears have unduly influenced my eyesight in this case. However, I know that the voice which spoke up from that side a while ago was not the voice of Hoover or the voice of his ghost, or the voice of any of his stand-ins or stooges.

I entirely agree with the Senator from Oregon in what he says as to the path being followed by the majority of the Congress. Of course, the minority must go along with the majority. We may fight back, but we are all in the same boat. That path will lead to the same disastrous end which overtook this country in 1929.

It has been clearly pointed out that the only places where there will be room for cuts in the budget will be in connection with such items as our reclamation projects in the West, flood control projects, and public works of that nature. It has been pointed out that such projects cannot be considered governmental expenses in the ordinary sense of the word. They are self-liquidating. The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] brought that out very clearly.

In my State we have what is known as the Anderson Ranch project. Already the wave of economy which has swept the Congress has affected that project, which is nearing completion. It would irrigate many acres of land and provide good farm homes for veterans. It would produce a great deal of electric energy, the market for which is waiting, as the Senator from Washington has pointed out. Because of the economy wave, work on the Anderson Ranch Dam has been discontinued. The machinery will be taken away, the workers will be discharged; and some day, after a depression has overtaken us and the Democrats have got back into power and we have decided to develop our country and see that people have jobs, we shall resume that project, bring the machinery back, and hire more men, which will cost many millions of extra dollars. That is poor economy, in my estimation, Mr. President. I say that inasmuch as it has not been pointed out to my satisfaction where there can be any cuts, except at the expense of the West, in self-liquidating projects, I am going to stand by the President of the United States. I shall not have an opportunity to vote for his budget, but I shall have an opportunity to vote against the proposed cuts in the budget; and that is my intention.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, during the closing moments of this debate on the amendment of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] reference has been made to economy as it relates to public works throughout the United States. It is not a question that affects the majority side only; it is a question that affects also the minority side. The first effort at balancing the budget came from the Democratic administration by reducing expenditures on public works. When the Congress adjourned on August 2 of last year, the President of the United States issued a curtailment order, which was published on the following day, which cut expenditures for public works by $900,000,000—almost a billion dollars.

That curtailment affected irrigation and reclamation projects in the West. It affected river and harbor improvements throughout the United States. It affected the construction of works for flood control throughout the Nation.

The reaction against that curtailment order of the President was far reaching, much more far reaching than many Senators realize. I happen to know, because at that time I was acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce, which had charge of flood control and river and harbor legislation and I was also chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The letters and telegrams which I received from people and organizations interested in reclamation, flood control, and river and harbor work constitute a tremendous file in my office.

The Mississippi Valley Control Association was the first to meet. It met on September 20 under a call which originated with the able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and was endorsed by the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and by myself as acting chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Hundreds of us met, including people from all over the United States, and a resolution was unanimously adopted protesting against this curtailment of funds for river improvement.

Those interested in irrigation in the West met in Omaha and adopted a similar resolution. The Mississippi Valley Association met and adopted a similar resolution. The members of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress viewed the order of limitation with alarm.

Mr. President, in my humble judgment there were perhaps—I shall not say definitely—sufficient votes changed in the last election to turn what might have been a Democratic Senate into a Republican Senate, because of resentment at the cut in public works funds.

I hope that the majority party will profit by the error which was committed by the present administration. I am not blaming the President. I do not think the President of the United States had sufficient time to give the matter his personal thought and attention. He was ill-advised when he took the step which he took. I warned the Republican Party against duplicating that error. If they do duplicate the error, they may suffer 2 years hence the same fate that the Democratic Party suffered in 1946.

Mr. President, there are vastly more people than one would surmise interested in the protection of our valleys against disastrous floods. There are many more people than one would generally suppose, without making any study of it, who are interested in the improvement of inland waterway navigation and the improvement of our harbors. There are vastly more people who are interested in building up the waste lands of the West and turning those arid lands into lands of productivity than one would generally think.

It has been my opportunity to make a rather thorough study of this whole question. It has come up many times before me as chairman of subcommittees—dealing with the proposed Missouri Valley Authority, and in the authorization of projects for irrigation, flood control, navigation, and the generation of electric power with multi-purpose dams in the West. I know the vital interest which the people take in the subject. When appropriations for irrigation projects in the West are cut the potential wealth of the Nation is thereby reduced, as is also the income which eventually flows therefrom into the Public Treasury through the process of taxation.

When improvements in inland waterways and seaboard harbors are curtailed, the commerce of the United States, both inland and foreign, is affected, and thereby the Treasury of the United States.

When floods are allowed to run riot through our valleys, crops and property are destroyed, the income from which would add largely to the income of our Nation.

Mr. President, have we forgotten the great floods which have swept down our valleys in recent years? Have we forgotten the great flood which swept down the Ohio Valley in 1937, with its tremendous loss of life and property? Have we forgotten the great flood which swept down the Mississippi Valley in 1927, when 214 lives were destroyed, when lands in seven States covering 18,000 square miles—almost equal to the combined area of Vermont and New Hampshire—were inundated not only for days, but for weeks; when 600,000 persons were left homeless; when the aggregate property damage was in excess of $300,000,000; when operations on our transcontinental railroads east and west through the lower Mississippi Valley were interrupted for days or for weeks, and at one time every railroad with the exception of one had to cease operating?

Mr. President, what occurred in the Ohio Valley, what occurs biennially in the Missouri River Valley, what occurred in 1927 in the lower Mississippi Valley, can recur at any time. It seems to me that when we are thinking about reducing the budget, we should take these heavy disasters into consideration.

As I said the other day, I am surprised that when the joint committee made its report it pointed out that a so-called splendid opportunity for saving lies in reducing the appropriations for our public works—not only the appropriations for flood control, irrigation, and rivers and harbors, but appropriations for public roads. Such a reduction would not be a saving. It would be an unsound economy. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote for the Millikin amendment; and if and when it is adopted, as I expect it will be, then I shall vote against the joint resolution as amended.

I understand that the President himself cut the budget estimates by $5,000,000,000 before the budget was sent to Congress. It cannot stand a further cut of $6,000,000,000. Such a cut will not be lived up to. The leadership of the majority party should know that we are not going to make a $6,000,000,000 cut and a 20 percent reduction in income taxes. That cannot be done and will not be done, and I will not cast my vote to reflect such an unsound doctrine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Overton
Bricker	Holland	Pepper
Bridges	Ives	Reed

Gurney	Morse
Hatch	Murray

Mr. HATCH. My colleague the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and will be all afternoon. Perhaps I should say that he has had a long-standing engagement with his dentist. I am quite sure it is a very painful one, and one which could not be broken; and he has had to remain absent. Later, as the votes are taken, I shall announce his position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I am informed that if the Senator from New York were present and voting he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when Mr. TOBEY's name was called). I am authorized to say that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily absent, and that if present and voting he would vote "yea" on the pending amendment.

Mr. LANGER (when Mr. YOUNG's name was called). I am authorized to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on State business, and that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. In connection with the announcement made by the majority leader in respect to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], I wish to say that I arranged for a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire, who, if present, would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. HATCH. As previously announced, my colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained. I am authorized to say that if present and voting he would vote "yea" on the pending amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is absent because of illness, has a pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], who is necessarily absent. If the Senator from New Jersey were present and voting he would vote "yea." If the Senator from South Dakota were present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on State business. If present and voting the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS. I am authorized to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who is necessarily absent, would, if present and voting, vote "yea."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] is absent on official business. If present and voting he would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent. If he were present he would vote "nay."

I announce further that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] is detained on public business.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—51

So Mr. MILLIKIN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, at this time I desire to offer an amendment as follows, to insert at the end of the concurrent resolution the following new sentence:

It is the futher judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $3,000,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, if ever there was a time when the Congress and the American people needed to take stock of the Nation's fiscal affairs, that time is now. I wish to call to the attention of the Senate what has been noted many times heretofore today, and during the course of the debate, namely, the tremendous increase in the Federal public debt. Today it stands at $259,000,000,000. The interest on the debt alone amounts to more than $5,000,000,000. This interest item alone is greater than the total peacetime expenditures of the Federal Government for any year up to 1933.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that in 1930 the debt stood at $16,000,000,000, in 1940 at $42,000,000,000, and today it stands at $259,000,000,000. In relatively good years, as a matter of sound fiscal policy, we must reduce the debt.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that during the history of the United States since 1792 through 1946 in 93 years the Federal Government had an excess of receipts over expenditures, while in 62 years operations of the government resulted in a deficiency.

A few days ago the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] read us the farewell message of George Washington. I remind the Senate of one paragraph from that message which means as much today as it did the day it was issued by the first President of the United States. It is as follows:

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear.

I remind the Senate of the requirements of the Reorganization Act which the Congress passed last year.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a very slight addition?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator mind saying also that the next succeeding sentence after what he has read says, "The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives."

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator.

We heard a great deal of discussion in the early part of the session regarding the spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act, but it seems to me that the joint committee in submitting the type of report it did, and without providing for a specific reduction in the Federal debt, violated not only the spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act but the language of the act, as well. I quote from section 138, page 24, of Public Law 601:

If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such reports shall be made by February 15.

I call attention to the language used by the committee reporting to the two Houses of the Congress of the United States. Here is how the committee discharged its obligation under section 138 of the La Follette-Monroney Act:

The committee recommends that a portion of the excess of receipts over expenditures be applied to the public debt.

I submit to Senators that a portion of the excess of the receipts over the expenditures could be anything from $1 to $6,000,000,000, and means absolutely nothing.

I also call attention to the fact that the debt is now 180 percent of the national income. Two years ago, for the first time in the history of our country, our debt exceeded the national income. Certainly it is time that we and the country stopped, looked, and listened.

In May 1920 the second Liberty Loan 4½-percent bonds sold on the New York Stock Exchange at 81.10. At that price the bonds were selling to yield more than 7½ percent to the call date. That has happened in recent American history. I point out that we, responsible to the people of the Nation, have no greater obligation to the country than to maintain the solvency and credit of the Federal Government.

Five times in our national history we have incurred great public debts because of war expenditures. After each war many persons thought the debts were so huge that we would never be able to pay them off or to reduce them greatly. This has not been true in the four previous instances. After the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812, the debt was liquidated by January 1835. By that date the debt was entirely paid off; and I might say that, in a spirit of optimism, the surplus in the Treasury was then distributed to the several States.

The Civil War debt was never liquidated. However, by 1893 the debt of $2,675,000,000 had been cut down to $839,000,000, or about one-third of its peak. At that point it was 7 percent of that year's national income, compared to our present debt, which is 181 percent of the national income.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to yield at this point for an interruption?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Civil War debt probably would have been paid off entirely except for the fact that a large portion of it was used as the basis for what was called the "national-bank currency"; otherwise, I am sure it would have been liquidated.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is very likely so.

In World War I the debt reached a peak of $25,482,034,419, and by 1931 was reduced to $16,801,000,000.

I call attention to the fact that the World War I debt at its peak was just one-tenth as great as our present debt; yet, in each of the years 1919–20, 1923–24, 1926–27, we paid more than $1,000,000,000 on the national debt, and in all the years from 1920 to 1930 we paid substantial sums on the Federal debt.

The per capita debt today amounts to $1,981 for each man, woman, and child in our country. This sum, based on the average number in each family, is equivalent to a Federal public debt on each family in the United States of $7,009. The per capita figure of $1,981 compares with a per capita debt of $15 in 1810, $78 in 1865, and $240 in 1919.

It is generally recognized that the debt has a material effect on the supply of money, which in itself is an inflationary factor. The dollar supply in our country today—currency, bank deposits, savings accounts—is $163,200,000,000, or $93,300,000,000 greater than before the war. This is an all-time high.

In 1920 the dollar supply, as I have indicated, amounted to thirty-nine and one-half billion dollars. In 1929 it amounted to $54,700,000,000. In 1933 it amounted to $40,900,000,000. In 1940 it amounted to $69,900,000,000, and as of the present time it amounts to $163,200,000,000.

The amendment I have offered provides that not less than $3,000,000,000 shall be paid on the public debt. Based on estimates of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], this is one-half of the estimated receipts over expenditures for the coming year.

I disagree most emphatically with the theory that tax reduction should come ahead of debt reduction. If we have an excess of only $3,000,000,000 of receipts over disbursements then I say that sound business judgment, sound fiscal policy, and our obligation to the Nation, require that all the $3,000,000,000 be applied to the Federal public debt. Even with payments of $3,000,000,000 a year it would take more than 86 years to retire the Federal public debt.

If there is an excess of receipts over expenditures amounting to more than $3,000,000,000, my amendment would not prevent the Congress, if in its judgment it deemed it wise to give some tax relief, to make provision to do so. It merely provides that a minimum of $3,000,000,000 shall be applied to the Federal public debt.

Mr. President, I do not recognize the authority of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House to speak for the Republican Party or for the Nation when he says that there should be a flat 20 percent tax reduction across the board. Certainly until we know better as to what the national income will be during the next year, certainly until we know far more than we know today as to whether or not the Appropriations Committees of this and the other House of Congress and whether the two Houses of Congress themselves will be able to make the various estimated reductions, it would not be sound business policy or sound fiscal policy to start making tax reductions. After we have finally passed the appropriation bills, when we have seen whether or not we are to make the savings we hope we are going to be able to make, after we have prudently made provision for a reduction in the huge Federal public debt, then I say it will be the time for the Congress of the United States to examine the situation. If in the judgment of Congress at that time it is wise and sound and sensible to make a tax reduction, my amendment would not prevent such a reduction being made.

Mr. President, I do not believe the Congress of the United States will be faced with a more serious problem during the entire period of our service here. Certainly it is essential that we maintain a solvent Federal Government and a sound fiscal policy. The future of the American people is wrapped up in our doing this, for if we fail the entire national economy can be undermined. But even more important than that, Mr. President, the American Republic today is one of the last great stabilized citadels in the world, and if we permit the foundation of our Nation to be undermined by loose fiscal policy we may jeopardize western civilization as we know it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from California will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the concurrent resolution it is proposed to insert the following new sentence:

It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $3,000,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. BREWSTER obtained the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. TAFT. I move that in the amendment just offered by the Senator from California the figure "3" be stricken and the figure "1" be inserted in its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California striking out the figure "3" and substituting the figure "1."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I assume that under the unanimous consent agreement I, having spoken once, will not be privileged to speak on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Chair's view the Senator from California can be recognized on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I have an amendment which is printed and is now on the desk. I move that my amendment which is now on the desk be substituted for the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's motion is not in order at the present time.

THE PALESTINE SITUATION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I want to divert from the discussion of the pending question briefly because of what seems to me to be the importance of a certain situation which arose yesterday when the Foreign Secretary of Great Britain, addressing himself to the situation in Palestine, made certain very serious charges directed principally at the President of the United States and his good faith, but involving necessarily an attack upon the good faith of both parties and most Members of the Congress in the action we have taken. I refer to the quotation from the speech of Mr. Bevin in Parliament yesterday when he said:

I do not want to set one section of Jews against the other, but those trained in England under English customs and practices wanted to come in (to a British-sponsored Arab-Jewish conference), but the Jewish Agency, largely dominated by New York, would not really come in, and it was with the gentlemen from there that I had to deal so much.

I am sure that those of Jewish ancestry in New York will appreciate the implication that they are not trained in England under English customs and practices, but in America under American customs and practices.

Mr. Bevin goes on:

I really must point out that in international affairs I cannot settle things if my problem is made the subject of local elections. I hope I am not saying anything to cause bad feeling in the United States, but I feel so intense about this. * * *

The statement (of the President of the United States) was issued, however—

This was over the objection of Mr. Bevin—and the whole thing was spoiled.

That is the end of the quotation of Mr. Bevin referring to the appeal of the President of the United States for the admission of 100,000 Jews into Palestine, made last August.

I point out that this amazing statement of Mr. Bevin as Foreign Minister regarding Palestine reveals apparently the workings of a deeply distressed conscience. In seeking a sacrificial goat in America, however, Mr. Bevin looks too far afield.

There should be honor even among politicians. Mr. Bevin should tell his constituency that his difficulties stem not from American politicians but from his own Labor Party.

It is for Mr. Bevin and his comrades to determine what were their motivations in December 1944 and April 1945 when the annual conference of the Labor Party and the national executive committee of the Labor Party on the eve of the British elections declared for the very policy which is now so scathingly condemned when urged by American officials.

The British Labor Party then declared "there is an irresistible case for"—letting "the Jews, if they wish, enter Palestine in such numbers as to become a majority."

Here is no question of 100,000, for which the President and others in America have asked, but for unlimited immigration. As a matter of fact, to accomplish the majority which is suggested would have required the immigration of between 500,000 and 600,000 Jews. It was that for which the Labor Party declared in its considered election appeal.

The British Labor Party went on to declare "moreover we should seek to win the full sympathy and support of both the American and Russian Governments for the execution of this Palestine policy."

Apparently the British Labor Party was much more successful in securing support for this Palestine policy in America than in persuading the Foreign Minister, now representing the Labor Party in Parliament, to recognize the pledges made by his party before election.

Mr. Bevin indicts American politicians for making statements regarding Palestine before the American election that were considerably more moderate than the statements of the British Labor Party before the British election and charges this to politics. Will Mr. Bevin kindly advise the American people what was the motivation of the declarations of the British Labor Party regarding Palestine in the months immediately preceding the British election? And what were the motivations of Mr. Bevin in repudiating these pledges after the election and denouncing anyone who dared to take them seriously?

Is it possible that Rt. Hon. Herbert Stanley Morrison, present leader of the Labor Party in the British House of Commons, was right in his declaration in Parliament denouncing the white paper that "the Jews must be sacrificed to the Government's preoccupation with exclusively imperialist rather than human considerations."

That was the language used by Mr. Morrison, regarding a Conservative government; but the words are equally applicable to the repudiation by the Labor Party of its own pledges.

Either Americans do not understand the English language or the British Labor Party was firmly committed to a policy of admitting Jews to Palestine in far greater numbers than the present British Government will permit, reduced, as it is, to 1,500 a month.

Both political parties in the United States declared firmly in their national platforms in 1944 for the fulfillment of the mandate for Palestine in accordance with the terms of the Anglo-American Convention of 1924, and the Senate and House gave unanimous recognition to this obligation in their concurrent resolution of December 1945.

Is it possible that party pledges before election are taken more seriously in the United States than in Great Britain? The record of the British Labor Party and particularly of its leaders, Mr. Atlee and Mr. Bevin, in respect to Palestine does not seem to be a happy one.

For the benefit of the RECORD and the country I wish to read at this time the resolution adopted by the British Labor Party in December 1944:

Here we halted half way, irresolutely, between conflicting policies. But there is surely neither hope nor meaning in a Jewish national home unless we are prepared to let the Jews, if they wish, enter this tiny land in such numbers as to become a majority.

That means the immigration of more than 500,000 of the displaced Jews of Europe into Palestine.

There was a strong case for this before the war, and there is an irresistible case for it now, after the unspeakable atrocities of the cold-blooded calculated German-Nazi plan to kill all the Jews in Europe. There is a strong case here, based on human grounds, for promoting stable settlement on the one hand, and for the transfer of population on the other hand. Let the Arabs be encouraged to move out as the Jews move in. Let them be compensated handsomely for their land, and their settlement elsewhere be carefully organized and generously financed.

The way the British Government, pledged to facilitate the settlement of the Jews upon the land, has facilitated that settlement is by a law prohibiting Arabs from transferring land to Jews, in deliberate defiance of the very resolution from which I read.

I continue reading from the resolution:

The Arabs have many wide territories of their own; they should not seek to exclude the Jews from this small area of Palestine, which is less than the size of Wales. Indeed, we should reexamine the possibility of extending the present boundaries of Palestine by agreement with Egypt, Syria, or Transjordan. Moreover, we should seek to win the full sympathy and support of both American and Russian Governments for the execution of this Palestine policy.

Later, in April 1945, 2 months before the British election, a resolution on Palestine was adopted by the National Executive Committee of the Labor Party in these words:

The committee reaffirms the policy accepted by the Annual Conference in December 1944, in regard to Palestine.

That refers to the resolution from which I previously read.

It, therefore, calls upon the British Government to remove the present unjustifiable barriers on immigration and to announce without delay proposals for a future Palestine, in which it has the full sympathy and support of the American and Russian Governments.

Yet, Mr. Bevin, as Foreign Minister, has the audacity to denounce the President of the United States and other American officials because they dare to declare for a far more moderate policy than was proposed in the executive committee's resolution 2 months before Mr. Bevin was placed in power.

It seems to me that these resolutions constitute an adequate answer to any suggestion from Mr. Bevin as to the political responsibility of American public officials, without regard to party. I can only hope that the British Government will recognize its own tradition and will soon restore that responsibility which we are entitled to expect from a great government of a great nation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish very briefly to comment upon the statement made yesterday by the British Foreign Minister, which seems to me to be most unfortunate. I do not desire to inject myself into the internal politics of Great Britain, but in view of what seems to be his attack upon the President, in the charge that England had practically settled the Palestine question when the President, in October last year, reiterated his request that 100,000 Jews be permitted to enter Palestine, it seems to me that it is not out of order for a moment to call the attention of the Senate to what has happened with regard to this matter as between our Government, the British Government, and the Jewish population generally.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I know the Senator wishes to be accurate. It seems to me it is a little more accurate, as well as considerate, to point out that the President's statement was made on August 31, 1945, a considerably longer time before the election. I think that perhaps has some significance.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was not the first statement that the President had made about it. Nearly a year before he had suggested to the Prime Minister of Great Britain that 100,000 Jews be permitted to go at once to Palestine, and his statement, whether in August or October, was a mere reiteration of his previous request to which my friend has referred.

Mr. BREWSTER. The point I wished to make was that the President's original statement was made on August 31, 1945, 14 months before the election.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; I thank the Senator for the correction. I was approximately correct when I said the President had originally made a statement concerning the matter about a year before the one made in October, to which the British Foreign Minister referred. So certainly the statement made by the President in his communication to the British Prime Minister in August 1945, could not have been predicated upon any idea that it would have an effect upon an election in 1946, which is the substance of the charge made by Mr. Bevin against the President of the United States.

Mr. President, we are all familiar with the history of this situation. We are all familiar with the fact that the Balfour declaration was issued in 1917, in the midst of World War I. While that declaration did not specifically promise the creation of a Jewish state, it did set forth specifically that Palestine should become the Jewish homeland. Between that time and the date of the mandate under the League of Nations, which, I think, was in 1922—I may be inaccurate as to that—the suggestion had taken root, not only in the minds of Jews all over the world, but in the minds of all just people everywhere. It had so taken root that it was incorporated in the preamble of the mandate under which the British Government was to control Palestine. Operating under that, the Jewish population of Palestine increased from approximately 50,000 in 1917 to more than 600,000 in 1939.

It was in 1939 that the British white paper was issued, cutting off all immigration, except that for the succeeding 5 years a total of 75,000 persons might be permitted to go to Palestine; and at the end of that time further immigration would be entirely terminated. The purchase of land for the settlement of Jews was likewise restricted to about 5 percent of the available land in Palestine.

At the time when the white paper was issued it was denounced by very great statesmen in the British Parliament, including Mr. Churchill himself. In 1939, at the time when it was issued, he denounced it as a violation of the Balfour declaration, which in the meantime had been endorsed by the Congress of the United States and by every President of the United States from Woodrow Wilson to Franklin D. Roosevelt, regardless of politics or party. After various negotiations and efforts to work out something toward the solution of this problem so that there might be greater migration of displaced Jews from the distressed areas of Europe, the British Government finally agreed to allow 1,500 a month, which amounts to 18,000 a year, to go to Palestine.

It was in view of the entire situation, as well as the fact that out of all the Jewish population in Europe there remained only about 1,400,000, many of whom were wandering over the face of the earth, that the President of the United States made the very modest suggestion that 100,000 be permitted to go to Palestine. That has been a matter of negotiation ever since, and it has not been possible to reach an agreement to that effect. In view of the far more liberal platform in the program of the Labor Party in 1945, when it went before the British people criticizing the government of the Conservative Party in connection with its program for Palestine, in which they promised the Jews of their country and the Jews of every other country in the world that they would honor the Balfour Declaration, and in view of their campaign speeches in which they criticized the white paper of 1939, it seems almost astonishing that after the British Government has turned the matter over to the United Nations, or has sought to do so, the Foreign Minister of the British Government should criticize the President of the United States by charging him, in effect, with a cheap political trick, that of bringing this matter to the attention of the American people on the verge of an election in order that votes might be won, when, as a matter of fact, the President of the United States had made an earnest and sincere request, 14 months prior to that, to which he had received no satisfactory response.

I regret that, whether as a result of frustration or for any other reason, the British Foreign Minister has seen fit to criticize the President of the United States for merely reiterating what had been, for more than a year, a very modest request on his part that relief might be afforded distressed Jews in Europe. I certainly hope that our neighbor and friend, the British Government, for whom this Nation has gone a long way in order to aid them in solving their military, economic, and social problems, will seek to bring about a just settlement, whether by the United Nations or, as suggested in the statement yesterday, by further private negotiations between the British Government and the Jews or the Arabs, and that there may be a more rapid and firm approach to the settlement of this problem. All nations which have an interest in it have offered some contribution to the solution of the problem because of its effect upon the peace of the world and the tranquil settlement of matters which pertain not only to Europe and America, but to the Middle East and all the sections affected thereby.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Not only that, but when the President made his request Great Britain recognized the joint responsibility of the two countries and appointed the Anglo-American Commission which recommended exactly what the President had requested.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. It was unanimously recommended by both the British and American representatives on the Commission; and it seems peculiarly unfortunate that the British Foreign Minister should now seek to put the President of the United States in an attitude in which he is not properly represented, by making it appear that the President of the United States made a suggestion urging the movement into Palestine of 100,000 Jews immediately before an election in the United States, which, in my judgment, is an unfair implication against the President of our country. I say that regardless of the political party to which he belongs. There has been no politics among us in this matter, either in the Senate or in the country. All of us have joined in endorsing the Balfour Declaration and in criticizing the restrictive provisions of the white paper, and in endorsing the President's request for the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews into Palestine.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to join in what has been said here. All of us remember the President's request was joined in by the British delegation and by the Jews and the Arabs.

Now, the President has said this:

> Many people have said that the way out of the difficulty was partition. But I am sure if we agreed to partition we would have 10 times the row as to where the frontiers should be. But you cannot make two viable states of Palestine, however you try. You can make one viable state.

So the British Government has repeatedly repudiated the whole basis on which it was negotiating a peaceful settlement with the Jewish agency.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

I think it is correct to state that in all the discussion which has taken place in the Senate and in the executive departments and in all other official circles in the United States, aspersion has never been cast upon the heads of the British Government. Sometimes we have disagreed with them with respect to their policy and we have hoped that the policy might be modified; but never so far as I recall has there been cast upon the heads of the British Government any aspersion or anything which might be regarded as being within the improprieties with respect to disagreement or criticism; and in the consideration of this problem—which is more than a British problem or a Jewish problem, for it is a problem which faces the entire Christian world, the entire civilized world—no solution is reached by having anyone in high station, no matter where, make criticism of the President of the United States with regard to it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think what the Senator has said is correct, and I think the comment which has been made by Americans regarding the position of British officials on this matter has in large measure been confined to quoting their own statements made at various times. Mr. Churchill has denounced the white paper; Mr. Morrison, the leader of the House of Commons, has denounced it at various times. Certainly a quotation of their own language cannot be considered as reflecting upon them or upon the course they have taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course.

Mr. President, in arriving at a settlement of this matter which will be permanent and just, I think there must be tolerance all around. The problem is a difficult one. All of us recognize that to be so. In our discussions we recognize it. It seems to me that the correct approach to the proper and humane settlement of this problem is to try to reach an understanding among the responsible governments that are interested, and in this case to try to work out a solution which will be just to the Jews as well as to the Arabs and all the rest of mankind who are interested in seeing that that area shall not again become a focus of disagreement and controversy and friction which might again result in armed conflict all over the world.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator whether he sees this picture as I see it? It seems to me there are two phases to the problem we are discussing. One is that at the present time the Jews desire to have access to Palestine. The other question it seems to me, can very well go to the United Nations for consideration and settlement. Does the Senator from Kentucky agree with me as to that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I think that as a matter of justice, as well as a matter of human mercy, the 100,000 Jews whom the President now requests, as he requested more than a year and a half ago, be admitted to Palestine should have been permitted to go there long ago. There is now plenty of room for them there, and more. There may be international phases of the ultimate settlement of the whole mid-Eastern question which can well be put off to the deliberations of the United Nations; but I agree with the Senator that the admission to Palestine of 100,000 Jews, which matter has been under discussion for about a year and a half—if that is what the Senator from New Jersey has in mind—should have been permitted, and that now they should be allowed to enter Palestine.

Mr. HAWKES. In other words, when people are dying or are without homes and are anxious to find homes, they are not interested in having the matter referred to an agency which will take 6 or 8 months even to begin to go into the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; there is very little consolation for displaced Jews who are without homes and decent places in which to live, to be told that six or eight months from now the United Nations will begin to consider the question of permitting some of them to enter Palestine.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to read into the RECORD a reference which I think will be of interest because it relates to the stand which Winston Churchill, whom all of us respect and admire, took on this question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. First, let me say that ultimately I am in favor of having the Palestine question referred to the United Nations and handled by the United Nations as the world agency. If the Jewish people cannot get a square deal there, then I ask what hope is there for any other minority group to get a square deal from the United Nations?

The question I am talking about today does not deal with the establishment of a commonwealth, nor does it go into any of the intricacies of the situation which have developed in Palestine.

Today I am talking about only one thing, and it is a great, immediate problem. Why should not the Jewish people be allowed to go into Palestine at a rate sufficient to bring up the deficiency of entries within the very near future to the point where they would have been if the war had not interrupted the whole procedure?

The British people made an agreement known as the Balfour agreement. That agreement was approved by our Nation and Congress and by 51 other nations. It was a sacred agreement, and it was made after calm and careful deliberation of all the issues bearing on the problem. Mr. Chamberlain saw fit to change that agreement in an effort of appeasement, which has ended as nearly all efforts of appeasement and compromise with principle are bound to end. I wish to record here that in speaking for the Jewish people, I am speaking as I would for any minority group which had been mistreated under an agreement such as the Balfour agreement and the British mandate.

Mr. President, there was one individual who stood closer to this incident than any of us—one whose words spoken at that hour are, I believe, worthy of our attention today. Winston Churchill, in a speech in the House of Commons during the debate on the white paper, on May 22, 1939, said:

> I regret very much that the pledge of the Balfour Declaration, endorsed as it has been by successive governments, and the conditions under which we obtained the mandate, have both been violated by the Government's proposals. There is much in this white paper which is alien to the spirit of the Balfour Declaration * * * it is a plain breach of a solemn obligation. I am astonished that my right honorable friend, the Prime Minister—> of all others, and at this moment above all others, should have lent himself to this new and sudden default.

Mr. President, I have no sympathy with a policy of appeasement such as that which was inauguarated by Mr. Chamberlain on May 17, 1939. Winston Churchill, who has served the British Empire as few men have been able to do in its history, and who now is rendering great service to that nation, has denounced this white paper decree. I am glad he has made such a direct and positive statement on the subject. I shall repeat several things from the statement he made in the House of Commons on May 22, 1939. He said:

> I should feel personally embarrassed in the most acute manner if I lent myself, by silence or inaction, to what I must regard as an act of repudiation.

Very meaningful was Mr. Churchill's statement on May 22, in referring to the 5 years covered by the British white paper in the following words:

> Long before those 5 years are past—

He was referring to the 5 years ending March 31, 1944—> either there will be a Britain which knows how to keep its word on the Balfour Declaration and is not afraid to do so, or, believe me, we shall find ourselves relieved of many oversea responsibilities other than those comprised within the Palestine Mandate.

Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Kentucky permit me to say one more word on this matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but first let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that the statement of Mr. Churchill's which he has just read is the one to which I was referring a moment ago when I said that in 1939 Mr. Churchill had denounced the white paper.

Mr. HAWKES. I realize that; and inasmuch as I happened to have in my possession a copy of what Mr. Churchill said at that time, I thought it pertinent to read it into the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to say, further, that our great Nation should do everything within its power to press the British people to fulfill the spirit and the word of the Balfour agreements at once, while we are waiting for the United Nations to assume the task of straightening out all the various problems involved in the Palestine situation.

That is all I am asking today. There are hundreds of thousands of displaced Jewish people waiting, hoping, and praying for a chance to go into Palestine. If we do not listen to their prayers and do what is right and just without unnecessary delay, then I ask why should the world have the hope which I have in the ability of civilization banded together in the United Nations to make and keep agreements in the future. There will always be difficulties in fulfilling agreements. There can be no credit to anyone who keeps only the agreements which either are easy to keep or are of advantage to him. The important thing in keeping an agreement is to keep it for the sake of principle, regardless of whether the agreement works temporarily to one's advantage or disadvantage.

Mr. President, the Jewish people in the State of New Jersey have the entire New Jersey congressional delegation back of their plea for the immediate entrance of 100,000 Jewish people into Palestine. Where do the other States stand, and how soon are we going to give this just relief to the Jewish people of the world?

Mr. President, we are fighting to build a United Nations that will bring peace to the world. We are fighting to establish the fact that the human family has a sense of obligation to keep its agreements. Although I am not in favor of giving the Jews any better treatment than is accorded other minority groups, yet I am in favor of establishing equity as between all peoples. At this hour in the history of the world, I do not believe there is anything more important than keeping sacred all agreements, once they are made. The one to which we have been referring not only was made, but it was approved by the Congress of the United States and by 51 other nations throughout the world.

I thank the Senator from Kentucky for yielding to me.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. To add to the proof regarding how nonpolitical the matter is and has been, and how unfounded the present charge is, let me say that for a long time this subject has been covered by statements in the platforms of both political parties in the United States. Let me also say that long before October the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the distinguished former Senator from Iowa, Mr. Gillette, and myself called upon President Truman at the White House, and at that time he reiterated the same statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. This has been the position of our Government ever since any of us here have been in public office. Everyone knew about it. It is a consistent policy, it is a consistent principle, which goes all the way back to World War I. What I cannot understand about the statement of the British Foreign Minister yesterday is that it seems to be based upon the idea that he thinks Mr. Truman never thought of this matter until just before the last election, and that he thought of it on that account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word or two. I first want to express profound regret that the Right Honorable Ernest Bevin, Foreign Minister of the United Kingdom, had cause to make the statement credited to him in the daily press. I also want to take advantage of this occasion to say a few words in commendation of what has appeared to be latterly a trend in British foreign policy, which I heartily approve. I was anxious to avail myself of the first opportunity to make that statement, because my colleagues know that I have not always thought that British foreign policy was in accord with the trends and the currents of the time; but the recent announcement of the British Government that it was giving to the people of India at a fixed time the responsibility for their own independence; that it was evacuating Egypt; that it was giving independence to the people of Burma and was referring to the United Nations the Palestine question, heartened me immeasurably at the trend of events. Since I have on occasion found some question about British colonial policy, I did want to say that this was, I thought, a commendable course of the Labor Government and the Foreign Secretary, and I thought it was in accord with the sentiments generally of the people of our country. Therefore I regretted it all the more, Mr. President, when I saw from the press that the Foreign Secretary had attempted to put the onus of criticism upon the President of the United States and the Government of the United States in respect to the Palestine problem.

I agree with Mr. Sumner Welles in today's press in saying that the action of the British Government in referring the Palestine question to the United Nations is already a year late. I think it should have been done, as Mr. Welles said it should have been done, when the United Nations was created and established. It was a world problem, not a British problem, not just a problem of the Middle East. It affected Europe. It affected a people distributed all over the world, and, Mr. President, if our President erred, if our people have erred, it has been on the side of humanity. We have not tried to throw stones at, and place obstacles in the way of, the British mandate, but we have seen the wretched condition of those pitiful Jewish people in Europe, a wretched half million left out of a population of 6,000,000 before Hitler's persecution started, and we have said that surely at long last the feet of the Wandering Jew should find refuge in the foot tracks of his ancestors upon his old soil.

And, Mr. President, I think it could not have been expected by the British Government that the United States would employ its financial or other resources to support the mandate of a foreign power in a foreign land, even for a worthy objective. But, if it is a matter for the United Nations to discharge, we shall not shirk our responsibility, I believe, Mr. President. We shall do whatever that Organization may determine is the obligation of its members, and I believe our country will faithfully discharge its duties in respect to this matter.

Like other Senators on the floor, I have had a brief visit in Palestine. I have had no doubt but that that country could contain at least 100,000 more refugees than are there at the present time, especially with the help that they are getting from this country and from Britain and some other parts of the world.

I shall assume, of course, that these remarks of the British Foreign Secretary were uttered in good spirit and in good faith, but I do most earnestly hope that he will adhere to his announced purpose of putting this matter before the United Nations, where I feel it should be, letting it be solved by the United Nations, and then letting the United Nations take the course that it believes right. I am sure that the members of the United Nations, including, assuredly the United States, will then give their support to that declared policy, and that at long last we may not only avoid a threat to the peace of the world, but we may find a refuge for this pitiable people in the old lands of their ancestors.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I shall have to ask the Senator for what purpose, because I presume the limitation of debate is still on, and interruptions are taken out of my time.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I merely ask the Senator to yield in order that I may offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California so that his amendment will read, "It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not over $3,000,000,000 and not less than $1,000,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order at this time. The amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, at this time I should like to get an order for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment. Is the Senator speaking of his own amendment or the pending amendment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am referring to my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have not yet reached the point where the Senator can ask for that order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I understood that on the Millikin amendment there was an order for the yeas and nays from a prior day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order can be made now on the pending Taft amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. At this time I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending Taft amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to speak in behalf of the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], but before entering upon a discussion of that question I wish to say that on the last yea-and-nay vote, on the Millikin amendment, I voted "yea" in favor of reducing the President's budget by $4,500,000,000. I wish to say in connection with that vote that it was not cast because it appeared to me that those who favored slashing the President's budget had made out any kind of a case. On the contrary, in the few years I have been a Member of the Senate I think no proposition has ever been submitted to this body with so little concrete evidence to support it as is true of the concurrent resolution to cut $6,000,000,000 from the President's budget. Because no case whatever was made, either for the $4,500,000,000 or the $6,000,000,000 cut, I voted in favor of the $4,500,000,000 cut, simply as a choice between the lesser of what may well be two evils. I do not mean by that that I am not in favor of reducing the President's budget, that I am not in favor of reducing expenditures. On the contrary, I, in common with, I think, every other Member of Congress, favor reducing the expenditures in every possible legitimate and reasonable amount.

What those of us who voted as I have voted have asked is that information be furnished as to how and when the cuts can be made, and for the first time in the history of the Senate I think those who have proposed a resolution have steadfastly refused to give other Senators information and refused to say how or where the reductions can be made. We were asked to vote blindly, without knowledge, and, in my judgment, without reason.

It will not do to say, as has been attempted during the course of the debate, that those of us on this side of the Chamber are against reducing expenditures. An attempt was made to place such a tag upon us. But I call attention to the fact that during the whole course of the debate the only Senator who stood on the floor of the Senate and attempted to discuss intelligently the question of where and how expenditures could be reduced was the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. All others have said we must accept, without question, the blind, bald statement that the budget can be reduced. On such a proposition, or any other, I shall not accept statements which are unverified and unsupported.

Now as to the Knowland amendment, certainly if I could, I should be pleased to have the Senate adopt the amendment of the Senator from California, without amendment and without reservation. Certainly every cent we can apply toward the payment of the public debt should be so applied. As I understand his amendment, all it does is to provide that if receipts exceed expenditures the first $3,000,000,000 of the excess shall be applied on the debt. Is that the Senator's amendment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is the intent of the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. That is its intent.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I believe it accomplishes that objective, so far as we can do that in connection with the pending concurrent resolution.

Mr. HATCH. As a great American statesman said, "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience," and applying the experience of my own personal financial affairs, I know that the time for me to pay a debt is when I have the money. I also know that if I do as I have done, let the time pass when I have the money and do not pay the debt, I always regret it afterward. I see no difference in principle between the two situations, except that at this time, when our debt is very large, since it must be paid, we should begin payments at the earliest posible moment. We should do that before we grant relief even to the overburdened taxpayers of the country, by way of remitting or reducing taxes; because taxes can be paid—the country is prosperous, the people have the money, and now is the time to apply the excess on the debt.

I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from California will be adopted, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I had very much hoped, as I think other Senators had hoped, that we might conclude consideration of the pending resolution today. It is perfectly obvious that we cannot do so.

REPORT OF NATIONAL CAPITAL HOUSING AUTHORITY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1451.)

REPORT OF AIR COORDINATING COMMITTEE (H. DOC. NO. 148)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1451.)

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a short but very strong and vigorous statement prepared by Los Alamos Scientific Laboratories staff members. The statement is in support of the confirmation of the President's appointments to the Atomic Energy Commission, and of Mr. David E. Lilienthal as Chairman. There are several of the petitions, but they are identical. I ask that only one be printed in the RECORD, but that all the names follow it, and that the petition itself be referred to the committee considering the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the Senator consult the chairman and members of the Senate Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on the question of printing the names. The question arose in the committee itself this morning, and there was some question about disclosing all the names.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be glad to consult the chairman and withdraw my request at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is merely in respect to the names.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be referred to the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The undersigned staff members of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratories believe that the interests of this Nation and of international peace will be best served by prompt Senate confirmation of the President's appointments to the Atomic Energy Commission with Mr. David Lilienthal as its Chairman. This is for the following reasons:

1. Responsible people who have had actual contact with this country's work on atomic energy agree that Mr. Lilienthal and the members of the Commission are well equipped both by ability and experience to undertake this important work. By reason of Mr. Lilienthal's long and thorough study of all problems associated with atomic energy which culminated in the Acheson-Lilienthal report on the International Council of Atomic Energy he will contribute an informed and qualified leadership as chairman of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission.

2. During the negotiation of any international agreement it is necessary that the United States maintain its present position through continued research and development in the realm of atomic energy. This policy provides by its very nature for the continued security of the United States and in addition strengthens any future international authority since the United States would then be in a position to contribute to the authority's necessary role as the best informed agency in this field. Mr. Lilienthal has repeatedly emphasized his support of this view.

3. The Atomic Energy Act of 1946 provides that atomic energy be controlled by the people of the United States. Mr. Lilienthal, by virtue of his experience, is uniquely suited for the administration of such a public domestic control of atomic energy.

4. Finally, and most important, it is evident that to reopen at this time debate on the terms of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 would result in very serious and costly delay in the progress of work on atomic energy in the United States; and to withhold confirmation on the basis of partisan political consideration would cause dismay and confusion not only among the scientists of the atomic energy laboratories but also among those countries which look to the United States for stable leadership in this field based upon sound principles.

We therefore respectfully urge the immediate and unqualified confirmation by the Senate of the President's appointments.

(Signatures omitted.)

MR. LILIENTHAL'S TRAINING—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial entitled "Mr. Lilienthal's Training," published in the New York Times of February 13, 1947.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. LILIENTHAL'S TRAINING

When President Truman was trying to find a competent Chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission he turned to Chairman David E. Lilienthal, of the Tennessee Valley Authority. His reasoning was sound. TVA was the biggest civilian peacetime enterprise the Federal Government had ever undertaken. It was a training ground for a bigger enterprise. What do we want of the AEC? We want it to be nonpolitical. Under Chairman Lilienthal (as under Chairman Arthur E. Morgan and Chairman Harcourt A. Morgan) it has been absolutely nonpolitical. We think the case is proved that this is why Senator McKELLAR does not like Mr. Lilienthal. No politics, no patronage.

We want AEC to be efficient. Under Mr. Lilienthal TVA has mastered the Tennessee River with dams, built transmission lines, acquired 700,000 customers, made contracts with 138 municipal and cooperative systems, increased the average residential use of electricity in its area to 50 percent above the national average. TVA is a success.

We want AEC to control the dangerous uses of the split atom. We do not want it to set up a great centralized power. We do not want it to stifle business enterprise. Under Chairman Lilienthal TVA has stuck to the policy of decentralization. No law, except the law of falling water and the laws of electricity, chemistry, and physics, has been imposed upon the Tennessee Valley. Local initiative and local enterprise have been encouraged, not stifled. Great businesses have entered the valley since TVA came in, or have grown from smaller businesses. Hundreds of little enterprises have started and flourished.

We want national security. TVA has given that too. During the war TVA power fed into an interconnected system from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. It fed the aluminum mills, the chemical factories, the airplane factories in the valley itself. It fed the Oak Ridge atom plants from the generators of dams constructed in world-beating time. This was one kind of security. And no secrets—especially no secrets about the great atom fission plants—leaked out. This was another kind of security.

Mr. Lilienthal would not say that he alone, or chiefly, was responsible for TVA's moderation, good sense, efficiency, democratic policies, patriotism. But he would have had to bear the blame if these qualities had been violated. If politics is not the determining factor in the decision now facing the Senate, he will be confirmed, and so will his four associates and their general manager, Carroll Wilson.

FISCAL POLICIES OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials dealing with the fiscal policies of the Government; one appearing in the February 15, 1947, issue of Magazines of Industry, Inc., and the other in the Nashville Tennesseean of January 28, 1947.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Modern Industry magazine of February 15, 1947]

APPROPRIATIONS—THRIFT PINCHES LABOR-MANAGEMENT SERVICES, DEFENSE

While businessmen see a mild deflationary threat in the curtailment of Government spending, they are unanimous in welcoming the longer-range advantages of a smaller operating budget for Federal agencies.

This enthusiasm, however, needs to be tempered with wisdom and caution, for an overzealous Republican Congress can go too far unless it is counseled by men in business and industry.

At the present time at least two important areas of Government activity, bearing directly on industry, are threatened. One is the activity of the National Labor Relations Board, the other is essential research on military, naval, and air equipment.

NLRB is swamped with a backlog of more than 4,000 cases. Yet, both industry and labor depend on speedy settlements of disputes before that agency. Any further cut in funds for this service can have serious implications for manufacturers, may well lead to protest strikes by labor to speed up the decisions.

A far more serious threat to the whole country is the sharpshooting at our military budget. No doubt the military mind tends to disregard expense, and needs a certain amount of civilian checking up. But the only real strategic defense for this country lies in its technical superiority—both in equipment and trained personnel.

Until the UN becomes a strong central body with its own police force, military research cannot be curtailed sharply. It takes money and time to develop defenses for the new weapons, and to keep ahead in the weapons themselves.

Men in industry will want to play their part in cautioning Members of the Congress against slicing appropriations too thin for safety or at the cost of essential services.

[From the Nashville Tennesseean of January 28, 1947]

WHERE SPENDING IS ECONOMY

On April 5, 1946, an election was held among employees at the Werthan Bag Corp. under the Wagner Act. A petition objecting to the election was filed by district 50 of the UMW. More than 9½ months later, the National Labor Relations Board finally got around to hearing the petition and rendering a verdict.

This long lag between dispute and settlement is most unfortunate. But under existing conditions, it cannot be avoided by the NLRB. More and more cases are piling up. They will continue to grow as the unionization movement spreads over the South and West. The delay promotes labor unrest and breeds strikes.

In his budget message President Truman asked Congress to make a sharp increase in the funds allotted the NLRB so as to speed the process of disposing of complaints. The Wagner Act has resulted in a big reduction of organizational strikes. There would be a further reduction if Congress makes available the needed funds. It would be poor economy not to grant the money. The saving to both employers and employees in better labor conditions would by far offset the cost.

COURT-MARTIAL PROCEDURE IN THE ARMY

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter dated February 20, 1947, addressed to me by the Secretary of War, dealing with a subject which has been under much discussion during the past few years, that is, court-martial procedure in the Army. I ask that the letter be printed in full in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1947.

Hon. CHAN GURNEY,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: Immediately after the cessation of hostilities the War Department commenced a critical examination of the system of military justice in the Army with a view to improving the system in every way possible. Certain data and information had been compiled during the war, and this, together with other facts, were considered in connection with possible changes in the Articles of War and the Manual for Courts Martial. In order that the problem might be approached objectively and with the utmost possible judicial and legal skill, I requested the president of the American Bar Association, the Honorable Willis Smith, to designate a number of members of the American bench and bar for service on an advisory committee to conduct a survey of the system. The committee was appointed, under the chairmanship of Dean Arthur T. Vanderbilt, of New York University Law School, and after many months of painstaking and completely independent inquiry has submitted its report.

The War Department has given intensive study to the report of the advisory committee on military justice, and has given like study to a report on the judicial system of the Army submitted by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress in August 1946. The basic recommendations of the two committees do not differ widely. The War Department, in an effort to take advantage of the advice it has received and to improve its system of military justice by further insuring judicial fairness and military effectiveness, has reached certain conclusions which will, it is believed, be of interest to you at this time. As soon as it can be done and at an early date, the War Department will submit for your consideration a draft of a proposed bill amending the Articles of War to effect the changes deemed desirable.

In the meantime, I may state, for your information, that the recommendations by the War Department for changes will be substantially as appear below.

1. The Judge Advocate General's Department will be substantially enlarged through the appointment or detail of officers with legal education and training. Additional technical personnel, such as reporters and clerks, will be provided for the efficient operation of the system of military justice. The extent of the expansion in the Judge Advocate General's Department will be determined after further detailed study of availability of military personnel in the active Army and of the additional functions to be prescribed for the Judge Advocate General and his department.

2. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended and amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed to declare it improper and unlawful for any person to attempt to influence the action of a court martial in reaching its findings or sentence in a particular case or the action of an appointing or reviewing authority with respect to his acts. Adequate provision, however, will be made for the instruction of officers and enlisted personnel concerning the exercise of their duties in connection with courts martial. Provision will also be made for providing information to courts martial by appointing authorities as to general or special conditions in the particular command, including the prevalence of particular offenses, but with no communication about a particular pending case.

3. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended expressly to prohibit the reprimand of a court martial or any of its members with respect to court-martial action and to delete the present authorization for reviewing authorities to advise the members of courts martial by letters of nonconcurrence in acquittals or findings of not guilty and the reasons for such nonconcurrences. This change in the Manual will be so framed as to permit instruction of personnel in their duties and to permit the punishment by court-martial action or otherwise of personnel of courts martial who may in the exercise of their duties be guilty of any individual misconduct amounting to a violation of the Articles of War.

4. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended to clarify the obligation of courts martial to exercise their own judgment in imposing sentences and to forbid the courts, in reliance on the mitigating action of reviewing authorities, to impose sentences known to be excessive.

5. Amendments to the Articles of War will be proposed to make it a jurisdictional requirement that the law members of general courts martial be members of the Judge Advocate General's Department or trained lawyers designated by the Judge Advocate General and that the law members be present at the trials. Necessary changes in the Manual for Courts Martial will be made to clarify the duties and powers of law members. Rulings of law members will be final on all interlocutory legal matters other than those involving the issue of guilt or innocence and those in their nature requiring action by the full court such as challenges. The proposed amendments will include a requirement that when the trial judge advocate of a general court martial is a lawyer the defense counsel must also be a lawyer.

6. Amendments to the Articles of War will be proposed to place final judicial review of all general court-martial cases in the Judge Advocate General's Department, with authority in the Judge Advocate General to establish within his office or as adjuncts thereto appellate agencies to assist him in exercising his powers. The Judge Advocate General and appellate agencies will be given authority to weigh evidence, confirm, approve, disapprove, or vacate findings and sentences, to commute, suspend, reduce, or remit sentences, and to order new trials, but the appellate agencies' power of mitigation and remission will be exercised by the Judge Advocate General under the direction of the Secretary or Under Secretary of War. These appellate judicial powers will be exercised in death cases, except that no death sentence will be ordered into execution, in peace or wartime, without confirming action by the President. All sentences to dismissal, dishonorable discharge, or bad-conduct discharge will be passed on by a Board of Review or similar appellate agency, and will be confirmed by the Judge Advocate General or his appellate agency prior to execution of the sentences. Action by the Judge Advocate General and his appellate agencies will follow approving action by the normal reviewing authorities, which authorities will have the power to approve or disapprove, mitigate or suspend, the sentences.

7. Amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed to give discretionary power to the Judge Advocate General upon application by accused persons to grant new trials and set aside sentences, the application to be submitted within 1 year after final disposition on initial appellate review, or with respect to World War II cases within 1 year after final disposition or after the termination of the war, whichever is the latest; only one application for thus reopening a case to be afforded.

8. Amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed to require that appointing and reviewing authorities provide direct communication with their staff judge advocates in all matters relating to the administration of military justice.

9. Amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed to vest the Judge Advocate General with the authority to prescribe the assignments of officers of his Department, after appropriate consultations with commanders on whose staffs they may serve, and to require the Judge Advocate General or senior members of his staff to make frequent inspections in the field with respect to the administration of military justice.

10. Amendments of the pertinent statutes will be proposed to give the officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department advantages in promotion commensurate with those given other officer personnel on account of their specialized professional education and training.

11. Amendments to the Articles of War will be proposed authorizing special courts martial, as well as general courts martial, to adjudge as punishment discharges for bad conduct as distinguished from dishonorable discharges; to require appellate review by a board of review in the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the records of trial by special courts martial involving such bad conduct discharges; and to require that when a trial judge advocate of a special court martial is a lawyer the defense counsel also be a lawyer.

12. An amendment to an existing Executive order will be requested removing present limitations upon the trial of officers by special courts martial. This will permit imposition of appropriate punishments upon officers by special courts martial for offenses of lesser gravity not requiring trial by general court martial.

13. Amendment of Article of War 104 will be proposed to authorize disciplinary punishment by commanding officers to a maximum of forefiture of one-half 1 month's pay for 3 months in the cases of warrant officers, flight officers, and all officers below the grade of brigadier general, the power to be exercised in peace as well as in wartime. The Manual for Courts Martial will contain a provision that information as to punishment of officers under Article of War 104 will be made available to other Army personnel.

14. Amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed to authorize general courts martial to impose upon officers punishment involving loss of commission and concurrent reduction to the ranks.

15. Amendment of Article of War 85 will be proposed to make discretionary in war and in peace the punishment of an officer for being drunk on duty, and to delete the present mandatory requirement for dismissal for the offense in time of war. The punishment will thus be made to depend upon the gravity of the offense as determined by the duty involved and the other circumstances.

16. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended to require that the sessions of general, special, and summary courts martial be open, except for security or other special reasons, and that sessions of the courts be bulletined to encourage the attendance of spectators who may wish to attend. The necessity of attaining impressive decorum in the conduct of trials will be stressed.

17. Amendments of the Articles of War will be proposed to make qualified enlisted personnel eligible to serve as members of general and special courts martial, the detail of such enlisted persons to be discretionary with the appointing authority; all members of courts martial to be senior to accused and enlisted members to be from units other than those to which accused are assigned. Special emphasis will be placed by appropriate War Department orders on instructions of enlisted persons with respect to the administration of military justice generally and on instruction required to qualify enlisted persons for the responsibilities incident to membership on courts martial.

18. Appropriate War Department orders will be issued requiring the selection of summary courts martial from captains or officers of field grade when available and requiring that selection of inexperienced officers be avoided. Instructions will be given also requiring that accused persons before summary courts martial be provided counsel when requested, and, where available, counsel of their own choice.

19. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended to enjoin strict enforcement of the requirement of Article of War 70 that charges be referred for trial by general court martial only after thorough and impartial investigation. The employment of trained and mature officers in the conduct of investigations will be emphasized.

20. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended to clarify and liberalize the present rules as to the admissibility of documentary record evidence and to insure the admissibility of book and similar entries made in the regular course of business or administration.

21. Amendment of Article of War 22 will be proposed to clarify insurance to the defense of equal opportunity with the prosecution to obtain the attendance of witnesses before courts martial.

22. Amendment of Article of War 25 will be proposed to permit the use by the prosecution, as well as by the defense, of depositions in nominal death cases—in cases in which the death penalty is authorized by law but is not to be adjudged. Prompt taking of depositions will also be authorized.

23. Amendment of Article of War 39 will be proposed to exclude from the operation of the statute of limitations the offense of absence without leave committed in time of war.

24. Amendment of Article of War 43 will be proposed to remove any possible ambiguity in the requirements as to the number of votes necessary to convict accused persons. The article will require a unanimous vote in mandatory death cases and a two-thirds vote in other cases.

25. Repeal of Articles of War 44 and 88, which are obsolete for present-day application, will be proposed. Article of War 44 requires publication in his home State of the fact of dismissal of an officer for cowardice or fraud and makes it scandalous for other officers thereafter to associate with him. Article of War 88 denounces as an offense abuse, intimidation, violence to, or wrongful interference with any person bringing subsistence or other necessaries into camps or quarters.

26. Amendment of Article of War 45 will be proposed to require maximum limitations by the Executive on the punishment of officers as well as enlisted men in all cases, and to provide for limitations upon punishments of all persons in time of war and in theaters of operations, as well as under peacetime conditions.

27. Amendment of Article of War 92 will be proposed to delete the present mandatory punishment of death or life imprisonment for the offense of rape and to substitute death or any lesser punishment for this offense, and to make discretionary the quantum of punishment for murder without premeditation.

28. The Manual for Courts Martial will be amended to permit general courts martial, in their discretion, to adjudge sentences to confinement in excess of 6 months but not exceeding 1 year without imposing the punishment of dishonorable discharge.

29. Amendment of the Articles of War will be proposed expressly to forbid coercion in any form in the procurement of admissions and confessions of accused persons, and to provide punishments for such coercion or attempts at coercion.

There is enclosed for the information of the committee a copy of the complete report of the War Department Advisory Committee on Military Justice.

I am advised that the Navy Department is considering the administration of military justice within the Navy and that the Secretary of the Navy will communicate his views to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Armed Services Committees will thus be enabled to coordinate any action which they may take with respect to the two services.

I have delegated to the Under Secretary of War the supervision of all matters relating to military justice, and he will represent the War Department in any presentation or hearing before your committee.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, O Lord:

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in His law doth he meditate day and night. He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

O God, help us all so to live that we may worthily be numbered among those who will shape the best life for the people tomorrow. Endow us with the spirit of our Master, and draw from our every word and deed the fangs of hate and malice, and thus sanctify true manhood and womanhood.

Teach us, Father, how to be kind and patient as a tree. Bring us all under Thy control and in accord with Thy divine purpose. In the name of the Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 24, 1947, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on February 26, 1947, the President approved and signed joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947; and

H. J. Res. 121. Joint resolution granting, in the case of income, estate, and gift taxes, deductions for contributions to the United Nations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 568. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculure to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

THE LATE HONORABLE RILEY J. WILSON

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, word has just reached me of the passing of a distinguished citizen of Louisiana, a patriotic American, an outstanding member of the bar, and a former Member of the House of Representatives, the Honorable Riley Joe Wilson.

Judge Wilson retired from the Halls of Congress in 1936. He had long been active in public affairs in Louisiana, and upon his retirement he had, by virtue of work and service, endeared himself not only to the people of his district in Louisiana, but to his many friends here in Washington, and to his colleagues in the Halls of Congress.

In 1911 our late and esteemed colleague began his public career. During that year he was elected to the judgeship of his judicial district, and in 1916 he was elected to his first term as Congressman from the Fifth Congressional District of Louisiana.

Congressman Wilson served in Congress continuously from that date until 1936, when he retired from public office.

At the time of his passing, Judge Wilson was 74 years of age.

He served well as a public servant, not only his beloved State, but our Nation, and in his declining years he lived to see many of his early legislative dreams materialize.

Judge Wilson was a man of rare integrity. His honesty was never disputed. He was loyal to his State and to his Nation.

Here in the Halls of Congress he distinguished himself as a statesman, and was held in high esteem by those who were associated with him. Judge Wilson contributed much to the legislative progress of Congress while he served so faithfully as a Member of this body.

It was my privilege to know Riley Joe Wilson, and I admired his character and ability. It was my pleasure to observe his contributions to his district, to his State, and to our Nation, and I submit these brief remarks as a final tribute to a man whose sincerity of purpose and greatness of character enriched the lives of all who knew him.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I served with Riley Wilson for many years. He went to school in the district I have the honor to represent. He married a Miss Barnett in that district. I can say without reservation that Louisiana never had a more conscientious public servant in this House than Riley J. Wilson.

The entire delegation from Mississippi join in expressing our regrets at his untimely passing away, and in extending our sympathies to his bereaved family.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, upon coming to my office this morning, I was profoundly shocked by the tragic news of the death of Riley Joseph Wilson in the city of Monroe, La. Judge Wilson was born in Winn Parish, La., and served as district attorney and as district judge in Louisiana. In 1914, he was nominated for Congress and he served in this body continuously from the Sixty-fourth Congress to the Seventy-fifth Congress, a period of 22 years. He was in Washington when I came to Congress, and, up until fairly recently, he often came to my office to read the papers from Louisiana and to keep in touch with local events.

Judge Wilson served his State and the Nation long and well. In the Congress of the United States, the emphasis of his activity was placed upon flood control, and in the early days he did much to publicize the importance of flood control as a national problem. Since his congressional district had one of the worst flood problems of the Nation, his advocacy of national aid in this great field of endeavor was most devout and most earnest.

Judge Wilson was well known here and in Louisiana, where he was much beloved. He now carries into a higher sphere the views which he championed here in Congress. He will be missed in our Halls and our councils, and thousands will mourn his death. Our deep sympathy goes out to his widow and three children who survive him; and we devoutly say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in their expressions in the death of the Honorable Riley J. Wilson, a former Member of this House from Louisiana, and on behalf of myself and the other Members from Louisiana who are absent on this occasion to join in paying tribute to a fine jurist, statesman, and a conscientious public servant.

While I did not have the good fortune to serve in this House with the gentleman from Louisiana, I have learned from many of his colleagues who are yet in the House that he was universally respected and esteemed and his ability was generally well recognized. Judge Wilson, as he was familiarly known by his friends, held many public offices, and among these was that of member of the Constitutional Convention of Louisiana in 1898; member of the Legislature of Louisiana, district attorney, and judge of his judicial district in Louisiana, in the latter position from which he was elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Judge Wilson served from the Sixty-fourth through the Seventy-fourth Congresses, and at the time of his retirement was chairman of the important House Committee on Flood Control.

As chairman of the House Flood Control Committee, Judge Wilson rendered the State of Louisiana and the Nation as a whole, a most valuable service; especially in this position was Judge Wilson able to press the needs of Louisiana for protection against the devastating floods that visited Louisiana and the Mississippi Valley so often, and due to the hard work and cooperation of his committee during that time, many projects were undertaken in the Mississippi Valley which now serve to protect the lives and properties of hundreds of thousands of our citizens residing in that area.

The State of Louisiana appreciates the great service rendered by our former colleague, and the members of the Louisiana delegation, and I am sure all of those who knew Judge Wilson join in expressing our sympathy and condolence to the family of Judge Wilson.

MR. HOOVER TO TESTIFY BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has invited Mr. Hoover, the greatest authority on food problems, to testify before that committee at 10:30 o'clock on Friday. By courtesy of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee we are to meet in the great caucus room on the ground floor of the New House Office Building at that time. On behalf of the committee I cordially invite all Members of the House to be present and listen to this most distinguished witness.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report to accompany the bill H. R. 246, which was reported yesterday from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and as a part of those remarks to include a letter written by Harley L. Lutz, professor of public finance, Princeton University, with the further request that if that letter has already appeared in the RECORD, notwithstanding that, the remainder of my speech may be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the boxcar situation.

Mr. RIEHLMAN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a suggested solution for the Korean problem.

Mr. NODAR asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech made by Mr. VORYS on the Lithuanian question.

Mr. JENKINS of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and insert a resolution passed by the Lithuanian Alliance of America, District No. 7.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Wilmington Sunday Star.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Times.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENKINS of Ohio addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFIN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix and include an address by Hon. CLARENCE J. BROWN before the National Republican Club.

THE HOG SITUATION

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on May 13, last, I stood here and warned against the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture when he urged the farmers of this country to reduce the hogs of this country by sending 10 percent of their brood sows to market. They cooperated to the extent that thousands and hundreds of thousands of brood sows went to market. Today we have got $30 hogs on the market, and dollar-a-pound pork chops, and who is to blame but the Secretary of Agriculture?

On May 12, 1946, when the Secretary announced the Department's pig production goals for 1946, the corn crop in the Corn Belt was not yet in the ground. The recommendations from a Secretary who would have been farsighted and understood would have been one urging farmers to increase their corn acreage, as well as their production of hogs. This was one more case where increased production was the answer rather than the philosophy of scarcity. Thirty-dollar hogs are little help to a farmer when he has none to sell. What is now likely to happen is that many brood sows will be sent to market by farmers in need of money or who want to take advantage of the present unheard-of market price, thus creating a greater shortage throughout 1947.

Fifteen-dollar hogs would pay their way to market with the present price of corn. The West is just that full of corn that the sun sets behind the corncribs and no hogs. You have never heard of such a deplorable condition in your life, and it means that those pigs which were killed through that program advocated by the Secretary of Agriculture would now be coming to market by the tens of thousands, weighing over 200 pounds. Empty lard cans; empty larders; dollar pork chops can be charged to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Agricultural Department is one place where we could cut down on expenditures and save several billion dollars by doing it, to aid in further reduction of the budget.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and to include in each an editorial from a newspaper.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. D'ALESANDRO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include resolutions and communications opposing the erection of an airport at Sandy Point, Md.

Mr. ABERNETHY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial and in the other a newspaper article.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a resolution adopted by the Lithuanian-American Council and in the other a radio address delivered by himself over Station WLAW.

Mr. EVINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Department of Education of the State of Tennessee regarding the school-lunch program.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter.

Mr. LANDIS (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

SPECIAL ORDERS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today following the special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I had for today may be transferred to Monday, March 3, and that I be allowed to speak for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

OUR RADIO IS BEING TURNED AGAINST US

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, is it true freedom to allow our great broadcasting facilities to be used by those whose only object is to destroy our Nation?

I think not.

A regard for the public welfare already prevents radio from selling its services to those who would disseminate obscene matter or peddle harmful drugs.

We do this, by law, to protect the moral and physical health of the Nation. But what about its political safety? Shall we permit subversive elements to use radio as a means to undermine the American form of government?

It is an invitation to national suicide to view this problem complacently.

Radio exerts a powerful influence over the minds and emotions of the people. Used by clever and cynical propagandists, it could only weaken a nation from within and become the most deadly medium of attack.

To protect us from this danger which is already at work, I propose that we amend the Communications Act of 1934, with a view to preventing the use of broadcasting facilities for the dissemination of material which is subversive to our democratic system of government.

The amendment I suggest, reads as follows:

SEC. 303a (under title 111). It shall be the duty of the Commission to prescribe appropriate regulations for the purpose of preventing the use of radio broadcasting facilities for the dissemination of views in furtherance of any movement which is subversive of the Government of the United States, or views advocating theories or doctrines contrary to the Constitution of the United States, or the constitution of any State of the United States, in the matter of religious freedom or freedom of the press.

The broadcasting channels should be closed to those who want to propagate treason.

THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, may I say to those of faint heart that the various subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee have been vigorously at work now for several weeks scanning the budgetary requests for appropriations for the next fiscal year. Those bills will start coming upon the floor of this House very shortly, one after the other and you will find, I believe, when those bills come here that your Appropriations Committee has done, is doing, and will do, a real job in an effort to achieve a $6,000,000,000 reduction in public expenditures and in the amount available for expenditure in the next fiscal year.

I want to warn the Members of Congress, and especially those on the Republican side, that you are going to be literally drenched and deluged with propaganda. You will have thousands of letters and telegrams come to your offices from people who do not know a single thing about which they telegraph or write. For example, I have been literally swamped with telegrams and letters with respect to proposed appropriations for the Labor Department in which it is alleged that the committee has decided to abolish this or abolish that. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has not yet concluded its hearings and has not even met to consider what appropriations shall be disturbed.

The propaganda agencies and the propaganda mills are prematurely at work. We are going to stand pat, however, despite the propaganda and try to balance the budget and lay something aside for a rainy day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement by Prof. Charles W. Watkeys, of the University of Rochester, N. Y., on the subject Amortization of the National Debt.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on House Administration.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN W. MCCORMACK.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

FEBRUARY 26, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MARTIN: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Respectfully yours,

CHARLES B. DEANE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTIONS TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 114), which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of the State of Massachusetts, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and to rank No. 17 on said committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another resolution (H. Res. 115) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That C. B. DEANE, of the State of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on House Administration.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another resolution (H. Res. 116) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That ROBERT E. JONES, JR., of the State of Alabama, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The resolution was agreed to.

OFFICIAL OBJECTORS ON MINORITY SIDE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to make an announcement that I am sure will be of interest to Members on both sides of the House.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TRIMBLE], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL], have been designated by the minority as the official objectors in connection with bills on the Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar.

NATIONAL CAPITAL HOUSING AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 5 (a) of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the National Capital Housing Authority for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1946.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 26, 1947.

FIRST REPORT OF THE AIR COORDINATING COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 148)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit to the Congress, for its information and consideration, the First Report of the Air Coordinating Committee, for the calendar year 1946.

The Committee was established by Executive order on September 19, 1946, in order to achieve full development and integration of United States aviation policies and activities, and includes representatives of the executive agencies primarily concerned with aviation. Through its Aviation Industry Advisory Panel, the Committee draws upon the experience and the views of the air transport and aircraft manufacturing industry, of organized labor, and of other aviation interests.

It is my hope that the report may prove useful to the Congress in its deliberations on aviation matters, which are of such great concern to our country's welfare.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 26, 1947.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include statements made by him before the Tariff Commission.

Mr. GEARHART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, and in each to include extraneous matter.

DEFINING JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 117, Rept. No. 72) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana, from the Committee on Rules reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 118, Rept. No. 73) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to conduct studies and investigations of any action, rule, procedure, regulation, order, or directive taken or promulgated by any department or independent agency of the Federal Government where complaint is made to the committee, or subcommittee thereof, that such action, rule, regulation, procedure, order, or directive: (1) Is beyond the scope of the power or authority granted to such department or independent agency by Congress or by Executive order; (2) invades the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of citizens of the United States; (3) inflicts penalties for failure to comply with such rules, regulations, or directives, without affording those accused of violation an opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal. For such purposes the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] a few moments ago in reference to the Committee on Appropriations doing its duty in cutting out nonessential appropriations. I feel confident that they are going to do it. I have never been so heartened since I have been a Member of Congress by reason of the fact that we are going to try to get this country in the position where our appropriations or expenses are going to be less than our receipts. It is only going to be by the effort of every Republican Member of Congress and a few sound Democratic Members that we are going to attain that goal. Now, it has been said by Members on the other side, "Wait until we have these appropriation bills in. They are going to cut this, that, and the other thing, and then your people back home will not get the things that they are desirous of having us spend money for." Let it be known that your people back home are desirous of trying to keep this country financially sound and stable, and if we do that we will have an armed force that will be able to protect America, but if we bankrupt America we will have nothing. It is up to you and me to see that we do carry this program out and balance the budget and have something to pay on our national debt. That only will give us a sound financial structure. We will be put to the test many, many times to cut out some project your people back home want us to spend money for. Let them know the joy ride of the New Deal is over and that we have the unwelcome joy of paying now for this joy ride. We have all the debts to pay, we must be sound and sensible, buckle our belts, and do the job, as disagreeable as it will be. It is an honorable thing to do. It is the sensible thing to do. It is the hard and disagreeable thing to do. Let us be for a sound America. Balance the budget and pay off the New Deal debt. Let us go to work. The road will be hard, the job disagreeable; it must be done. We are the Americans who can do it, if we will. I am going to do it. Count on me for economy.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 111 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations relating to matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee under rule XI (1) (g) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and for such purposes the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 111 would authorize the Committee on Education and Labor to conduct studies and investigations relating to matters within its jurisdiction. More specifically, it extends to the committee the power to subpena witnesses and administer oaths.

As was pointed out in the hearings on the resolution before the Committee on Rules, the subpena power is necessary not only to secure the presence of reluctant witnesses but also to protect those who testify willingly before the committee. Should it appear that certain witnesses had volunteered information, they and their families might later be subjected to strong-arm methods as punishment. If these witnesses are subpenaed and testify under oath, however, the possibility of such reprisal is lessened.

The additional powers to the Committee on Education and Labor were originally requested in House Resolution 88. This resolution also included provisions for certain funds for committee expenses and asked for clerical and stenographic assistance. As you know, it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules to pass on these latter requests, so House Resolution 111, granting the Committee on Education and Labor the additional powers requested, as far as the subpenaing and protection of witnesses is concerned, was therefore substituted for House Resolution 88, which the Committee on Rules thought infringed, perhaps, upon the prerogatives and the privileges and the rights of the Committee on House Administration.

As this resolution is merely a technical substitution from the original resolution introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], I shall leave to him the explanation of the resolution itself.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. This resolution seeks to give to a standing committee, the Committee on Education and Labor, power and authorities said by that committee to be necessary in the performance of its duties and operations as a committee of the House.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HALLECK. That committee is charged with the consideration and determination of some of the most important matters coming before the House of Representatives.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. In fact, at this moment and probably for many weeks in the future the House Committee on Education and Labor will be holding daily hearings on many important bills, and it is very necessary, it appears, for the committee to have this authority in order to properly carry out its work.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know whether or not there is any opposition to this resolution, but as far as I am concerned I certainly hope it is adopted today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand, this resolution merely asks the power to make these investigations touching subjects that fall within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is right, but to subpena witnesses, compel the production of records, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY].

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Education and Labor started hearings within 3 days after it was constituted on the many bills that have been presented to it.

During the course of these hearings, we obtained testimony concerning the so-called Dock Street case in Philadelphia which presented to this committee one of the most vicious of all the racketeering situations of which I have ever heard. The case involved some 200 small produce merchants on Dock Street, in Philadelphia, whose places of business were shut down completely and who lost an estimated $125,000 in perishable foods and vegetables which the union leaders in that particular territory had refused to permit to be removed either from freight cars or from the various places of business. We had one witness, for example, who testified that he had been on Dock Street, first as a huckster's helper, then later on as a huckster, and finally established his own business. He had been on this street for 42 consecutive years. Yet, when the strike was finally called he was told by the leaders that they would give him 15 minutes, not to get off the premises, his own premises, but to get off Dock Street. The issue involved, incidentally, concerned the taking into the teamsters' union of 200 girl clerks in these various establishments. I have been a member of the Committee on Labor for the 18 years that I have been in Congress, and I thought I knew something about union contracts. But I want to tell you, in all frankness, that my eyes were opened by this particular contract, some sections of which I want to read to you. Bear in mind that we also had plenty of evidence of racketeering in this case. This contract has been signed by several dozen merchants in this particular case. Some of the provisions of the contract are as follows:

Subsection B, section 4, provides:

An employer may be permitted on the firm's premises on Saturday morning, provided permission to do so is obtained from the union in advance.

In other words, in order to visit his own place of business and his own establishment and go into his own office on a Saturday morning, he has to file a written application with the union.

Section 23 provides:

The union reserves the right to issue instructions to the employer relative to the conduct of his business without dispute, when the union feels that the employer conducts business in such a manner as to jeopardize the employment security of his employees and where such conduct may be detrimental and interfere with the orderly and efficient operation or movement of perishable products destined for distribution to consumers.

Section 24 provides:

From time to time during the life of this agreement it is agreed that the union shall make and enforce new rules and regulations governing the physical movement of commodities received and delivered by the employer herein, which are deemed by the union as necessary to best protect its interest. Such rules and regulations shall also affect railroad and steamship docks, piers, freight yards, bulkheads, and warehouse movements. When in the judgment of the union such new rules and regulations are necessary, the union may send a notice to the employer in writing and a conference may be held to agree upon—

I interpolate not the terms of the new rules and regulations, but merely—the effective starting date as decreed by the union.

In addition, there is another section in this contract which provides as follows:

Subsection D of section 6: When a partnership of two persons exists, one member of that partnership must be a member of the union.

So that in the event of a strike one of the partners would have to carry a sign and picket his own partner. In this particular case, there was testimony to the effect that a certain gentleman, Mr. Fred Schlein, was the business agent for the union. Later on, the employers, these produce dealers, were organized into an association. And who do you think became the business agent for the employers' association? The same Mr. Schlein. It was testified before our committee by a witness who said that he feared for his own life and had been driven to such a state of desperation that he was thinking seriously of committing suicide, that one time when his place were struck he did not know what the reasons were. One of his competitors, a friend, came to him and said, "Why don't you get wise to yourself? Why don't you get a labor-relations expert to advise you?" He said, "Have you got one to suggest?" This competitor replied, "Sure." And who do you think it turned out to be? The same Mr. Schlein. So that in the dispute between the employers' association and the union the business agent for both associations turns out to be the labor-relations expert for the individual members of the association.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And how much was he paid?

Mr. HARTLEY. I think they were assessed something like $500 each, and one member who did not pay all of the assessment but only paid a part of it, was told he got only half protection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Is that the same Schlein who helps to enforce the so-called FEPC in New Jersey?

Mr. HARTLEY. This was in Pennsylvania but I would not be surprised if he wound up in that position too.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. This union deals with the handling of perishable foodstuffs?

Mr. HARTLEY. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. And if the perishable foodstuffs are on the dock or in the place of business, they are permitted to spoil while the union and the employers try to settle their differences. Is that the fact?

Mr. HARTLEY. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. And it is the public who suffers, the public who has to pay the high prices for the foodstuffs that they are not even permitted to get?

Mr. HARTLEY. Surely the public suffers, but may I add in addition to the intimidation against these employers on Dock Street, the farmers who are supplying them are intimidated. May I add that immediately following this particular testimony our committee went into executive session and unanimously directed me to apply for the authority that we ask today, that is, merely the right to issue subpenas and also to put witnesses under oath.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Does this give the committee the power to investigate the present National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. HARTLEY. It would, undoubtedly.

Mr. RANKIN. The reason I ask that question is this: A couple of individuals tried to force a cooperative power association—a nonprofit REA co-op that is trying to extend power lines to the farmers' homes—in my district to adopt the closed shop. The co-op refused; so they inform me that this Labor Relations Board went down there and undertook to pile up a tremendous load of expenses against that co-op in order to break it. They tried to read into the record all of the annual reports of the Tennessee Valley Authority from its very beginning, which had nothing to do with the case. The man who was presiding overruled that attempt. So they came back to Washington and continued the hearings, while this co-op, representing largely small farmers, was unable to send counsel here; and the NLRB had read into that record every single report of the Rural Electrification Administration from its beginning. I just wanted to know if this committee had the right to investigate such an outrageous proceeding as that.

Mr. HARTLEY. I believe this would give us this authority and would put some teeth in it. May I say to the gentleman that the case he has just described has been presented time and time again to our committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HARTLEY. We had a case in New Canaan, Conn., where the owner of a small dairy employing five persons was put out of business. His trucks were overturned. Two men who were ex-servicemen, truck drivers, were left on the road in an unconscious condition. We asked, How about the local enforcement authorities? Did they make complaints and were the complaints brought to court? Those complaints were filed 1 year and 2 months ago. I want the authority to bring the law-enforcement officials here to tell this committee why they have not proceeded to bring to justice the perpetrators of such violence.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. FISHER. Will the gentleman tell the House also what happened to the merchants on Dock Street who did not accept the demands of the union with respect to the contract provisions he has just read, and these other demands that were developed before the committee? There were some 20 or 25 who had been put out of business after having been in business from 10 to 20 years.

Mr. HARTLEY. Not only were they put out of of business but they were not even allowed to remove some $125,000 worth of perishable fruits and vegetables. They could not even remove them from their premises.

Mr. FISHER. In addition to the racket the gentleman has referred to in Philadelphia, we had evidence of similar rackets, at least as bad ones, that are now in existence in Pittsburgh, Detroit, New York, and many other localities, especially on the west coast.

Mr. HARTLEY. That is absolutely true. We had the so-called hot-milk case presented to the committee where the teamsters' union refused to transport milk which came from cows that had been fed feed that had not been delivered by union truckers.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Under the provision of this resolution the gentleman's committee would be empowered to subpena and investigate in any strike or in any industrial dispute, subpena books and labor organizations, and subpena pickets or anybody else; is that correct?

Mr. HARTLEY. That is my impression; yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. But as I understand it, they would not be authorized, though, to investigate the lynching of Mr. Scottoreggio in the New York election row.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, will my chairman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. BREHM. I wish the gentleman would tell the House about the case of the war veteran who was under contract to furnish food to veterans' hospitals but who was denied the right to operate. This veteran served 3 years in the South Pacific.

Mr. HARTLEY. As the gentleman from Ohio, who is a member of my committee, indicates, this veteran of 3 years' service in the South Pacific was denied the right to ship goods to a veterans' hospital under contract. We had the case of another returning serviceman who bought property, started his business, had a truck which he had owned prior to his entry into the service. He went to the union and said that he would hire a regular union driver; that he had only union help in his place; that he was completely organized; that all he wanted to do was use his own truck; but they said, "You just cannot do that."

Mr. BREHM. That was the veteran to which I just referred.

Mr. HARTLEY. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I wish to commend the gentleman and the members of his Committee on Education and Labor for the very intelligent and careful way in which they are undertaking the study of this whole problem of legislation dealing with labor-management relations.

In times past the House of Representatives and its Members have been criticized for acting in what some have described as too hasty a manner on such legislation. At the moment there is some criticism in certain places now that action is not quite as hasty as it should be. My observation is that the right-thinking, fair-minded people of the country understand and appreciate the careful, considerate, and painstaking and yet expeditious way in which the gentleman and the members of his committee are working. I want the country, as far as I am concerned, to understand my feelings about what the gentleman's committee is doing. Of course, I am hopeful that the labor of the gentleman's committee may soon be concluded so action on the bill to be reported may be had here in the House.

Mr. HARTLEY. I thank the gentleman from Indiana. I hope I make this perfectly clear that the authority which we seek here today will in no way interfere with the committee's getting out legislation on the over-all labor picture as expeditiously as we possibly can. The House Committee on Education and Labor is really functioning.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services may have permission to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL POWERS OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], has stated that it is necessary for the committee to have additional powers of subpena in order to obtain information and testimony and evidence. He did not state, however, that it was impossible for that committee to obtain all the evidence or testimony that it desired without these additional powers. The committee has, in fact, heard many witnesses who were against labor. I do not know whether spokesmen for labor have had an equal opportunity to be heard or not; but I hope that if they have not been heard heretofore that under this resolution, which, of course, will pass, they will have ample opportunity to present their case and that the investigations conducted will be fair and objective.

NO EVIDENCE OF COERCION

I heard the testimony of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] before the Committee on Rules. He read extracts from that contract between the employer and the employees as he did just now on the floor. There was no evidence there that coercion or threats had been used to bring about agreement to that employer-employee contract from which he quoted. I wish he had read the entire contract, which would have given the country and the membership of the House fuller information and knowledge of the conditions. However, even if there was nothing else in the contract than those few statements he has read, there is no evidence that these men on Dock Street or any others have been put out of business. In fact, I have information they are doing well, that they have made plenty of money and are making money now, and are in better financial condition today than they were before, notwithstanding the contract the gentleman read, and so severely criticized.

DOES NOT CREATE NEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker, this, unlike other resolutions, does not create a new special committee. It merely gives a legislative committee of the House greater power than it possesses now; namely, the power to subpena and swear witnesses, travel all over the United States to obtain information, and do such other things as any court might be able to do that had jurisdiction, in seizing files, papers, reports and anything and everything that it may desire from any organized labor group, from any union, or from any individual member or officer of a union. I do not know whether they will utilize this power in the same way when they call the employers themselves in the investigation.

PROGRESS DUE TO LABOR

Again I hope and plead that the committee will be fair and will obtain all the information that is needed, required and necessary for sane, fair legislation.

Notwithstanding the hue and cry which has arisen from a few perennial enemies of organized labor and from professional labor baiters and unfair and feudal-minded employers about the perilous circumstances of business and industry here and there, and about enterprises forced by labor demands to give up and go out of business, the record shows actually that small businesses have been destroyed by the war, by materials shortages, by unfair competition from big business, and from many other causes; but not because of labor, save perhaps in a few isolated cases, where I strongly suspect that inefficient management was the true reason the business could not survive.

Thus it is seen that all these accusations and charges from those unfriendly to the cause of labor, who are trying by legislation to infringe on the right of free private contract and thereby to destroy the great labor movement which has done so much for the country, for working people—yes; and for business and industry, too—have been without foundation, and I feel many of the charges are manifestly unfair. If I thought that organized labor was detrimental to the best interest of my country, I would not plead for it, I would not defend it. May I say that the rapid progress of our country has been due to organized labor, and we have a greater prosperity and efficiency than ever before. Industries and manufacturers, in fact, all businesses are making more money and they have accumulated greater surpluses than at any previous time.

WHY THE CAMPAIGN TO DESTROY ORGANIZED LABOR

In view of that fact I cannot see why there is that determined aim and effort to weaken and destroy organized labor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I believe that a close analysis of the powers contained in this resolution leaves no doubt in anyone's mind that this resolution establishes another labor-busting, strike-breaking device. This power of subpena will be used against labor in every single critical period in industrial relations. It will not be used for the purpose of obtaining information but it will be used as a sledge hammer to smash the rights of labor by indirection. The power to subpena may become the power to destroy. Despite all the smoke screen about racketeering, this power in the hands of the enemies of labor will be used to do a knife job on the rights of American labor.

Mr. SABATH. Well, that was my fear. That is the fear I entertain, and that is the reason I have expressed my views, and that I plead and hope and expect that the committee will be fair, and that the power that is being given to that committee will not be abused.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman not think that the Members who are going to be charged with the duty of administering these oaths and obligations are going to be honest and fair in their dealings with the citizenship of this country when they come before their committee? They are not going to do, like the gentleman from New York says, use sledge hammers and try to bust everything up. They are honorable citizens and they are going to try to do an honorable job, and the gentleman from New York is as wrong as anything possibly can be.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to yield at any time to any gentleman for questions, but I reserve to myself the privilege and right of making a speech in my own time. I think that is the only right I have nowadays, to express my views.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. Not now, because the gentleman abuses my generosity in yielding time that is given to him at my cost and in my time to make a speech.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HARTLEY. I want to make it perfectly clear that as chairman of this committee I have no such intention as was ascribed to me by the gentleman from New York. May I say that even in these present hearings, where employers have come before the committee and made charges against the unions, the committee has followed a course that I do not recall being followed in times past, and that is, to give the unions the right to come in and defend themselves, and we will certainly do that in any investigation we conduct.

COST OF LIVING UP 50 PERCENT

Mr. SABATH. I am mighty pleased to hear the gentleman make that statement. I know the gentleman is going to follow his promise and will be impartial, and I hope that he will be able to control the actions of his committee and conduct fair hearings and give both sides an equal opportunity to be heard.

To go back, a while ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] made a statement relative to the tremendous increase in cost of living. He says we will shortly be obliged to pay $1 a pound for pork. Now, he did not mention the other increases that have been brought about in the cost of living, not only in pork and meats, fruits and vegetables, but in every item of family subsistence. The cost of living since OPA was destroyed has gone up in the last 6 months over 50 percent, and the papers today say it may go up much higher. I wonder, in view of these many resolutions that have been introduced and reported and will be passed here, whether we should not have a resolution to investigate the cause for the unjustifiable increase in cost of living. I think that will interest all of the people of our country, and it should be done, because I fear that if the cost of living should continue to go up 50 percent every 6 months, as it has in the last 6 months, the wage earner of this country will not be able to exist upon the pay which he now receives.

WORKERS WILL DEMAND WAGE INCREASES

The result will be that workers will be forced to demand an increase in their wages so they can maintain themselves and provide a decent living for their families. I hope a resolution will be presented and passed to bring about an investigation to find the real guilty culprits so that the country may know who is responsible for this outrageous increase in the cost of living. Personally, I know already.

PRICE INCREASES SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED

I presume some gentlemen will charge it to organized labor, to the wage earners. The fact is, we all know who is responsible. We know that the packers and other industrialists of this Nation, who have been urging and demanding and forcing the end of the OPA, are the ones who are responsible, despite the fact they promised the country that if OPA was repealed they would hold prices down. How are they holding them down when food costs rose at least 50 percent in just the last 6 months? I urge that a resolution to investigate these conditions be introduced and passed. I would introduce it, but I fear no resolution I might introduce would have any chance to be passed in view of the Republican majority that now controls legislation.

GWYNNE BILL ONE OF WORST ANTILABOR MEASURES

As to labor legislation, this morning you heard a gentleman report from the Committee on Rules a rule on the Gwynne bill, the portal-to-portal pay bill. The Committee on the Judiciary has succeeded in injecting into that one bill every conceivable provision it could to harass, embarrass, and curtail and deprive labor of its rights. I do not know how much more will be desired, how much additional legislation you gentlemen want to give labor. That bill itself is one of the worst antilabor bills I have seen brought into this House, and I fear it will pass with the same vote that other legislation against labor has been passed of late.

I have a few other matters I could speak of, but in view of the fact that following the consideration of this resolution there will be two or three other resolutions to investigate and investigate and investigate, I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

THE NATIONAL AVIATION COUNCIL

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, earlier today the President sent us a message transmitting a report of the Air Coordinating Committee. I desire to announce to the House that today I have introduced a bill to give statutory authority to a similar body, to be called the National Aviation Council. It is intended by my bill that the National Aviation Council shall succeed the Air Coordinating Committee, which Committee was established by Executive order. The ACC has accomplished many necessary actions in the vital interests of our country and is deserving of the statutory authority which my bill intends to give to its duly authorized successor. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member, recommended the purpose of my bill in a recent report filed in the House.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON COINS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the commemorative Booker T. Washington coins are now on sale at the office of the Sergeant at Arms. There are two different coins, one from the San Francisco mint and one from the Philadelphia mint. Those who are interested in collecting will probably want one of each. The coins are half dollars and sell at $1 each, the net proceeds going into the Booker T. Washington memorial fund. Personally, I think the coins are a beautiful piece and that the proceeds go to a very worthy project. I think each Member will doubtless want one or more of these Booker T. Washington commemorative coins.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE].

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and also to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, we have all been concerned and alarmed by the type of people who have gradually been getting employment in our State Department. It is especially disturbing at this time in the world's history and when our foreign policy is of paramount importance to note the thoroughly irresponsible manner in which people are being sent abroad to represent our country and her interests.

I received a letter recently from a constituent asking why, and by whose authority, the late Mr. Sidney Hillman's son-in-law, Mr. Milton Fried, had been sent to Paris as labor attaché in 1945, and why he is now our labor attaché in Prague at a salary of $4,149 per annum plus an allowance for his family.

I have looked into the matter, because I think my constituent has a perfect right, as a taxpayer, to know by whose authority and why Mr. Fried was given this appointment.

I cannot find the answer. According to the Department, it just happened one bright February morning in 1945, over the signature of an unidentified Under Secretary. As the French would say: That gives one to think. I began to think, and it occurred to me that we had an election in 1944, and that this young man's father-in-law took an active part in it and that possibly this appointment was simply "cleared with Sidney."

Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of thing that is wrecking our Foreign Service. This young man may be the salt of the earth and there may be every reason why he should have been appointed. Then why cannot the Department say it. Why tell us that it is just an act from on high.

This young man was born in Brooklyn in 1915. He did not serve in the armed forces in World War II, being declared IV–F.

Instead he improved his mind by study, receiving his bachelor-of-arts degree from New York University in 1938, cum laude, and master-of-arts degree in philosophy in 1941. He took orals in philosophy in 1944, in which year he collaborated on a book on the Nazi economic system.

In 1945, we had many men who fought and sacrificed wealth and preferment for our country.

But it just happened that in February 1945 Mr. Sidney Hillman's son-in-law was picked to represent us.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests at this time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, 7 minutes, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the resolution. On the 3d day of January, into the hopper went a resolution to amend the Reorganization Act, section 134 (a), by adding the words, "the House of Representatives" after the words "the Senate," the purpose being to give to every standing committee of the House—as has every standing committee of the Senate—the right to subpena witnesses. Leadership thought that resolution was too broad and suggested that we bring in—a different resolution—one which gave the right of subpena and investigation to the Committee on Expenditures and to some others. That was done and that resolution was passed. Then along came this resolution and several others, all carrying the right to hold hearings, subpena witnesses, and make hearings. I do not have the slightest objection to this or any other resolution granting the power of subpena to any committee of the House, if it wants to follow that course.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] who is chairman of the Committee on Labor which is holding hearings at the present time, seemed to be surprised at the terms of the contract which he produced and from which he read. The terms of that contract are no surprise to me, because as long ago as 1937, and I think before that, the Department of Agriculture put out a contract which required a man who borrowed money from his own Government to promise not to say anything against the Department of Agriculture so long as he owed anything on the principal or the interest. Now, think of that. You could not talk politics after you signed one of those contracts and borrowed some of your own money which you had paid to the Government through the tax collector. So, perhaps, some of these labor leaders caught on to the idea of some of those New Dealers when they were loaning Federal money and trying to deprive the citizen of his right to a free speech. These labor leaders are just following that method and seek to deprive these people of the right to do business.

What happened on Dock Street is nothing new.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just a minute—as you say. There is nothing new about that contract or the methods that are used. There is nothing new about these labor hearings. They just give us the same old story with new faces, places, and later dates. However, the argument is that they are necessary in order to convince Members of Congress of a few facts that the people were aware of prior to and on the 5th day of November, last, when they cast their ballots in an effort to elect men who would write legislation which will protect the individual employee. Those hearings are just bringing us down to date with new faces and new locations.

If you think these men on Dock Street were in a bad situation or in any worse situation than that which confronted many others during the past 10 years, I just ask you to remember that ever since 1937, the teamsters' union all over this country has claimed the right to prohibit the delivery of food to the residents of the cities until the teamsters got their cut, which in Detroit was $25 per truck. Why, two farmers driving down from Minnesota and buying a truck in Detroit—mind you, now, they bought two trucks—they had to pay $25 apiece before they could drive over Michigan's highways to get their trucks home. Do you like that one? Talk about what they do in Detroit, in that city some six thousand merchants were told they would either go out of business, have their stores smashed or their heads cracked or come across—pay their money to the union—some six thousand of them, small merchants. The union told the employers they had to join and pay a tribute they levied or they would get no merchandise.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief observation?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. COX. I am not one who regards the reorganization bill as sacrosanct. If this Congress does not take action bringing the Congressional Library under its jurisdiction, history will say 30 years from now that it was the sin of sins that Congress committed against the welfare of this country.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is, I think, correct. I hope history writes a true record, but as far as I am concerned I want to write a little labor legislation right now; the legislation the people expected last November. That is what I am getting at. I am interested in what my home folks will be thinking along in November, not this year but the year after, 1948. I am interested in that, I have been interested in it for something like 12 years, and for 10 years here in Congress I have been trying to get protection for the home folks.

Now, let me get on a little. Let me tell you about Maggie O'Neill. I love to talk about Maggie O'Neill, for her story is one that should appeal to you. She is a widow out in Oregon. You will find this story in a lawbook, and the Supreme Court of Oregon wrote it. It is entitled O'Neill v. Building Service Employees' Union, Local No. 6 (115 Pac. Rep. (2d) 662). She had a rooming house. She wanted to rent rooms, but along came this union and said, "Now, Maggie, no renting unless you join up. You have got to sign on the dotted line and pay the fee." And the Supreme Court of Oregon in a divided opinion—one justice said he held that way—they all said they so decided because the United States Supreme Court in the Swing case had held that, under the doctrine of free speech, they could picket her place of business, that Maggie could either pay or have her place picketed. That was way back in July of 1941.

These Philadelphia fellows are just bringing the story of extortion down to date. We do know that it took 2 years for the body across the hall there to make up its mind that we should have a law after this House had passed it, which said that the teamsters' union, Dan Tobin's union, should not charge $8.41 for a little truck and $9.42 for a big truck when they were trying to take butter, beef, eggs, and other things in, over a public highway, to the people in the city represented by the gentleman from New York, who opposed so many of these proposed laws. That extortion has been going on for years. For years these organizations have been levying tribute upon the right to deliver food to the cities, and I say it is time to end it. I want to say to you that after the Labor Committee gets through writing the bill and after they get through holding hearings over there and perhaps before the Committee on Expenditures, which has already appointed a subcommittee to ask the Department of Justice "how come"—is going to continue what it has now started, calling in the attorneys from the Department of Justice and ascertaining why, on a given state of facts, they did not have somebody arrested and thrown behind the bars. We are going to supplement and carry on the work of the Labor Committee. We hope to make the antiracketeering law apply to people of all organizations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote against the pending resolution.

This morning at a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor of which I am a member, I protested against the method of procedure which the committee has been following since it started hearings on labor legislation. Up to adjournment last evening, 64 witnesses have been heard or presented testimony for the record. Out of this number, only 10 witnesses appeared in behalf of organized labor or the employees. I am satisfied from the testimony thus far produced that the great majority of labor disputes and strikes which have occurred since VJ-day was a natural culmination brought on by the let-down from wartime production. Since VJ-day, the take-home pay of the average worker in industrial areas has been decreased approximately 33 percent. The cost of living in metropolitan areas has soared rapidly since VJ-day, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced yesterday that the cost of living has increased 30 percent since January 15, 1946. The Labor Bureau also stated that the cost of living will continue to rise during the next 6 months.

It is my firm belief that our committee and this Congress can contribute more toward industrial peace if it can bring about a reduction in the cost of living, especially in the industrial areas.

Restrictive legislation against organized labor will not in any way reduce industrial discontent and avert strikes unless the millions of workers in this country can secure a comfortable living on the wages they receive.

I have asked the Committee on Education and Labor to discontinue further hearings on industrial-management disputes and invite testimony from heads of families in industrial areas. Members living in rural districts have no conception of the economic difficulties now confronting the industrial worker who has a wife and children to support. We cannot cure the cancer until we eliminate the roots, and the basis for the vast majority of labor disputes in the past year has been caused by the fact that the pay check for millions of families does not begin to cover the grocery, clothing, rent bill, and so forth. Let us eliminate this problem and we will have taken a long step toward industrial peace.

Statistics show that 86 out of every 100 workers who engaged in work stoppage since VJ-day did so only because they were caught in the economic vise of rising prices and declining postwar income. There seems to be an unfortunate tendency on the part of some Members of Congress to take advantage of this postwar economic situation to cripple organized labor and rob it of the progress it has made in the last 12 years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN and Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 158, noes 2.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 349, nays 29, not voting 54, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by inserting a statement from the Secretary of State with an accompanying Presidential proclamation withdrawing the tariff concession on linen fire hose granted in trade agreements with Canada, which illustrates the flexibility of the trade-agreements program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an article which appeared in the New York Times and in the other an address by Assemblyman John P. Morrissey.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, March 5, I may address the House for 30 minutes following the legislative program for the day and special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE NEWSPRINT

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 58 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized to conduct a study and investigation of all matters related to the need for adequate supplies, for use in the United States (including use in time of war), of newsprint, printing and wrapping paper, paper products, paper pulp and pulpwood, and of all matters related to means by which adequate supplies thereof may be produced or secured, with particular reference to—

(1) the short-range and long-range possibilities of increased production thereof in the continental United States (including Alaska);

(2) the short-range and long-range prospects of securing increased supplies thereof from Canada and other sources outside the United States; and

(3) the extent to which agencies or officers of the United States may be able to assist in furthering the objective of securing increased production and supplies thereof.

The committee may from time to time submit to the House such preliminary reports as it deems advisable; and as soon as practicable during the present Congress shall submit to the House its final report on the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable. Any report submitted when the House is not in session shall be filed with the Clerk of the House.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the continental United States (including Alaska) or Canada, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and at this time I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 58 provides for the establishment of a select committee of the House to carry on the work which was done in wartime by a special subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee under a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] in 1943. The subcommittee was headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] and at that time had jurisdiction not only over newsprint and other paper but also over a great many other subjects, including trade names, brand labeling, and other matters affecting the national economy.

During the war period, through the work of this committee, a rather fair distribution of the available newsprint paper supply was arranged and made. However, the priorities and other distribution controls then established have been ended for some time, and the industry is now attempting to carry on under a voluntary, cooperative agreement plan.

The facts are that there is more newsprint being produced on the North American Continent than ever before, but the demand for paper and paper products of all kinds, especially newsprint and certain grades of tissue, is so much higher now than ever before in our history that we are plagued with a great shortage. This paper shortage has developed among the small newspapers of the country especially, and at the present time many publications are faced with the danger of suspension. As a result, almost every press or publishers' association in the United States, including the smaller newspaper associations of the country, have been suggesting and requesting that the work of this committee be carried on.

This resolution provides that the committee go into all the paper production and supply distribution problems and make a very careful study of them, with two objectives: First of all, to get a fairer distribution of the present available supply, and to see to it that whatever newsprint and paper available is divided fairly and equitably between the different sections of the country and among the different newspapers and publications needing this paper. Then, second, the long-range effort, or even more important work of the committee, will deal with the getting of increased paper production. We must get production of more newsprint and other paper so that in the future we will not be compelled to divide up shortages but will have a sufficient supply to meet all of our requirements.

In this connection let me tell you something of the work that the committee contemplates. It will follow up on the work of the original committee in making mutually satisfactory agreements with Canadian officials and the producers of newsprint and other paper in Canada. It would study methods to increase the American supply of paper through the use of Alaskan pulpwood and the establishment of American-owned mills in Alaska. If such a program would prove feasible it would be of great aid to the economy of that great Territory.

Let me digress for a moment to tell you, in that connection, that several larger newspaper publishers and other groups in the United States are making a study of the whole Alaskan situation to learn whether we can obtain a part of our pulp and paper needs there and, if so, at what price. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Krug, has recently made a study of the Alaskan paper possibilities. He is very enthusiastic about the outlook for obtaining a greatly increased American newsprint and paper supply from Alaskan sources.

We also have another interesting situation in the Southwest. Our original committee aided greatly, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] will probably tell you a little later, the development of a new newsprint industry in southeast Texas. There is a mill at Lufkin making newsprint from loblolly pine, which has been a lifesaver for the newspaper and magazine and other publishers in the Southwest.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I simply want to commend the gentleman for bringing this resolution in at this time and to say that when I introduced a somewhat similar resolution in the Seventy-ninth Congress, House Resolution 163, March 5, 1945, I received a great deal of volunteer correspondence from various parts of the country emphasizing the need for this sort of an investigation. I hold in my hand considerable of that correspondence, and through all of it there runs the theme, "We are not pinched now, but we ought to do something about it if we can," and when we get an opportunity we ought to take such steps to be sure that we will never be pinched again like we are now.

Mr. BROWN of OHIO. I thank the gentleman. I might add to what he has said that I have literally hundreds, and perhaps even thousands, of communications from newspapers in all sections of the country, calling for something to be done relative to the newsprint shortage which now exists.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for introducing this resolution, and I desire to say that the newspapers of this country feel that this committee has already done much, and can do more, to help them, for I feel like they do not get a fair share of the paper that is now so scarce in this country.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think it is the small newspapers which are now suffering the most from the present shortage.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has mentioned the Southland Paper Mill at Lufkin, Tex. Is it not true that the activity of the newsprint committee in the last Congress had much to do with the bringing about of the doubling of the capacity of that plant?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman that, in my opinion, had it not been for the work of the committee, which he sponsored, that the newspapers of Oklahoma, Texas, and throughout that section of the country probably would have been forced to suspend publication during the war, and that this committee did get priorities and necessary equipment for the Lufkin mill so that it might operate.

I not only call the attention of the House to the work of the Boren committee in the past, but also to the work that can be done in the future in obtaining a greater paper supply from the southeastern part of the United States. Several great southern scientists worked on methods of making paper from the slash pine of the southeastern section of the United States. We now get most of our wrapping paper from that section of the country. There have been a great many experiments carried on, and are being carried on right now, in an effort to find ways to make good newsprint from slash pine. If our scientists can work out a way to use this resinous wood to produce usable newsprint from slash pine, they will not only solve the paper problem in this country, and make us safe in time of war—for we were faced with a dangerous situation during the last war because of the paper shortage—but it will also solve many of the economic problems of the Southeast, where at the present time the mechanization of cotton production is under way. If slash pine can be used for the production of newsprint, it will do much to aid the economic situation of the entire southeastern part of the country.

I further call the attention of those of you who are interested in agriculture to the experiments that have been conducted at several Midwest universities seeking ways to manufacture paper out of farm waste, corncobs, cornstalks, straw, and so forth. Paper from that source would lighten the pressure, or the load, on spruce paper, or the paper that comes from long-fiber wood. If a solution can be found for that problem so that we can make more and more paper from farm waste, then we will, through farm chemurgy, go a long way in helping agriculture remain prosperous. So the long-range work of this committee is just as important, or perhaps even more so, than the short-range work.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will this committee when established have power to bring in legislation? Is it to be a legislative committee?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No; it is to be a select committee to make a study which no other one committee can make. It could then recommend legislation, just as the original subcommittee recommended legislation which was approved and reported by other committees, and enacted.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I am in accord with what is sought to be accomplished by this resolution, but may I ask the gentleman if there is any legislative committee presently in the House that might carry on this work without the creation of a special committee?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did have a subcommittee which handled a part of this work, but this resolution covers fields over which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has no jurisdiction. Therefore, it is thought that in order to do a complete job the problem should be considered by a special committee, on which, by the way, I feel rather certain will be representation from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Those who have had previous service and experience on the original Halleck-Boren committee will, I hope, be named to serve on this committee so as to carry on their good work.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. There are many of us who supported the reorganization of Congress who hoped that the passage of that act might eliminate some of the many special committees that have been set up in previous Congresses. Is there a move in this direction now, to set up other special committees?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. The fact is that no special committes have been set up except where there has been a special need. May I remind the gentleman, however, that the Reorganization Act does not in any way prohibit the naming of select committees, as the majority leader pointed out earlier today. Instead, the House struck out of the Reorganization Act a prohibition against the naming of select committees, because the House realized and appreciated the necessity of having special committees to meet situations just like this.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think there is need for some of these special committees, and I will not oppose this resolution, but I do hope we will not get into the position of setting up a great many special investigating committees, as we did in many of the past Congresses.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I feel rather certain there will not be so many. But the work has to be done. Perhaps the best possible way of doing it is to take advantage of and use the experienced organization which already exists.

I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. I am in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Nebraska, Dr. MILLER, that it is inadvisable to indiscriminately appoint special committees. I am definitely of the opinion that in no case should a special committee be appointed when there is a regular committee with full jurisdiction in the matter. However, I am of the opinion that in this particular instance the views that have been expressed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] and perhaps also held by others do not apply. As the gentleman from Ohio has already pointed out, there are several phases of this study to be made by this committee which would come under the jurisdiction of different committees of the House.

I can very readily understand from my previous connection with the committee which had jurisdiction of this matter in the last session of Congress that there are features which might properly come before the Committee on Agriculture; some would come before the Committee on Ways and Means; and some that would come before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I do not believe that these individual committees could make the full and complete study which is necessary in this important matter. Each of such committees would be limited to its particular legislative jurisdiction. I am therefore of the opinion that the best results can be obtained by the appointment of a special committee such as has been provided for in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio and which is now before the House for action.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. The points he brings out are well made. I might also add to the list of committees the gentleman has named the Committee on Territories, now merged in the Committee on Public Lands and Insular Possessions, which would have jurisdiction over Alaskan matters. So there are about five different committees that might have jurisdiction, and that is the reason why we have before you here today the question of establishing this select committee. In all probability, the various committees which have an interest in this legislation will be represented on this select committee. I might say, after discussing the matter with the leadership on both sides, that I expect to introduce an amendment at the close of debate to increase the number of members from five to seven so that there will be a more representative group on this committee from the various committees of the House.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE].

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. I commend the gentleman on the position he has taken and the remarks he has made. The resolution is timely. The situation is becoming very critical in Oklahoma. The cosmopolitan newspapers have already given warning that the advertisers will soon lose their space and the small papers will go out of business.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. I might add to his remarks that we are receiving complaints from many sections of the country that the shortage of newsprint is seriously interfering with the normal operations of the mercantile establishments in those communities.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. I am very happy to see this resolution come to the floor of the House. I shall not only support it wholeheartedly, but I hope the committee will be able to get under way immediately. The problem is critical and needs the expert attention of this group.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WORLEY. Can the gentleman give the House an idea as to how much this might cost?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not think the cost would be over $25,000 in the next 2 years, and probably not that much, because we are expecting to take advantage of the research facilities of a number of universities and of the help of some of the Government departments, such as the Department of the Interior and the Army engineers, all of which are also working on this problem and who will aid the committee. If the committee is created, we will try to coordinate the work of all these organizations to solve this very, very important problem.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Would it be within the jurisdiction of this committee to investigate the effect of the importation of paper and pulp into this country under the reciprocal trade agreement?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We will have to go into the effect of our present tariff laws on newsprint and paper supply and into the question of any changes in the present laws we may wish to recommend for the consideration of the Committee on Ways and Means to help solve the problem. That is a very, very important angle.

SHORTAGE OF NEWSPRINT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield try was under the impression that the passage of the Reorganization Act would provide that the standing committees would have the power to and would conduct any and all investigations that might be necessary, so that it would eliminate the unnecessary cost of special committees.

WHY DUPLICATE COSTS AND WORK?

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] comes in with this resolution notwithstanding the fact that his own committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has conducted an investigation along this line already. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] both were members, has conducted an investigation and the gentleman from Ohio states they have accomplished a great deal of good; they have made substantial progress. The Senate Committee on Small Business has made an extensive study of the newspaper field which certainly has touched upon the newsprint shortages. Other committees of both Houses, and the newspaper and lumbering industries have made valuable contributions to our understanding of why there is an acute world shortage of wood pulp.

In view of all this, I wonder why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which already is familiar with the background and the facts, should not retain jurisdiction and power to continue that investigation?

I am not for a moment questioning that the investigation already begun should be continued.

I fully appreciate the fact that the shortage of newsprint is critical. Prices are going up steadily but it does not seem to increase the flow of wood pulp to the paper mills, and of paper to the printers, merely to raise the prices. Demands for more and more newsprint are rising all the time. Tremendous quantities of white paper are being used by newspapers, and by magazines too, for advertising. Circulation is increasing for the big dailies and the national magazines.

For them the problem is not so acute. Many of them own paper mills outright or have substantial blocks of stock or have long-term preferential contracts which have assured them of a steady stream of rolls for their presses. Even so, we have all read in the newspapers about some big city dailies which have had to reduce their number of pages to conserve paper.

ACUTE PROBLEM TO SMALL PAPERS

For the small dailies and weeklies, the trade papers, the labor press, the foreign-language press, and the neighborhood papers the newsprint shortage right now is about the most pressing problem on the doorstep.

Some are practically faced with suspension; others have been forced to use higher grades of paper at increased cost. There are a large number of neighborhood newspapers with circulation in my congressional district in Chicago. They are the big-city counterpart of the county seat weeklies down-State. They fill a real need in city life, and we want to keep them alive and flourishing.

BULWARK OF DEMOCRACY

The small newspaper in America, whether it is a daily or a weekly, is the bulwark of democracy.

The editor is closer to the feel of the people and he has no vast economic ties to business monopoly. While our small newspapers and magazines live and prosper we shall not lose our liberties, for there will always be a voice of the people.

I am speaking now even of such substantial and flourishing newspapers as the city daily owned and published by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], who has introduced this resolution, and who doubtless has good personal reasons as well as reasons of public policy for wishing to make this investigation as chairman of a select committee.

While I doubt that a good word for the Democratic Party would ever creep into the columns of a newspaper operated by the gentleman from Ohio, who is always vigilant in behalf of his own party, the smaller newspapers are usually fairer to Democratic and nonpartisan candidates and issues. As we are all aware, more and more newspapers are being swallowed up by chain ownerships. That sometimes makes for better newspapers but seldom for greater newspapers. One way to protect small, independent newspapers is to find out why we cannot get newsprint from abroad, and why we cannot develop a newsprint-manufacturing industry of our own in the United States and in Alaska.

REPUBLICANS SEEK CREDIT FOR DEMOCRATIC EFFORTS

As a matter of fact, vast strides have been made in the South, in the Pacific Northwest, and in Alaska already for using the trees we grow in those regions just as economically and efficiently and to produce as good a product as comes out of Canada or New England, and at least competitive with the product of the Scandinavian countries.

Forest-products laboratories built and operated under the Democratic administration have cooperated with the several States and with private enterprise to ascertain the best ways of using these woods, and plans are now under way to finance and build and operate newsprint factories in all those regions of the United States.

Is it possible that the Republicans think they can gain some credit for what the Democratic administration has done, sometimes over the anguished wails of the so-called Republican economy bloc, to encourage our home industry?

I feel this resolution should not be brought here because it violates the promise that was given to the House that the standing committees will make all investigations that are necessary and thereby save thousands upon thousands of dollars. That would be in the interest of economy about which Republican Members talk so much and do so little. Notwithstanding that fact, here is another resolution, and there will be some more later calling for additional expenditures.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. PLOESER. Surely the distinguished gentleman from Illinois does not mean to leave the impression that the Reorganization Act prohibited special committees?

Mr. SABATH. Not directly. It did not prohibit them.

Mr. PLOESER. As a matter of fact, the original provisions of the act were taken out by the House, were they not?

Mr. SABATH. But the country and those of us who have so long advocated changes to simplify and speed up procedures and reduce costs were under the impression that these special committees would be eliminated and that the regular standing committees, with their increased membership, would be able to conduct such investigations.

Mr. PLOESER. There never was a time during the passage of the Reorganization Act when this House gave the impression to the country that special committees would be eliminated.

Mr. SABATH. I am of the opinion that if the gentleman will go back and study the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the debates on this measure he will change his recollection.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I wish to state to the gentleman that Dr. Herty, of the University of Georgia, has demonstrated the use of slash pine to make newsprint.

Mr. SABATH. I understand that. There were many other experts in Illinois, especially at the State university and elsewhere who believe that the United States can become practically independent of imports through development of new processes for utilizing domestic woods and other fibers. The plant at Lufkin, Tex., which was built on Dr. Herter's theories and under his direction, has produced a good grade of newsprint from East Texas native pines. The Pacific coast lumber industry believes that millions of tons of slash and trim and stumpage now wasted can be used to make newsprint. Paper manufacturing may turn out to be Alaska's biggest industry in a few years. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I still believe that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which already knows of these facts, should be the one to continue this investigation of the newsprint shortages.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the creation of the special committee for which this resolution provides and to the creation of any other special committee that may be provided for in any other resolution that may be offered on the floor of this House.

I am sympathetic, certainly, with the objectives and purposes that are set forth in the resolution that is offered here this afternoon, but I say to you those same purposes and objectives can be accomplished and will be accomplished as well by a subcommittee of a standing committee of this House as by any special committee that may be set up. If you reflect but a moment, those of you who were here during the debate and discussion on the Reorganization Act of 1946, you will remember that the joint committee which reported that bill to both the House and the Senate recommended in its report that special and select committees be not allowed in either body. The Senate debated vigorously that proposition and they left that prohibition within the terms of the bill as it passed that body. The bill came to the House and here the prohibition was excluded from the provisions, not by any vote on the floor of the House, as I understand, but by agreement of those who had charge of the strategy in bringing the resolution to the floor. So this House has had no opportunity to pass upon the question of whether we have select committees within the terms and meaning and purpose of the Reorganization Act as we now have it. I say to you that the work that was done by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses under the resolution introduced by the now majority leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], giving the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee the power to look into grade labeling, brands, newsprint matters, and other things, was good work; and the gentleman from Indiana himself is witness to that fact in the statements he made on the floor of this House on Friday last in a colloquy between himself and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY]. He took the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] to task for opposing special or select committees, and in his remarks he asserted that certainly the experience, the knowledge, and the ability and attainment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], the present sponsor of House Resolution 58, ought not to be dissipated and thrown to waste because of his experience on the subcommittee headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], who then headed that subcommittee that looked into these matters.

I say to you if you want to put it on the basis of experience in looking into this matter, if you want to put it on the basis of the quantum of experience, I see certainly no distinct difference in the ability or the experience of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON]. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON], who is now chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, also was a member of the subcommittee headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN]; and certainly he is ever ready and willing, no doubt, to look into the very matters this resolution purports to submit to us.

I do not know what the membership of the House wants to do on this proposition, but every one of you who was here in 1946 remembers that one of the main purposes of the Reorganization Act was to do away with the multiplicity of committees, the duplication of functions, and the overlapping of effort, time, energy, and experience of the Members of the House.

There were 48 committees in the House. In many instances you had two, three, and even four committees meeting at the same time and you were not able to attend all of them. One of the purposes of the Reorganization Act was to do away with the necessity for trying to be at two or more places at once. Now, then, in less than 60 days from the convening of this Congress, the first in which we operate under that Reorganization Act, we find a rash of duplications offered to us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House under the reorganization bill as they stand now give the standing committees of this House jurisdiction to do any and everything that this resolution does and if it does not do that, then a resolution to empower a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee can be brought in here that will empower that committee to do it. That is the way it ought to be done.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman does not object to the work being done. If I understand him correctly, he insists that it should be done by a subcommittee of a standing committee. Now, does the gentleman have any objection to providing the necessary funds to conduct the investigation if made by a subcommittee of a standing committee?

Mr. PICKETT. As a member of the Subcommittee on Accounts of the House Administration Committee, it would be my duty and I would vote to give adequate funds, in my judgment in keeping with the requests that were made by the proper authority, for the purpose of carrying on any investigation authorized by a resolution of this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret to see us here today take our first backward step in an effort to destroy a very carefully worked out, improved standing committee system for the Congress. By adopting this resolution today we are taking that first step and I fear that we will go back, back, back to the same old duplicating, crazy-quilt, confusing, tanglefoot committee system which the Congress left only about 45 days ago.

The keystone of the reorganization of the Congress was to strengthen the standing committee structure where 90 percent of our work is done. It was an effort to get away from this crazy-quilt committee pattern by cutting the standing committees down from 48 to 19.

We were applauded by the country for this improvement of our committee structure.

It is true that when that bill came before the Congress we did not have a prohibition against special committees. That was compromised at that time. I did not feel badly for compromising it then because I felt that the jurisdiction to establish special committees still lay within the will of the House at any time to create or not to create a special committee. So I felt that regardless of which party was in power, and particularly if my own party was in power, we would be able to hold to reorganization and to decline to go backward to the old hopeless morass of overlapping standing and special committees.

I would like to make a little comment to the new committee chairmen who have just assumed a terrific obligation in conducting the affairs of the standing committees of the great Congress of the United States.

By allowing this resolution to pass, by setting up this special committee to investigate the newsprint situation, no matter how much we are in sympathy with it, the purpose of the thing, you are tearing down the jurisdiction of your own committees.

You are doing that within 45 days of the time that jurisdiction has been carefully realined according to a program presented to the Reorganization Committee by one of the most distinguished Members of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

You are making a confession to the country at large, when you permit this special committee to be set up today, that the standing committees of the House of Representatives are impotent to handle your difficult questions.

You cannot expect to say "No" to many of the requests that will be brought in here by veterans, by labor organizations, by manufacturers and by others asking for the establishment of a special committee.

You cannot say "Why, we will handle that through the jurisdiction of the standing committee." Instead they will say, "Oh, no, we want this same special treatment by a special select committee created aside from the committee organization, to do only one job, as was done in the case of newsprint."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I know that the gentleman is an expert on reorganization legislation and organization matters of the House.

Mr. MONRONEY. I do not claim to be an expert on anything.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And on other congressional matters. But, of course, I have noted that the gentleman did not offer an amendment to put that provision back in the Legislative Reorganization Act.

Mr. MONRONEY. I think I explained why; that the jurisdiction is within the House of Representatives to refuse to establish special committees.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We are exercising that right and the privilege now.

Mr. MONRONEY. Yes; and I am sure you are going to exercise it very, very badly.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And leave it up to the Congress to do it. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question.

LAW LIBRARY FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

Mr. MONRONEY. Will the gentleman from Ohio make the question short? I have but a limited amount of time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes; I will, if the gentleman will permit me, and the question is this: How could any one legislative committee of the House cover all the various jurisdictions in this resolution?

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman for that question. I get the question and I would like to answer it. The gentleman stood here for about 10 minutes and told the House of Representatives how much work had been done by the newsprint subcommittee when it was under the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. And as he elaborated these duties I saw that under the credit which he claimed the committee had done work it certainly had overlapped the jurisdiction of other committees to the same extent that this one will cross jurisdictional lines. If we had the power to create a subcommittee to investigate the slash pine paper industry, which is a great industry, as a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce last year, then you will have the same situation this year as last year.

I am in complete sympathy with the purpose of getting more newsprint. But I say to you that the best committee to give you more newsprint, not only to investigate, but to have the power to legislate after you have conducted your investigation, is a standing committee of the House.

The gentleman on this side of the aisle is to be congratulated for the good work that he has done in carrying out the investigation under the regular machinery of the Congress, under the reorganization machinery, and I regret to see that in bringing in this proposal at this time he is backsliding into the same old hopeless committee morass that we last had.

Now, in my colloquy with the distinguished majority leader last Monday, he never answered my question, and the gentleman from Ohio barely answers it on a jurisdictional matter; of why this year we have to have a special select committee to study newsprint, despite the great job that was done by the distinguished gentlemen on the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee last year.

The gentleman from Indiana, the majority leader, says that we dare not dispense with the experienced talent of the distinguished gentleman who will head this committee up. I, as well as every other Member of the Congress respect the great ability of the gentleman from Ohio, but I do not think it is time in this Congress that we start hand-tailoring our special committee structure to fit the individual talent of any particular Member. If you are going to do that you are going backward instead of forward in conducting the organization of this House as the people of the country want it conducted.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Has the gentleman ever had any experience in assigning members on regular committees?

Mr. MONRONEY. I regret to say I have not.

Mr. HALLECK. Well, I have had quite a bit. Now, I do not know what other people do about it, but on this side we work very diligently to find out about a man's talents and his experience and his background, and put him on the committee where his abilities will give to the Congress and the country the best service. Certainly, as the great exponent of congressional streamlining the gentleman ought to agree with that fundamental, and it grieves me to hear him argue here now that the experience of a man on a committee like this should be thrown aside.

Mr. MONRONEY. What the gentleman is saying is just the reverse of his point. If he has assigned men, and I am sure he has on his side of the aisle, who are experienced, on the standing committees, who have made a life's work of that subject in the Congress, then why pull the rug out from under them and transfer jurisdiction to a special commitee?

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKETT. It might be called to the attention of the distinguished majority leader again that the now chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which had jurisdiction of this same subject in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses, was a member of the subcommittee that looked into this very question during those two Congresses. Certainly you are not throwing away any experience if you keep him at the job.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion.

Let us look at the facts. We gave each of these 19 reorganized committees of the Congress four experts to be paid $8,000 a year each. We did it for one reason and one reason alone, that it would help us to get away from this overpowering rash of special committees and special staffs.

If we are going to go ahead and set up special committees every time it happens to suit the lot of one or two particularly skilled men in Congress, then how are we going to account to the people for over $600,000 worth of specialized talent that we have given to the regular standing committees to do this job?

I do not think we want to go back and duplicate the expense of the regular standing committee staffs with something like the expense of two years ago when the special committees cost us for staffs $480,000, or last year when it cost us $438,000 for special committees. But that is what you are going into.

If you want to live within the spirit of the Reorganization Act, to strengthen the standing committees of the Congress, and that was the keystone of this thing, then do not break through it at this late date because of the indispensability of any one single individual who might want to head up any particular special committee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, it is about time we call a spade a spade, and stop this shadow-boxing in which my distinguished friends on the other side of the aisle have been engaging.

I do not know whether or not what I am about to say has particular application to this particular resolution. Possibly it does not have, but I served on this newsprint committee in the last Congress. It was a committee in which there was no partisanship, and I am very sure there will be no partisanship in the committee to be set up by this resolution. But we might as well make clear, right here and now, the real meaning of all this talk concerning the Reorganization Act, for which our friends across the aisle profess such reverent attachment.

We have a Reorganization Act, for which the gentleman from Oklahoma claims much credit. He refers to the morass of committees and to the difficulties we had. Well, all recognize we are having a lot of difficulties under this Reorganization Act. Certainly it has left very much indeed to be desired as far as the efficient functioning of the House of Representatives is concerned. But let us leave that point.

Now, what is all this talk about? It is just a lot of smoke screen Mr. Speaker. It is just a lot of window dressing. The people of this country expect the Congress of the United States, Republicans and Democrats alike, to take a look at some of the things that have been going on in this country. The people of this country want to know the facts, the unadulterated truth about their government and how it has been and is being run. It was not without purpose, therefore, that the provision against the creation of special committees was taken out of the reorganization bill.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. No; I cannot yield now. I have only a very brief time. I will yield later, but I want to conclude this statement.

You can say what you will, but the thing that is disturbing a lot of you who are crying out against any special committees is not that the Reorganization Act is going to be violated. You are not very much concerned about that. What you really are concerned about is that there may be some real, honest-to-God investigations that may disclose some of the things that have been going on in the Government and in the country.

The newsprint committee, strictly speaking, was not an investigatory committee. It was a committee that worked in conjunction with the departments, to aid in the solving of a very threatening situation. It is now intended to give aid and assistance in meeting a real crisis which threatens.

The question has been raised as to what is proposed by the majority in respect to special committees. The gentleman from Oklahoma in one breath commends us for our extreme devotion to the Reorganization Act—a devotion,

I will say to the gentleman, that has taken out a lot of chunks here and there and then in the next breath the gentleman would have you believe that instead of trying to live within the Reorganization Act, we are embarking upon some great movement to set up all manner of special committees.

We shall set up special committees only when we believe they are desirable and in the best interests of the country. When we come to that conclusion and conviction we will not be dissuaded by a lot of shadow-boxing talk about the sanctity of the Reorganization Act, because the gentleman himself knows that if any presumption exists it is a presumption that we were not to be bound by the provision originally in the bill prohibiting special committees. That provision was eliminated, and the presumption is there will be situations when such committees should be established.

We have already delegated and authorized regular standing committees to investigate certain matters—and properly so. We have done that for the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and for the Committee on Expenditures, and this morning for the Committee on Education and Labor. Does the gentleman say that represents a departure from what he thinks the reorganization ought to be?

No; we have a job to do in this Congress, and we are going to do it. We all know the standing committees of the House are organized primarily to consider pending legislation in their assigned fields. The Reorganization Act itself indicates that the jobs to be carried on by the legislative committees in the field of investigation shall be in considerable measure those jobs looking to the enactment of legislation. I do not know whether legislation will be proposed by this newsprint committee, but I would assume from my experience on the previous committee that it will not have much to do with legislation.

We all recognize that the standing committees of the House are burdened. I understand that the Armed Services Committee already have 11 subcommittees and that the Public Lands Committee, which now comprises 6 of the former committees of Congress, is under a terrific pressure to do the many jobs that they have to do. The regular committees have this great burden of responsibility and have this work to do, and, in many instances, they may find themselves at a disadvantage in undertaking some investigations that may be necessary.

Certainly, when a proposed special committee deals with a subject that has to do with interstate and foreign commerce and which also has to do with public lands and agriculture and forestry, which is now merged in the Committee on Agriculture, who is there who will say there is any sound reason for taking a position against the establishment of that special committee?

But the gentleman makes much of the fact that the resolution is introduced by my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and intimates that there may be other people here as able as the gentleman from Ohio. Probably there are many who would assert the same. But the truth of the matter is, and I ought to know because I served on the committee as the ranking Republican member, the gentleman from Ohio is an expert in the newsprint and paper field. As a member of the committee my principal interest was in the brand name and labeling field, and the principal interest of the gentleman from Ohio was in the newsprint and paper field. I confidently assert that he knows more about the subject, by reason of the great background and experience that he has had, than any man in the House. I see here my good friends on the other side of the aisle who served on that committee. I will not call them to testify. They did very able work and made a great contribution to the committee's accomplishments.

Much has been said about the matter of expense. This great solicitude on the part of some of my friends on the other side of the aisle in the matter of saving governmental expenses was not much in evidence the other day when we were trying to cut the proposed budget. It is not going to cost any more to have this special committee do the job than to have a regular committee do it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If special committees are not set up from time to time to carry on investigations, the evils that we know now existing will continue, and rascals who nest in the different departments downtown will not be disturbed. They take great comfort in the fact that the reorganization bill was brought into existence, because they think they find protection within the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, the gentleman corroborates my previous statement, to the effect that a lot of this talk is nothing more than shadow-boxing. I want the people of the country to understand it. I also want the people to understand that, recognizing our responsibility; yes, recognizing our devotion to the regular committees and the organization of the House of Representatives, we shall not be dissuaded from doing that which we know will be the best way to bring to the attention of the Congress and the country some of the things that have gone on in the Government. The Reorganization Act was not intended to be a strait-jacket that precludes our doing our duty and discharging our responsibilities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is not a party question. I look upon it as a business investigation. I regret to differ with my esteemed friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] with respect to variations from the reorganization bill. I was equally enthusiastic for the reorganization bill. I am still enthusiastic for it, but I do not think it can be a success if it has to be static, and if this House has its hands tied so that it cannot work its will where special conditions apply. I think this is one of those cases where special conditions do apply, where there is a special subject that needs to be treated in a special way.

I would estimate that we have at least 50 resolutions pending before the Rules Committee for special committees for this and for that. It always happens in every session of Congress. Wherever those questions have come before the Rules Committee, both Democrats and Republicans have examined those resolutions with the utmost care, and the policy of that committee, I am satisfied, is to grant those resolutions only in exceptional circumstances. Now, what have we here today? The newsprint question. It requires special study and special attention and should have the benefit of the presence on that committee of those members who have already been conducting that investigation, who are no longer members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by reason of the fact that we do have a reorganization bill. We would not need this if it were not for the reorganization bill, because those members who have been carrying on the investigation should continue to carry it on. So here we have a special case and we have a situation with which this Nation is confronted where the small business of the Nation and the small publications are in a position where they cannot get the necessary newsprint, whereas the big publications, who use great quantities of it, can get it. We have a condition where there are great pine-growing areas of the country that will produce great resources for our Western States, our Southern States, and our Northern States, if we can devise methods by which those pine-growing areas can have their product manufactured into pulp. All those questions need special consideration and special attention.

I hope it will be the pleasure of this House to regard the reorganization bill as a living thing, not as a reactionary measure which we cannot improve upon. I think that was demonstrated in the action of the House in not placing into the reorganization bill a prohibition against special committees.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Newsprint Committee has been in existence since 1943. In my opinion it has accomplished a great deal during a very crucial period owing to the fact that shortages of newsprint have been very pronounced in the past few years. The general situation is not a great deal better now.

One big trouble with reference to a steady and dependable supply of newsprint for all papers in this country is that approximately 75 percent of our supply is obtained from companies other than domestic companies. To a rather great extent many newspapers are at the mercy of foreign newsprint companies. This 75-percent-supply source is doubtless becoming less stable than in the prewar period. Foreign people, as well as governments of foreign countries, the Newsprint Committee has been repeatedly told, are bidding more and more money in order to obtain newsprint.

One primary reason I am interested in continuing the Newsprint Committee is that I represent a section of the Nation where great efforts have been made and much money has been spent to develop a newsprint industry. Incidentally, a tree from which newsprint can be made will grow in 10 years in the South to a size which requires approximately 60 years of growth in the Canadian newsprint areas. For years it was contended that newsprint could not be successfully produced from the pine timber in the piney woods areas of the South; however, Mr. E. L. Kurth, of Lufkin, Tex., with his Southland Paper Co. has disproved this. But Mr. Kurth has had his many troubles. To his great credit, however, it may be said he has whipped problem after problem with reference to the production of newsprint in the South. The Newsprint Committee has been helpful, in my opinion, in keeping alive this very difficult yet successful effort which has been made by people in the South.

In the entire existence of the Newsprint Committee, there has been no partisanship characterizing its work. Every member of the Newsprint Committee including our distinguished majority leader, Mr. HALLECK; its former chairman, Mr. BOREN, of Oklahoma; Mr. WOLVERTON; and Mr. BROWN of Ohio, has indicated a personal interest in assuring the survival and expansion of this industry. Several members of the committee have visited the Lufkin plant.

Probably there is no Member of the House more able by experience than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] to help successfully with reference to domestic newsprint problems. He very definitely sees the side and understands the problems of the little newspaper man. He has been fair, considerate, and, in my opinion, has done a constructive job as a member of the Newsprint Committee.

As to the fear expressed here concerning this legislation injuring the Reorganization Act, I entertain no such fear. There never was a time when our committee system in the House was so thoroughly fixed and inexorable that special committees were banned. I do not feel as a result of the passage of the reorganization it was meant to decree that no more special committees could come into existence. I would not state that I shall never vote for a special committee. One test should be whether or not the special committee will serve a worth-while and useful purpose, in other words whether there is a need for the special committee. In my opinion, the creation of the Newsprint Committee to be headed by Mr. BROWN of Ohio, will fully justify its existence. I trust the membership of the House will support it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I admire the very forthright manner in which the gentleman from Indiana has just addressed the House. I do not question for one moment the competency of the gentleman from Ohio. I shall not take the position of hereafter opposing special committees, but I do want to insist that wherever it is possible investigations should be conducted by the regular standing committees. I think this position is compatible with the reorganization bill. Only once in my life have I sponsored a resolution asking for an investigation, and in that particular resolution which was adopted a few years ago I provided that the membership of the committee should come from the House Committee on Agriculture, of which I was a member; and I know that that committee, of which I had the honor to be chairman, did an excellent job in investigating the Farm Security Administration. Just recently we wanted to investigate the fertilizer situation. Certainly that did not require any special committee. The chairman of that committee, the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], appointed a subcommittee under the able chairmanship of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANTON JOHNSON]. I have never seen a subject more carefully or more quickly covered than the fertilizer subject was covered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Now, going back to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, I believe he has frankly told this House and the country that they intend to ask for special committees whenever they want special committees and do not doubt that they will get special committees just about every time they ask for special committees. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] will be chairman of the first special committee, and on down the line as time moves on you will find other special committees being created to take over the work which should be done by the standing committees.

I do not object to the objectives sought by this investigation, but it does seem to me, in view of the arguments which have been advanced today, that the job could well be done by a subcommittee of one of the standing committees of the House. We are either going to abide by the reorganization bill in this regard or we are not. Frankly, it appears that we do not intend hereafter to abide by it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, ever so often it becomes necessary to write an explanatory footnote to history. That is my only purpose today.

When the Reorganization Act passed the Senate and came over to our committee, I was a member of the joint committee and labored shoulder to shoulder with our good friend from Oklahoma. Moreover, I commend his devotion to the Reorganization Act and the zeal with which he defends it. It became necessary to get clearance of that bill from the leadership. In early July we sat in the Speaker's office. The distinguished former Speaker of the House was there. The present distinguished Speaker of the House was there. The Parliamentarian also participated in that conference, along with the gentleman from Oklahoma and myself, and that very able and estimable Member, former Majority Leader MCCORMACK. The then Speaker of the House objected to one item in the bill and, if he does not mind my affectionate allusion to him, I said, "Sam, what you are referring to now is my pet baby and I do not want it taken out." He said, "It cannot remain in the bill because I have had experience with that matter and it must come out." So it came out.

The present distinguished occupant of the Speaker's chair said, "You have a provision there under which we could create no select or special committees." Being farseeing, and, of course, seeing down the corridor to 1948, knowing what was going to happen, knowing the necessity for looking at a good many things in government where there was misfeasance and maladministration, he said, "That must come out."

So we discussed the matter there very freely, and, as a result, it did come out. It must be said as a footnote to history, in the interest of Speaker JOE MARTIN, that he insisted it come out and it came out. There was therefore a perfect understanding that the authority to create special or select committees was preserved and there was reason to believe that such committees would be established.

As a consequence, the subpena power was left in the standing committees of the Senate and was taken away from the standing committees of the House for the very specific purpose of having select committees in addition thereto. When the bill finally came to the floor of the House there was written in it, before you passed on the bill, a provision on page 13 which reads as follows:

> The Speaker shall appoint all select and conference committees which shall be ordered by the House from time to time.

Is anything necessary to make it plainer that we had in contemplation the creation of select committees, irrespective of the subject matter that was going to come within the purview of that committee? The Speaker had it in mind and in consequence we violate neither the tradition nor the spirit of the Reorganization Act when a committee of this kind is created.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois had expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, with the exception of 5 seconds, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am not impressed with the objections advanced against the adoption of this resolution. I am impressed, however, with immediate need for the inquiry proposed by the resolution. I believe that a special committee with members who are experienced in this subject can bring about results and give relief to the smaller newspapers of the country.

Let me emphasize the need for relief to small newspapers. On February 24, in my home town, the Kokomo Tribune, the only newspaper published in that city, and which serves some 40,000 people, had this to say:

With only enough newsprint in its warehouse to last 12 days normally, the Kokomo Tribune today announced that, beginning tomorrow—

That was yesterday—

it would make a drastic curtailment in its size, eliminating advertising, with the exception of classified ads.

The paper will go to press each day with only four pages.

This shows how critical the situation is in my section of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that if this special committee is authorized by the House we will get early action designed to give relief in this critical situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Ohio: On page 1, line 2, after the word "of", strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONRONEY) there were—ayes 139, noes 53.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and ten Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 269, nays 100, not voting 63, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be given five legislative days to extend their remarks on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of reciprocal trade agreements.

Mr. MACY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered on Washington's Birthday in New York.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the University of Iowa celebrated its centennial, and the State Legislature of Iowa passed a resolution of commendation. The Iowa delegation in the Senate and the House have prepared a statement honoring the University of Iowa and incorporating this resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the statement and the resolution be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 18 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That in the free competitive enterprise system which is typical and traditional in the United States of America, small business is the keystone. It is the purpose of the House of Representatives to encourage the growth, prosperity, and competition of small enterprises; and be it further

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of nine Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business, existing, arising, or that may arise, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering the normal operation of established small business and/or its development and enterprise; (2) whether agencies, departments of the Government or Government owned or controlled corporations are properly, adequately, or equitably serving the needs of small business; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sales, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the need for a sound program for the solution of the postwar problems of small business.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ such personnel, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any properly designated chairman of a subcommittee thereof, or any member designated by him, and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 1 to 6.

Page 2, line 17, strike out "as soon as practicable during the present Congress" and insert "on or before December 31, 1947."

Page 3, line 5, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

Page 3, line 8, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time assigned to me to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], ranking member of the Committee on Rules, and I yield myself now such time as I may desire to use.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 18 creates a Select Committee on Small Business. It should meet with no opposition from either side of the aisle.

The germ of the idea of the Small Business Committee first came from the Republican side of the House during the summer of 1941. At that time, when small business was suffering from the dislocation caused by our defense effort, this unofficial committee was the only forum for the opinions of small businessmen. It was created at the suggestion of the then minority floor leader, the present Speaker of the House. Out of this unofficial committee finally came the Small Business Committee which functioned during the past two sessions of Congress.

During the war the Small Business Committee made recommendations that formulated much legislation to insure fair distribution among the small businessmen of the country of war contracts and the equitable allocation of the goods which were in scarce supply.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman says this was a Republican idea. I think both sides are rather jealous of it. I understand the Democratic side introduced the first bill concerning it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is true, the first official House committee was created under a resolution presented from the Democratic side of the aisle. I think there is enough glory and credit for both parties in connection with the work this committee has done. Adjustments of the OPA and WPB regulations were made at the request of this committee to allow small businessmen to continue to operate and exist. In the immediate postwar period, the committee was largely responsible for special provisions in the surplus property regulations which would permit participation of small retailers and manufacturers. During the past 15 years, Government regulations in business have constantly increased. Many small businessmen now find operations difficult, if not impossible, because of the numerous directives, orders, and restrictions imposed upon them by Federal and State Governments. This Small Business Committee can render real and great service to small concerns by formulating policies for the removal of hardships imposed upon their operations by various agencies of the Government. It can protect small business from unnecessary and oppressive restrictions and regulations from various Government bureaus, agents, and agencies, whether State, local, or national. Small business has long been regarded the foundation of the American way of life. Let us hope it will always be so. This concept is not partisan. Both of the great political parties wish to foster legislation to assist the Nation's 3,000,000 small businesses. Such a committee has a definite place in our legislative set-up. I hope and believe that this resolution will be adopted by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

FOR SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE EXTENSION

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that there should not be and cannot be justifiable opposition to this resolution. As one who started early in 1941 to call attention to the dangerous fact that only the largest and most influential manufacturers and businessmen were being considered for Government work and war work, I insisted on this floor at that time that the small businessmen should be protected and encouraged.

REPUBLICANS TOOK CREDIT

I made several speeches, as some of you older Members will recall, urging assistance for small businessmen who were being discriminated against by the big interests. I was indeed gratified when our Republican friends appointed an unofficial committee to claim some of the credit for my activities for the small businessmen. Since that time, I think we have done fairly well by the small businessmen these big steel boys domineer and control wherever they can, and deprive the little fellows from obtaining their fair share of raw material.

SMALL BUSINESS IN BETTER POSITION

Nevertheless, the small businessmen are in a much better position today due to the studies and investigations of the Small Business Committee that this House created. Consequently, I feel that the committee should be extended, and I hope that the committee will continue to have the interests of the small businessman at heart. Of course, some of my friends say that under the new setup of the House, the Republicans, being in the majority, will very likely try to help the big boys instead of the little manufacturers and businessmen. But I do not think that they will dare to do anything of that kind in view of the splendid record that the original committee has established. Consequently, I feel that I owe it to myself, to small manufacturers and enterprisers, and to the country at large to support this resolution, so that this committee can continue to function in the interest of, I repeat, small business.

COMMITTEE SHOULD PROTECT SMALL ENTERPRISES

This committee should be recreated and continued in order to see that small enterprises are not discriminated against unfairly, and to see that they receive equitable treatment in every way from the big steel companies and the big industrial producers, and that the little fellows get their share of national production so their plants can be operated profitably.

I hope that the committee will—for I am sure this resolution will pass—do everything in its power to insure that small fabricating plants are not forced to close down, at a loss to the owners and to the workers, because available steel or other scarce items have been withheld by the trusts or the big manufacturers or the processors from independent, small-scale operators. I suspect that in many cases the big manufacturers and producers of basic raw materials have worked hand in glove with other big processors and fabricators to deprive the smaller business of their just share of available materials, and thus force them out of competition.

Not only that, they have discriminated in prices by every legal means and perhaps by some not so legal, such as secret rebates, extra discounts, and similar devices well known to all students of economics, all to the disadvantage of the small enterprises.

SHOULD FUNCTION AS IT HAS IN PAST

Hoping that this committee will continue to function in the future as it has in the past under the chairmanship of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] it gives me pleasure to urge favorable action on this resolution to extend the powers of the House Committee on Small Business.

I am fervently hoping that they will obtain sufficient evidence against chain stores and mail-order houses so that legislation can be enacted to prevent further destruction of independent, individually owned enterprises and the elimination of the small businessman whose numbers have been decreased by almost half due to the unfair trade practices and competitive discriminations of the huge corporations in their unending voracity for more and more business, more and more profits, more and more power, but less and less competition.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all those who desire may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE FAVORED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution which recreates and extends the Committee on Small Business, of the House of Representatives, that was created in December 1941. If this committee is extended, the Speaker of the House, the Honorable JOSEPH MARTIN, will have no trouble finding a good chairman for the committee. Any one of the four Members who served on the committee during the Seventy-ninth Congress, to wit: Representatives LEONARD W. HALL, WALTER C. PLOESER, WILLIAM H. STEVENSON, or EVAN HOWELL, would make an excellent chairman for this committee. I have served with all four of these gentlemen in the past on the Committee on Small Business, and I do not know of any four men in this body who are better informed and more interested in promoting the welfare of small business than these gentlemen.

NUMBER OF COMMITTEES NOW HAVE JURISDICTION

If a Small Business Committee is not created, a Member of the House who is approached by a constituent to help him with a small business matter may be required to go to one or all of the following committees of the House: Banking and Currency, Expenditures in Executive Departments, House Administration, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Veterans Affairs, and Ways and Means. Each one of these committees now has jurisdiction over certain small business matters. Therefore, a Member of this body would have difficulty getting consideration before the right committee without first dispelling a great deal of confusion.

When this Committee on Small Business is created, any Member who has a problem relating to small business knows who to refer it to and it will receive consideration. Without this committee, there will be no proper forum in the House of Representatives for the small businessman.

COMMITTEE SHOULD BE COMPOSED OF MEMBERS ESPECIALLY INTERESTED IN SMALL BUSINESS

On the question of small business, it is necessary that a select committee be appointed, composed of Members of the House who are especially interested in the problems of small business. If the House insisted on designating a subcommittee of a standing committee for the purpose of handling small-business matters, I doubt that it could find an existing subcommittee of a standing committee of nine members that would have more than one or two members on it who were especially interested in small-business problems. Therefore, in order to have a committee composed of members who are particularly concerned with the problems of small business, a select committee should be authorized and the members selected from the different committees of the House that now have to do with small-business problems.

DEFINITION OF A SMALL BUSINESS

The question has often been raised, What is the definition of a small business? The answer as to whether or not a business is a small business is determined by the size of other similar businesses. In other words, the term is a relative one. One of the best definitions I know is that a small business is one that is unable to keep a lobbyist in Washington. Big business corporations have their lobbyists in Washington. They do not need a special committee. The small businessman does need a committee here in Washington and in the House of Representatives to properly look after his interests.

This committee is needed more than ever before in view of the enormous concentrations going on over the country at this time, and especially integrations of business and the disadvantages that the local merchant and local businessman will have in the future if he is not protected.

I hope this resolution is passed by a large majority. I cannot see why any Member who is sympathetic to the cause of small business can vote against it.

At the beginning of this Congress I made a statement that I would not oppose any measure having merit just because it originated on the Republican side. I expect to carry out that policy and continue to vote on the merits of the proposal rather than vote against something that is good because it originated with the opposing party in the House.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of the following telegrams expressing opposition to the passage of House Resolution 18, to create a Small Business Committee:

Kansas State Grange appeals to you to oppose reestablishment of House Small Business Committee. We feel that chief purpose of such action is to repudiate the said committee's recent report on farmer cooperatives.

KANSAS STATE GRANGE,
J. H. FOLTZ, Chairman.

On behalf of Kansas Farmers Union, I urge you to vote against Ploeser resolution recreating Small Business Committee. We believe many proponents of Ploeser resolution seeking committee reestablishment for purpose of fighting farmer cooperatives.

KANSAS FARMERS UNION, HAROLD SWANBERG, President.

We understand Congressman PLOESER'S resolution re-creating Small Business Committee ready for House action. That is a misnomer; should be anti-co-op committee. Our information is that the chief purpose is to discredit the previous Patman committee report. Patman report was fair and unsought by cooperatives. Can see no reason for concentrating an attack on it. In the interest of our farmer members, we urge you to vote against PLOESER'S resolution.

R. D. CRAWFORD,
Secretary, Farmers Union Jobbing Association.

The Kansas Cooperative Council, representing approximately 500 farmer cooperatives with a membership of over 100,000, urgently requests you to vote against the Ploeser resolution for the recreating of the House Small Business Committee on the ground that one of the principal purposes for which the reestablishment of such committee is being sought is that of carrying on the fight against farmer cooperatives.

CHAS. R. RICHARD,
Executive Secretary and Secretary.

It will be noted that all of these telegrams express apprehension that one of the purposes in creating the Small Business Committee in the present Congress is to put cooperative organizations at a disadvantage and to repudiate the report on cooperatives made by the Small Business Committee of the last Congress.

I do not know the basis for this apprehension, but I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER], the author of the resolution and a member of the Small Business Committee in the last Congress, and with Mr. LEONARD HALL, a member of the Small Business Committee of the last Congress and the probable chairman of the new committee. I am assured by both of these gentlemen that the fears expressed in these telegrams are not justified, and that the purpose in re-establishing the Committee on Small Business in this Congress is to deal with the bona fide problems of small business. I do not interpret this to mean that the committee will not deal with the subject of cooperative organizations, when they come within the legitimate field of the committee's investigations. I do interpret it to mean that the committee is not being set up for the purpose of fighting or discrediting cooperatives and that any investigation of cooperative activities will be conducted upon the basis of fairness and in good faith.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, just to keep the record straight, I think the violation of our standing committee structure in this instance is just as bad as it was in the last instance.

We are being asked here, in this resolution to duplicate and overlap the work of a great House committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They were given four experts, to be paid $8,000 a year to help them with just such problems as these of all business—both small, middle-sized and large. If the committee wishes, or if the House wishes, we can direct these experienced committee members to give special attention to this within the framework of our regular standing committee structure.

To set up this, or any other duplicating special committee, is to destroy the major effort of reorganization to strengthen the standing committee structure of the House.

The votes are here to pass it. I shall be compelled to vote against it because I think it is the second confession of the day that our standing committees are not effective enough to handle the problems that the Congress has before it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HARLESS].

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I received the news a few minutes ago that Lewis W. Douglas, former Congressman from Arizona, has been appointed by the President to be Ambassador to England. I know that the Members of the House will be interested in this information. Most of you have known Mr. Douglas intimately. He served in the House of Representatives from 1927 to 1933. He resigned his position here when he was appointed Director of the Budget by the late President Roosevelt, which position he held until 1935. At that time he became president of McGill University in Montreal, Canada, where he served for 2 years. During World War II he gave up the position as president of the International Life Insurance Co. of New York to become Chairman of the War Shipping Administration. He has since returned to his position with the insurance company. He is a man of unusual ability. His human understanding and knowledge of national and international affairs, as well as his insight into the American and British points of view eminently qualify him for this position. His appointment comes at a time when not only the United States but the whole world looks to the events happening at the Court of St. James's. Many great men have represented our country in this distinguished position. At this time our country mourns the passing of the late Governor Gardner who would have represented our country well. It is a difficult position to fill; however, I know that Lew Douglas is the man for this place which is so important to the American people today. You who knew him will be greatly pleased to receive this information.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THOMASON) there were—ayes 99, noes 41.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously no quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 270, nays 92, not voting 70, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM AND HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, as heretofore announced, we propose to take up tomorrow the so-called portal-to-portal bill. The rule provides for 4 hours' general debate. Of course, there will be 1 hour on the rule. It is proposed to conclude the general debate tomorrow and read the first section of the bill and then have the Committee rise and the matter of the reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule go over until Friday. It has been suggested, and I find it agreeable, that we come in at 11 o'clock on Friday to be sure that we complete the bill and complete it as rapidly as possible.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the membership has been invited to participate in Mr. Hoover's report to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which of course will have to be canceled if we come in at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HALLECK. What time was that meeting called for?

Mrs. BOLTON. At 10:30 o'clock.

Mr. HALLECK. Could that not be stepped up to 10 o'clock? I have no way of knowing how long his report would be, but I would not assume it would require over an hour. I am wondering if the gentlewoman from Ohio would not see to it that that arrangement be made.

Mrs. BOLTON. I will be glad to take it up with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HALLECK. I trust it can be so arranged, because certainly many Members would like to hear Mr. Hoover's report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, to proceed, I want to announce the appointment of Members on the majority side to serve on the Consent Calendar and on the Private Calendar.

In order that the membership may know who they are I will read their names here so they will be in the RECORD:

On the Consent Calendar, Mr. COLE of New York; Mr. KEAN, of New Jersey; and Mr. CUNNINGHAM, of Iowa, will serve.

On the Private Calendar, Mr. DOLLIVER, of Iowa; Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin; and Mr. POTTS, of New York, will serve.

It is our intention to call the Consent Calendar on next Monday and the Private Calendar on next Tuesday in order that attention may be given to the bills that are now on these two calendars.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by himself.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including an article by David Lawrence and an editorial from the Washington Evening Star that appeared recently.

Mr. HOPE asked and was given permission to extend the remarks made earlier in the day and include certain telegrams.

Mr. LATHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the New York Times.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from Boston's Sunday Herald entitled "United States Eyes Boston Vets Jobs School." The Red Feathers are doing very fine work giving the veterans jobs. It is an article by Bill Cunningham.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Ottumwa (Iowa) Courier.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by James Patrick McGovern.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Knoxville News Sentinel; also, to extend his remarks and include a brief address by Senator MURRAY.

Mr. GORDON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix and include a radio address delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] over Station WTOP on last Friday.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include an article from the magazine Plain Talk. This will run a trifle over the limit. Notwithstanding this fact, I ask unanimous consent that the article may be published.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 40 minutes.

TRADE-AGREEMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the trade-agreement legislation. I voted against it each time it was proposed to extend it.

The New Deal did part of its dirty work in 1934, at the time of the enactment of the bill. It was through the power of false propaganda that the iniquitous Trade Agreement Act was passed. Countries were on the verge of war. Our people, 80 percent of them, wanted peace. The advocates of the trade-agreement program knew this and immediately set to work to take advantage of the distraught mind of our people. Why not, said the sponsors of the trade-agreement program, couple foreign trade and peace as a means of putting over the trade-agreement program. This was done. The country was blanketed with propaganda to the effect that the trade-agreement program would make for peace. Women's organizations were propagandized to the limit. The theme song in the press, over the radio, in the movies, and through a deluge of literature all paid for by the taxpayers, was to the effect that peace could come only through foreign trade. Naturally, the mothers of the country were for anything that would keep this Nation out of war. The trade-agreement program was the only true road to universal peace and brotherly love. It was stressed in a Nation-wide appeal to every mother in the land that if she would save her son from the horrors of war nothing must stand in the way of the enactment of the trade-agreement bill. Emotionalism on this issue of peace by trade agreements was raised to hysterical heights. It worked. The trade-agreement bill was enacted into law in 1934. Did it keep us out of war? It did not. Instead it ushered in and contributed to one of the most destructive wars in all history.

What other appeal was made to bring support to the trade-agreement program? It was urged by the New Deal proponents of this scheme that, if adopted, the trade agreements would be the means of increasing our exports. Did it increase exports? No; the New Deal advocates soon found to their consternation that our exports did not increase under the low-tariff policy of the Trade Agreement Act. Thus, the New Dealers in the State Department were faced with the dilemma that their program did not prevent war and the further fact that it did not increase exports. They realized that they could only save face by developing at all costs, whether in American blood or money, an increase in our exports. To meet their desperate problem, the free-trade internationalists in the State Department went into a huddle to see if they could find a solution for their diminishing exports. World conditions were in their favor. The dictators, Mussolini, Hitler, and Hirohito were in desperate need of war materials.

This was manna from heaven for the State Department free-traders. Here was an opportunity to build up exports by the sale and shipment of vast quantities of war materials to the aggressors. Thus the trade-agreement program was to be saved by exporting raw cotton, petroleum, aviation gasoline, iron and steel scrap, steel ingots, tin plate, tin-plate scrap, refined copper, copper scrap, motortrucks, aircraft and parts, machine tools, firearms and ammunition.

Here was a demonstration of the good-neighbor policy with a bloody vengeance. These exports, the New Dealers felt confident, would convince the public that the trade-agreement policy had fulfilled the promise of increased exports. Where were these war materials shipped? They were shipped to Germany, Italy, and Japan during the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940. If there were any virtue in the trade-agreement program, then with all these countless tons of war materials our exports ought not to have been 20 percent less under so-called reciprocity than under the American tariff system, but such was the result. I may add that this arming of aggressors with war materials herein mentioned, and more, to build up a case for the trade-agreement program, did not square with the good-neighbor policy and the peace policy so piously enunciated as a reason for enacting the program in 1934 and for the subsequent extensions of the Trade Agreement Act.

I may add further that if the State Department officials were not aware that they were depleting our national resources to supply aggressor nations with vital war materials, their combined astuteness was far behind that of the average American citizen.

The gruesome fact is that millions of our boys had to face the impact of these war materials which the New Deal trade-agreement proponents caused to be shipped to the stock piles of the aggressors. The loss of the battleship Arizona and seven others damaged can be charged to the trade-agreement policy of shipping 8,000,000 tons of scrap iron, steel, and other materials to Japan in a wild effort to build up exports.

Those of you who have read Wendell Willkie's One World no doubt found a reference to this question of shipping scrap iron to Japan. What did the trade-agreement sponsors care about the use that would be made of these war materials as long as it built up a fake case for their promised exports under the trade-agreement program? Would they listen to the protest of those who saw in this stock pile of war material the murder of men, women, and children? No! The program of deception must be carried out regardless of its cost in human lives. The casualties at Pearl Harbor alone were 2,117 killed in the Navy and Marine Corps, with 900 missing. Does it not matter to the trade-agreement advocates and the internationalists that this fake export program furnished our enemies with the materials they needed to accomplish that dastardly act and that our enemies bragged about it as indicative of their superior diplomacy? The same group is again shouting peace, brotherly love, increased exports through free trade, as an inducement to the emotional and the selfish to support a further reduction of the tariffs.

All that is required to create a utopian world of unlimited international trade and prosperity, so the American people are told by the internationalists, is to lend and lend billions and billions of our taxpayers' money to foreign nations with which to buy our automobiles and other American products. This prosperity will last just so long and no longer than the American taxpayer can lend the money to the foreigners to buy our products. This artificial stimulation, this needling of the arm of normal trade, can bring us nothing but headaches and obligations that will weigh heaviest upon us when we can least afford to meet them.

This effort to deceive the American people on the subject of increased exports had other serious repercussions. This typical New Deal subterfuge, this double dealing with the American people, contributed to the death of thousands of our boys. It caused thousands of them to be blinded and crippled for life. To reveal the entire ghastly picture of the trade-agreement program would require volumes. Without fear of successful contradiction it can be truthfully said that the trade-agreement program did not tend to appease or stabilize or contribute to world peace. It did, however, add to the fury of the fight and the wholesale slaughter of our boys. Those of us who opposed the arming of our potential enemies protested these shipments; but to no avail. On numerous occasions in 1938, 1939, and 1940, I stood upon this floor and warned the country of what the export-hungry State Department was doing to us. Today I deplore the fact that after such a record of New Deal treachery we find the same group now operating behind the iron curtain of the State Department, again seeking to plague our national economy by advocating a further reduction in our tariff duties.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman any information as to what the State Department proposes to accomplish through the creation of this International Trade Organization that is proposed to be set up in Geneva?

Mr. REED of New York. I believe it is more or less of a secret, but there is plenty of evidence, I am sure, to the effect that what they propose to do over there is to get us just as close to the border of free trade as they possibly can by negotiation.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman enlighten us any on the proposition that has been submitted to the press in the last couple of days about the understanding between the President and two of our distinguished Senators?

Mr. REED of New York. I am going to comment on that just a little later, if the gentleman does not mind.

What do these free-trade experts and exponents now urge as a reason for again lowering tariff rates? Some of them still insist that a further reduction of tariffs will insure future peace. Others take it for granted that the people have forgotten what was said in 1934 with reference to stimulating our exports, which the trade agreements have deplorably failed to do. Whether the people who were swindled during the trade-agreement era, with reference to the promised exports and the prevention of war, have had enough of this double dealing I do not know. I am sure that they have not forgotten what the program cost the United States in blood, suffering, and wealth as a result of arming Japan, Germany, and Italy. It is enough to say at this point that had it not been for these shipments of war materials it is quite possible that there would have been no Pearl Harbor and probably no war of consequence in the Pacific.

In another speech which I made, I reduced these shipments to airplanes, tanks, submarines, and battleships, and it is the most astounding picture, at a time when we lacked the materials to get ready for war. I will go into that just a little later.

Thousands of mothers today are without the sons who died gloriously to protect the American way of life. Those boys were killed, many of them, by the very metals and other materials our State Department shipped so frantically to support its ill-considered theory.

But we are again confronted with the same old appeal that the lowering of duties on imported goods will increase our exports, create good will, prevent war, and thus enrich our Nation. I want to call attention to a very significant fact with reference to this question of exports. The record shows that during the last 5-year prewar peacetime period of prosperity in the United States—that is from 1925 to 1929—our national revenue from custom duties averaged almost $600,000,000 per annum. To be exact, $580,748,- 055. Now then, here is the contrast: During the 5-year period under reciprocal-trade agreements preceding World War II, that is from 1935 to 1939 inclusive, our national revenue from custom duties averaged considerably less than $400,000,000 annually. To be exact, $378,909,157. What about our loss of revenue over a period of 10 years under the trade-agreement program? The fact is that the decrease in national revenue under the trade-agreement program has exceeded $200,000,000 annually or the equivalent of $2,000,000,000 in a period of 10 years.

I would say that this is a considerable sacrifice in national revenue incident to an unrealistic, experimental change in economic policy, and, again may I add, it failed to keep us out of war or to increase our exports. Moreover, when the year 1939 is compared with 1929, the decrease in revenue is from $600,000,000 to $300,000,000, a decrease of 50 percent. I do not like to use statistics when addressing my colleagues, but it is of the utmost importance that this whole free-trade program should be debunked. We have suffered enough from listening to false statements and emotional appeals on this question of increased exports as a means of building up our prosperity. This decrease in revenue during the reciprocal trade program is no small matter in view of the terriffic burden of national debt which hangs like a cloud over our economy. The decrease in revenue to which I have referred cannot be accounted for as a result of a falling off in the quantity of imports. It is only necessary in this connection to compare the imports during the 5-year period from 1925 to 1929 with the recent 5-year period from 1935 to 1939. Not only this, but the physical quantity of imports in 1937 was exactly the same as the physical quantity of imports during the most prosperous year of all, 1929. It is significant, too, that the average physical quantity of imports during the two 5-year periods, namely 1925–29 and 1935–39, did not vary more than 5 percent.

Let me repeat for emphasis that the physical volume of exports was actually 20 percent less under reciprocity than under the American system of prosperity at home. Not only was the physical quantity of exports 20 percent less under reciprocity than during 1925–29, but the exports under reciprocity included huge quantities of scrap iron and steel, petroleum products for military purposes, trucks, tractors, and other vehicles, machinery for making war implements, and stock piles of cotton, grain, tobacco, and other products.

To put this whole matter bluntly, our concession as to tariff rates merely meant loss of revenue and injury to the domestic market, while such foreign concessions as were claimed to have been made to us not only did not build up our export trade but merely made it possible for foreign enemy governments to equip themselves for World War II.

It is interesting to go back and look at the record. When the appeal was being made to get the farmers to support the trade-agreement program, I recall that when Secretary Hull appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in 1937 urging an extension of the trade-agreement program, he stated:

> A primary purpose of this trade-agreement program, and it has no more paramount purpose, is to restore as far as possible the foreign markets for American agriculture.

I do not regard it impertinent to ask at this point whether the trade agreements did restore the foreign market for American agriculture. I can say definitely that it did not. Instead, when the New Deal administration realized that the reciprocal-trade program was not increasing our exports of farm surpluses it embarked in July 1938 on a major export subsidy program. To be more specific, the men behind the iron curtain in the State Department saw no objection to our dumping our goods upon the markets of other nations. In an effort to prove that the trade agreements would open foreign markets for agriculture, 116,293,000 bushels of wheat were subsidized for export between July 1938 and November 1939 at a cost of approximately $32,871,000 in subsidies. It is true also that from July 27, 1939, through November 1939, 4,340,297 bales of cotton were exported at a cost, for the subsidy alone, of approximately $34,844,000.

Thus, through the failure of the reciprocal trade-agreement program to move our agricultural surpluses, it cost our taxpayers in subsidies $67,715,000 during the period of 16 months, August 1938 through November 1939.

The advocates of the trade-agreement program, as a means of removing our surplus farm commodities, were becoming desperate. Something had to be done. They even went so far as to bring the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation into action in the fiscal year 1938 and 1939 and through it spent $30,479,112 for the surplus removal operations of 20 commodities while imports of these same commodities during the same period were valued at $92,298,000. This shows clearly that our surplus commodities were not removed by the low-tariff program.

I may say that dumping is the practice of selling goods in the foreign market at a price below that charged for the same goods in the domestic market, and often at a price below the cost of production and shipment abroad.

Needless to say, dumping is an unfair international trade practice, and has been vigorously condemned as such by our Government. Now then, closely akin to dumping is the practice of governments in subsidizing in one way and another the export of goods by their nationals so that the product may be sold in foreign markets below the domestic price. Furthermore, dumping has always been fruitful of international resentment and discord. Thus, the international ethics and idealism, of which the New Deal administration prates so often and so loudly, were and are deliberately violated by this subsidy, dumping program.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield for a question.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It is my understanding that under these reciprocal trade agreements into which we entered our great country agreed that we would not dump our goods and that we would not impose restrictions and limitations upon international trade. Does the gentleman say our country has nevertheless continued to restrict international trade?

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. After these agreements were made?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman and I agree on many subjects. I am glad the gentleman is making his talk this afternoon. However, we disagree quite a bit on other subjects. I noticed the gentleman in his opening remarks made reference to New Deal treachery, swindlers, and double-dealing. I am just wondering if the gentleman means that Cordell Hull, Charles Taft, and Eric Johnston, and many other persons who stand very high in Republican circles and who believe firmly and wholeheartedly in this program and are advocating it today, are guilty of treachery and double-dealing in advocating this program.

Mr. REED of New York. I say that the program itself speaks for the character of the men. I am no respecter of persons when the vital interests of our country are endangered by them. I will handle some of the other types of men in the State Department before I complete my talk.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, it is treacherous and double-dealing.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And swindling?

Mr. REED of New York. That and a great deal more. I am for this country first, last, and all the time and you can take any position you like.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think under the circumstances the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is very moderate in his language.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Before the gentleman got into his colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] he was discussing dumping. I would like to know if the gentleman knows this fact, that in 1946 we imported into this country a greater amount of imports than in any other year in the history of the Republic, and that December, the last month of 1946, was the heaviest month of importations in the history of the Republic?

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

This very month it was announced that the Department of Agriculture offered surplus potatoes for commercial export at a price of 5 cents a hundred pounds.

It grieves me, and it should cause the American voter a great deal of consternation to know, that our great Nation finds itself with a reputation for not letting the right hand know what the left hand is doing. Yet we cannot penalize our farmers for doing a good job.

There is no need to drive any agricultural industry of any foreign country to the wall by our sharp practices. We can handle our surpluses at home, and I do not mean by the easy way of shooting innocent little pigs who could not help being born, or by destroying millions of dollars' worth of potatoes or grain. If our Department of State was at all mindful of the welfare of American farmers they would use a small portion of the millions they have wasted in a futile attempt to capture foreign markets at the expense of their own home industries on ways of increasing domestic use of surplus commodities.

It is a curious thing that the agricultural products that are so sought after, so vital in time of war or famine, are the ones that are surplus in more fortunate times. When a farmer sows his wheat he hopes for a bumper crop, he looks for an average one, he fears a small one, and thanks God for what he gets. There is no possible way of producing just enough. Until we find ways of leveling out the fat and the lean years we shall have surpluses, and the food producers of our country, or of any other country, should not be punished for trying to raise good crops. Would it not be wise to devote a little less time to international meddling and a lot more to a scientific study of our home problems.

For example: Some of our free-trade friends made rash promises abroad about dismantling our synthetic rubber plants and have apparently never dreamed of using surplus crops to make the rubber that we dare not be without again. We have hundreds of millions of dollars invested in synthetic rubber plants, some designed to use alcohol, some for petroleum. If the Government, which now operates those plants, used grain, or even potatoes, to make alcohol for those plants we would be making use of the bounties of nature and not destroying them or dumping them on foreign markets. With grain at 25 to 35 cents a bushel, rubber can be made as cheaply as from petroleum, and if we must do that rather than destroy the grain or dump it on foreign markets at the expense of the good will of foreign countries, then why not try it out? We could do a lot of things if we paid a little attention to tidying up our own house before we begin telling other nations how the world should be run.

I am not surprised that our laboring men as well as our farmers are beginning to realize the danger that confronts them under the trade-agreement program. The friends of labor have striven for many years to build up sound immigrations laws, which of course are being undermined by the lowering of the duties on products made by cheap labor abroad. There is no surer way of destroying the pay rolls of this country than to transfer them to other countries under a low tariff policy. Is it wise for the United States to continue a policy that will ultimately weaken the social protection and security programs built up by the National Government and States for the promotion of production and security of the great mass of individuals privately employed? I do not want to see the United States continue an international trade policy under the trade-agreements program that will nullify our anti-child-labor legislation, the laws eliminating sweatshops, laws prescribing sanitary and health conditions, both in places of employment and in residential districts. I know that it is an unwise public policy to throw those who labor on farms and in factories in competition in our market with the people of those areas abroad where conditions are so bad as a result of poor sanitary conditions and disease that the average span of life is 25 to 30 years. This, however, is what the men now supporting the trade-agreement program would have us do.

A glance at the record of statutory enactments during the last half century and longer will show that the people of the United States, under a system of representative republican States and national governments have been aware of the importance of protecting all individuals, producers, consumers, and all special groups against any and all forms of unfair public practices. One of the purposes of the Federal Trade Commission is to provide for legal action in the courts of the land to protect our people from such unfair trade practices. Why destroy all of this security by opening our market to foreign producers who are not required to meet the standards we require of our producers? I maintain that it is just as essential to protect our people from the unfair practices of foreign governments as it is to protect them from the unfair practices of domestic concerns.

I believe our people are fully aware that a multitude of different forms of unfair methods of competition, such as dumping, quotas, licenses, and many foreign discriminations, were introduced or resulted from the so-called reciprocal trade agreements entered into by the United States with foreign countries and between foreign countries.

The thought never entered the minds of the trade-agreement negotiators of our State Department as to the importance of the child labor laws, minimum hours of labor for adults, comparable to ours in countries competing in our market. I had always supposed that social legislation had a tendency to increase the price of our manufactured product, and therefore placed in a position of disadvantage the home industry subjected to such laws unless similar laws were in force in all competing countries, but the trade-agreement experts disagree. It would be interesting to know how many nations with which we have trade agreements have minimum hours of labor comparable to ours.

Do the nations with whom we have trade agreements have to meet our standards affecting health and safety, such as sanitation, lighting, safeguards from dangerous machinery and chemicals, compensation for injuries sustained while at work, insurance of health, insurance against unemployment, pensions or insurance against old age, extra pay for night work, special provisions prohibiting limiting or regulating child labor, and special laws to protect working women? Laws and regulations such as those I have enumerated enter into the cost of production in the United States. I know of no other nation with comparable requirements. These wholesome laws will have little effect in protecting our labor standards if importing nations can ignore them.

I am firmly convinced that, instead of the vast maze of confusing schemes to dominate or to overplay our part of leader throughout the world, it would be a much wiser policy for commercial economic treaties to include all such reciprocal concessions as may meet the judgment of the legislative branches of the different countries in which the people make their own policies.

The Congress of the United States should express the mature judgment of the people.

We have had much talk during the last decade or more about tariff rates under the act of 1930. Yet, twice as many items or commodities were placed upon the free list as were made subject to duty. One more reduction, such as is contemplated, and this with the action planned at Geneva in April, will bring free trade to the United States. It has been well demonstrated that unless the cost of production here and abroad of articles entering our market is taken into consideration and adequate protection provided for our producers against low production costs abroad there will be a steady decline in the production of those articles here.

I claim it is folly to ignore the items of cost that enter into our production in this country as against the cost of production of competitive articles abroad.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is not the real basic foundation of all these trade agreements the fact that the difference ought to be measured by the difference between the cost of labor in one country and that in the other?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; and the landed cost as well.

For instance, postal service here is operating at a deficit, an item which enters into the cost of production. The same is true of good roads, education, health, and sanitation and a host of other expenses which other countries do not have to meet at the same high level of cost as we do here.

Is it to the interest of our Republic to entrust the State Department, in view of its infiltration by Communists, with negotiations relating to our trade with 18 foreign nations?

I believe in the sanctity of our constitutional principles in the conduct of both our domestic and our foreign relations. I did not come here as a horse trader, but as a legislator sworn to preserve, protect, and defend our Constitution. The jurisdiction of trade agreements relating to revenue is a subject of legislation that must originate in the House, unless and until what are now passed off as trade agreements are raised to the dignity of treaties.

If it is to our benefit to lower a tariff rate here or there, and if it can be shown that it would really benefit us, and that such reduction would in no way injure domestic producers or interfere with the American right of free enterprise, then let Republicans and Democrats alike combine to reduce that rate. Let it be done in good order and with dignity, with all the facts on the table. If flexible tariffs are required, then let them be adjusted by experts and after a full and proper investigation. This petty bargaining by men who know nothing of commodities and too much of secret diplomatic horse trading cannot possibly result in anything but the creation of world-wide barriers erected solely or largely for the purpose of betting them against those of other countries.

Can it be to the interest of our Republic to entrust the future of hundreds of domestic industries, many of them founded in blood and sweat, to a handful of Communist-minded self-admitted internationalists? Surely it has become evident by this time that the farther this country departs from our traditional foreign policy of nonintervention in the political affairs of other countries, the greater will be the cost in lives, industry, and prestige.

Many of the 18 foreign nations at the proposed meeting in Geneva will represent ideologies in utter conflict with the philosophy of our Republic. Is it this fact that has finally caused the Chief Executive to finally awaken to the fact that all the trade agreements entered into, except one, contained no safety provision to prevent the wiping out of a vital domestic industry? He has said that anyone who thinks he has the power to limit or stop imports that may be destroying an American industry and putting American labor out of work is "laboring under a fundamental misapprehension." To paraphrase, "Your cause may be just, but I can do nothing for you." And all this time vital information concerning our trade-agreement program is kept from the public, which is being propagandized and misled, while the information it cannot get is handed out to foreign nations.

I claim for myself and for the people of this great country the right to vote on such a vital issue as whether we shall have absolutely free trade, the obvious object of this whole program. So obvious, in fact, that they flaunt it in our faces. I quote the exact words of one of the panel members hearing testimony for the Committee for Reciprocity Information. Discussing the present program, he said:

> The answer in the ultimate would be no tariffs at all, complete freedom from controls. It is just one part of a whole pattern and working toward trade freedom and free enterprise in trade.

Gentlemen I warn you as I have done before, that the industries of this country are hanging by a thread, and that thread is being frayed more and more as these trade agreements are forced upon us and upon other nations by a group which admittedly would sacrifice the sanctity of the American way of life for a mess of foreign-brewed pottage.

I want to call your attention to another very vital proposition now before this country. In my comments about copper shipped to Japan, at a time when we should have had all of those resources here to build up for the war that was coming, there were sent out of this country over 358,623 tons of copper. Now, let us see how these silly, stupid theorists and Communists down in the State Department acted, urging exports to build up a fake program, and what that has done to our country at the present time. When I mention that amount of copper I am not mentioning the amount that was shipped to Germany, and I traveled abroad on a ship that was loaded as heavily as they could load it with copper for Germany 6 weeks before the war. Then there was what we sent to Italy, but that which was sunk at sea, has not been mentioned.

You members of the Ways and Means Committee will recall when we wanted to get ready for war we were stripped of all these essential war materials. Take scrap iron alone. The State Department came before our committee and wanted us to remove the tariffs so they could send junk dealers down to Central America, down into the Caribbean Sea area and into South America to tear up old sugar mills, abandoned sugar mills, and other steel scrap to be shipped here so that we could begin to really prepare for our own entrance into the war that we saw coming.

Now in regard to the copper. Copper is out of the country. You will recall that the school children of this country were required to contribute copper pennies for war purposes. The people are still flooded with iron pennies because the copper had been exported to our enemies. Today, according to all the reports that are pouring in from industries, as the Members of the House know, copper is reduced to the vanishing point. Every industry of consequence in this country will soon be slowed down for want of copper. Some are slowing down now. Now, we have to get away from this group down in the State Department who have done such a disservice to our country. We would not have been short; we would have had enough to take care of ourselves and our allies and still enough to run our factories at full employment for many months hence if they had not ignored the vital interests of our country. Our automobile concerns and others are desperately short of copper. They are not in shape to go ahead without copper. This Congress, if it has the vision, which I believe it has, will have to come to the relief of industry and labor. A supply of copper will have to be found or our country will take a nose dive. There is no bureaucrat wise enough to meet the problems of the Nation. He may have the highest degree in his college, a Phi Beta Kappa key, or what not; yet when he comes out of college and goes to the Bureau, perhaps saturated with communism, and starts to formulate the industrial policy, the economic policy of this country, and also attempts to run our foreign affairs, the ultimate result is too dangerous to contemplate.

Copper is holding up the housing for our veterans. We all know now, of course, that the housing program that was brought in here and passed has been a failure. But even so, neither free enterprise nor the Government has copper. Pipes and plumbing and the various articles which are needed are not available. We are paying the price of bureaucratic bungling and we are bound to pay a price and a serious price which is now endangering and will continue to endanger our Nation. Time and again the businessmen have come here, like the people who need copper, for relief only to find shortages from bureaucratic ineptitude. Congress can hear the evidence and act for our citizens, but for them to seek relief from bureaucracy is fatal to their business. But what do they do behind the iron curtain down at the State Department? The time has come when we should speak for the sovereign people who, in the aggregate, know what is best for this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Under previous order the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

BONUS FUNDS FOR UNRRA

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, Wednesday of last week I took the time of the House to give a brief picture of the operations of the UNRRA organization and to speak of the great contribution the United States had made in billions of dollars in an attempt to bring food, medicine, and relief, particularly to the people in Europe and China affected by the devastation of the recent World War. I also listed some of our major financial commitments through the Export-Import Bank to such nations for rehabilitation and reconstruction. I believe the facts I gave establish, beyond a doubt, that the American Government has carried too great a load, that the work of the UNRRA organization has shown gross incompetence, and that the United States Government has not even received the credit due it from other nations for the food and relief we have extended. Due to the bad administration of UNRRA, in fact the people of other nations, in many instances, give credit for this food and help to other nations and not to the United States.

I demanded in this speech that whatever relief this Nation extends to foreign countries after July 1, when UNRRA closes shop, be handled by our Government only as to allocation and distribution to such foreign countries. I also urged that the $350,000,000 requested by the President in his budget for further relief after July 1, be looked into carefully by the Appropriations Committee in an effort to see if it would not be possible to greatly reduce this amount.

I am glad to note that the President within the past 2 days has also taken the position that such relief in the future should be handled by the United States Government separate and apart from other nations. I hope now that he will go a step further, and I know Congress will approve this position, and urge that any relief distribution in foreign countries furnished by the United States shall be supervised solely by American citizens. I should like to go further and urge that in the occupied countries all civilian relief personnel be withdrawn and that the allocation and distribution and relief in occupied countries be handled solely by our army of occupation. This should result in bringing home the civilian reliefers who have done a bad job of it to date and will affect a reduction of overseas civilian Federal pay rolls, with a large saving to the American taxpayers who are furnishing the relief.

Mr. Speaker, I want to support this request by reading a letter which will prove the wisdom of this proposal and which will prove how badly civilians have handled relief. I received this letter yesterday from the United Lithuanian Relief Fund of America, Inc., signed by the national president of that organization, Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Koncius. This organization has its headquarters at 19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City. The content of this letter is important. This is a real relief organization of high standing. On its honorary committee are such eminent names as Hon. John W. McCormack, our United States Congressman, former majority leader of the House and now the Democratic whip; His Eminence Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, archbishop of Philadelphia; His Excellency Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, archbishop of Boston; Hon. James A. Farley; Hon. Dwight H. Green, Governor of Illinois; William Green, president of American Federation of Labor; United States Senator Edward Martin, former Governor of Pennsylvania, and others. The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1947.

Hon. CHARLES W. VURSELL,
Member of Congress,
The House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I read with great interest your comments on UNRRA made in Congress and reported in the New York Sun of February 20.

Your observations and findings, as embodied in your eight questions, are very interesting and I hope that our Government will investigate your charges.

From January to October 1946, I made a wide tour of Lithuanian displaced persons' camps in Germany, Austria, Italy, and other western European countries. During that tour I had contacts with UNRRA officials, especially in Munich, in the United States zone of Germany, and in Rome, Italy. In both places and elsewhere I found that many UNRRA officials were not so much interested in doing humanitarian work as they were in spreading propaganda unfriendly to our democratic ideals.

About 80 percent of UNRRA employees in the United States zone of Germany were not American citizens, while, at the same time, our taxpayers were defraying about 80 percent of UNRRA expenses. Many honest and sincere humanitarian social workers among the UNRRA officials were idle, sitting around without assignment and drawing salaries.

For instance, Mr. R. H. A. Dales, an honest Hollander, from 12 Regenesselaan, Apeldoorn, Holland, stayed in Munich for over a month without an assignment, became thoroughly disappointed and dissatisfied with the UNRRA administration and system.

It is my sincere opinion that no international organization, UNRRA or IRO, can properly administer the care of displaced persons or refugees. The administration of relief should be delegated to the military authorities in each zone. International bodies only create confusion, unnecessary red tape, and cause conflict with the occupying military authorities.

Please accept my heartfelt congratulations for your humanitarian interest in suffering European people.

Respectfully yours,
Rev. Dr. JOSEPH B. KONCIUS,
National President.

Mr. Speaker, this is a true and astounding indictment of the utter failure of UNRRA, when he says he found that many UNRRA officials in Italy, Munich, and other places were less interested in doing humanitarian work than they were in spreading propaganda unfriendly to our democratic ideals and our Nation. We can better understand the great mistake we have made in ever joining the UNRRA organization and some of the reasons why the expansion of communism is on the march, enveloping the continent of Europe.

From the earliest inception of UNRRA I opposed placing $2,700,000,000 in the hands of the international organization, because I feared the management of this organization, by its great majority, would control it so that our Government would not be given due credit for our great humanitarian efforts by the people we sought to help. We, more than any other nation, helped to liberate these people, and we gave them 72 percent of all the relief they got, but we helped to make it less possible to build a lasting peace, because we lost, to a large extent, the appreciation and thanks of those people in those countries and others who took the advantage of our generosity. We immeasurably weakened our power in the peace councils in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, today I want to shed some further light on the maladministration and waste of the UNRRA organization. Because of the Immunity Act passed which prevents any committee of Congress from making an investigation of UNRRA, it is difficult to get the facts; however, I have been able to secure some authentic information even though the money has been wasted. My purpose in bringing these facts to the Congress and the Nation is, if possible, to prevent the present UNRRA crowd from moving in when UNRRA closes shop and taking over the direction of procurement, allocation, and distribution of any of the $350,000,000 the President has requested for further relief to countries not now under military occupation. You know the practice has been that when one organization folds up most of the high-salaried employees with influence are transferred to some other governmental agency. I hope that in any new set-up none of the present officials and employees of UNRRA will be employed in any newly constituted relief organization. Their failure of the past should, it would seem, prevent them from further failures in the future as relief employees.

Mr. Speaker, I want to show how well the UNRRA organization has taken care of themselves in salaries and bonuses during their administration. This group coming from many nations have the power, by majority vote, to lay down the rules and regulations. They have the power to raise their salaries and vote bonuses and they have done it. Since UNRRA was organized they have given themselves a bonus of 7½ percent raise in salaries from what they call or term the "provident funds." All employees, consiting of thousands in this UNRRA set-up, got this 7½ percent from the provident fund annually in addition to their salaries, from the lowest-paid employee to the highest.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to this gratuity, the Council of UNRRA, around August of 1946, voted to give every employee who was dismissed at the end of the year, December 31, 1946, an additional 2 months' base pay. That means that an employee drawing $550 a month received an increase out of this 7½ percent provident fund of $536.25 plus a 2 months' bonus when he retired of $1,100, making a yearly increase for the employee of an additional $635 added to his yearly salary of $7,150, which, in fact, made his salary $8,758.

Mr. Speaker, that is not all. They then decided that all employees who stayed on the job after January 1947 to June 30, 1947, when UNRRA is supposed to close up, should be given a 20-percent additional bonus which will amount to an extra month's salary for those who stay on the job the last 6 months of UNRRA. These bonuses referred to exclude any employee working less than 6 months. And they went further by issuing a regulation that any employee after 6 months' service, upon the recommendation of his supervisor, will receive an increase in salary in the amount of $500 or more per year. If his supervisor is particularly interested in a particular person, and so recommends, he could have his salary increased by $2,000 a year. You can see that this discretion placed in the hands of the supervisors in UNRRA places them in a position to absolutely, in most cases, control the action and loyalty to them of their subordinates. Throughout civil service in our Nation no such discretion or power has ever been given to our own people, and no such power will probably ever be given. There are some 8,000 employees now in UNRRA. These bonuses, provident funds, and increases in salaries add up to a tremendous amount of money—yes, a tremendous waste of the taxpayers' money, which, had they been invested in foods instead of such waste in salaries, would have brought relief to hundreds of thousands of starving people.

This Congress and the American people who pay the taxes have a right to deeply resent this diversion of their funds into high salaries and bonuses, which funds were voted by the Congress and paid by the people to relieve suffering and starving humanity in Europe and China.

As I suggested earlier, this organization has been granted immunity from investigation. No committee of the Congress has the power of subpena to bring them in before a committee for an investigation. I hope that some way can be found that at even this late date the entire work of the UNRRA organization can be brought to the attention of our Government and our people by a thorough investigation, if at all possible, by a congressional committee.

Mr. Speaker, UNRRA seems to think first that charity begins in UNRRA. While over 80 percent of the UNRRA organizaton are citizens of other countries, you can readily see that while we furnish 72 percent of the money, we are really in a world organization and do not have control. This is a good example of the danger of not safeguarding America's interest in such international combines.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you a specific example of how well the UNRRA officials have taken care of themselves financially. To do this we will take one of the officials, Mr. Karl Borders, of Chicago, one of our Americans and Director of Supplies.

His salary beginning July 1, 1944, and terminating July 1, 1947, fixed at $11,500 a year would render him an increase at 7½ percent for 3 years of $2,587.50 from what they term "a bonus from the provident fund."

But this is not all the bonus they provided for themselves. As I suggested before, he would be entitled to the extra 2 months' pay, which would give him roughly $2,000 more, added to the provident fund of $2,587.50, would increase his gratuity over and above his salary to the total sum of $5,587.50.

Mr. Speaker, and yet this is not all. In addition all employees are entitled to 30 days' leave with pay each year. Those employees who have not taken their 30 days will get an additional 1-month salary for each year of service. Assuming Mr. Borders has not taken his terminal leave, as an example, he would be entitled for 3 years' service to a further, let us call it, terminal pay of $3,000.

Mr. Speaker, I have now in my possession the final payment of salary and provident fund account of an employee which shows that he draws a bonus of $597.91, annual leave of $776.25, and from the provident fund $639.33, which, after taxes, comes to the net amount of $2,454.83.

Mr. Speaker, when you give a little group of men at the top the protection of immunity from investigation by the Congress, when you give them the opportunity without restraint to vote bonuses, establish provident funds, raise salaries without let or hindrance, you may be pretty certain that the horse will be taken from out the barn before the door is locked.

Is it any wonder that we are now appalled with the waste, extravagance, bad allocation and distribution, diversion of the purposes of UNRRA, and general maladministration?

Mr. Speaker, when you think about the missionary funds raised by the good people of our churches of all faiths in this country, and the thousands of courageous men and women who have left this blessed land of plenty to carry the gospel to foreign lands to administer to the sick, aid the poor, establish churches, hospitals, and schools, and perform untold deeds of mercy and brotherly love, then we realize how underpaid and unappreciated they are compared to the lavishly compensated employees of UNRRA whose love of humanity seems to take a second place to their love of the almighty dollar.

Mr. Speaker, after reading the Washington Post of this morning reporting some of the testimony of Under Secretary of State William L. Clayton yesterday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, I am indeed fearful that the administration in its further relief will not set up an organization that will see to it that American relief is allocated, followed through and distributed to those for which it is intended. I am fearful that under the proposed set-up relief will continue to go to the satellite countries of Russia which in fact, in my opinion, should be stopped. Any relief going to these countries might about as well be shipped direct to Russia.

Mr. Speaker, I pointed out last week that the UNRRA organization had gone beyond the law providing for food, medicine, and immediate relief; that they have spent tremendous sums for reconstruction of other nations. Today I want to point out to this Congress and to those in charge of the Housing Administration who have talked so much about building homes for veterans, that 18 $20,000 apiece concrete-mixing machines made by the Besser Manufacturing Co. of Alpena, Mich., have been bought through UNRRA, part of them have been shipped, and part of them are yet to be shipped, to the European countries, part or all of them going to satellite nations dominated by Russia.

While veterans have implored me for my assistance in trying to procure concrete-mixing machines, and other people have done likewise in the construction business, now we find that with this terrible shortage of construction equipment in America that $360,000 worth of these machines have been built, earmarked, and shipped, or are awaiting shipment, to European countries as above designated, bought by UNRRA with the taxpayers' money and being shipped almost 2 years after VJ-day. This is only one of many instances that have been occurring, and I think it ought to be stopped now.

You would have thought that the furor and objections to shipping the ice-making machines from Evansville, Ind., last summer would have deterred this later shipping of scarce concrete-mixing machines to foreign countries.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I am glad to yield the able gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUSBEY. I think the gentleman from Illinois is to be complimented for bringing this to the attention of the Members of Congress, as well as to the attention of the country at large. I am just a little bit puzzled as to who has the authority to set up these bonuses and these bonuses on top of bonuses.

Mr. VURSELL. This UNRRA organization of the several countries, in which the United States has only one vote, simply vote themselves these gratuities. They are immune from any investigation or subpenas from any congressional committee. Congress has nothing to do with it, and the American people have no control over it. All the American people do is to put up the $2,750,000,000, and UNRRA takes care of themselves first, and the poor starving people for whom the money is appropriated through the efforts of the taxpayers take what they can get of what is left.

Mr. BUSBEY In view of the facts that the gentleman has brought to our attention this afternoon, I am happier than ever that I did not vote for UNRRA in the first place.

Mr. VURSELL. I, too, opposed UNRRA because I was afraid of this very thing happening. You can imagine the tremendous amount involved in these bonuses and this wild and reckless raising of salaries, and you can imagine the hundreds of thousands of dollars that will not go to the people to whom we are trying to bring relief. Hundreds of thousands of hungry and starving people have been cheated by the profligate waste of the organization of UNRRA, taking away from the people of the world the needed relief.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. I am very grateful for having had an opportunity to hear the gentleman's remarks. I think we owe the gentleman a debt of gratitude for revealing the things he has just called to our attention. Like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUSBEY], I am reassured and very proud to declare at this time that I also voted against UNRRA because I, too, feared the occurrence of the very things which the gentleman has pointed out have happened.

Mr. VURSELL. I might go just one step farther and say that the waste is still going on. I made two or three telephone calls into Michigan and made considerable research to find out whether or not it was a fact that they have shipped and are shipping scarce concrete-mixing machines to the satellite nations of Russia to the extent of $360,000 of UNRRA's money and I find that is correct. I also have a picture which was sent to me of those 18 machines, most of them shipped and the others to be shipped, costing $20,000 each, when the Housing Administration is talking about the shortage of houses for veterans, and when veterans are asking Members of Congress to try to help them get concrete-mixing machines in their own business to help them, still this is going on through the maladministration of UNRRA and diversion and violation of the law written by Congress, giving away the substance of our country.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. BUSBEY. The gentleman from Illinois may recall that when UNRRA was before us I offered an amendment to the bill, which, in effect, was a substitute bill, that provided that the money to be appropriated for the relief of these downtrodden people should be spent under the American Red Cross and the jurisdiction of the International Red Cross. Does not the gentleman believe that if my amendment had been adopted we would not be faced with all this scandal and our money being used to propagandise against us by the Soviet Union?

Mr. VURSELL. There is no question about it whatsoever. It is true, we are locking the barn after the horse has been stolen, but I want to bring these facts to the attention of the press and the country and the Members of the Congress. I hope that before we vote for this $350,000,000, or any part of it which the President has asked for, the Committee on Appropriations will go into it most carefully in an effort to reduce it. Then I hope we can tie it up in some way so that it will be allocated and distributed by Americans so that they who receive it will know it is the gratuity of this country. I hope, with little faith, that if a new organization is set up, the President will ban any of our American citizens in UNRRA, who have made such a farce of this matter, from becoming a part of this organization, because I know they are now expecting to move in on this new $350,000,000 and continue the record they have established.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Vernon McKay, which appeared in the Foreign Policy Bulletin of February 14, 1947, entitled "Palestine Crisis Calls for United States Action," and an article by Julian Louis Meltzer, which appeared in the magazine section of the New York Times on Sunday, February 16, 1947, entitled "Formula for Troubled Palestine." This may exceed the permissible limit established by the Joint Committee on Printing, but notwithstanding the excess I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on Tuesday, March 4, after the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

REVISION OF COURT-MARTIAL PROCEDURE

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to H. R. 2143 which I introduced on the 21st of this month. This bill proposes to amend the Articles of War and the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to court-martial proceedings. You who have served in the armed forces in either World War I or II and have ever had any occasion to learn anything of our court-martial system will, perhaps, agree with me that the boy charged with an offense in service does not have the same rights to defend himself as is afforded the most hardened and habitual criminal in the jurisdiction of most of our State courts. You know, too, that by the loose and wide latitude given under the Articles of War and under the naval courts and boards, a convening authority or a commanding officer can become a virtual dictator. My observation from experience has been that such practices were more prevalent overseas, but perhaps more limited in the States.

Now it is not my intent to propose technical limitations as we find in the jurisdiction of our civil courts. It is a matter of determining the saturation point whereby common sense and discretion can be exercised without binding procedures in technicalities.

You know, of course, from the press and otherwise that the Army has proposed certain changes in the court-martial system and—as I understand it—some of these changes not requiring congressional action have been approved by the Secretary of War. It is my further understanding that the proposed changes requiring legislation are to be submitted to this Congress. Also, you are aware that the VFW has a committee on military justice which, I understand, will make its recommendations for certain changes.

Let me say here that the bill I have introduced is far from perfect, but it specifically provides for some fundamental changes which I believe to be essential to justice in court-martial proceedings. H. R. 2143 provides that a majority of enlisted men shall sit in cases where the accused is an enlisted man, and a majority of officers shall sit in cases where an officer is the accused. It provides that the accused shall not be called upon for or permitted to make a written statement unless he is first definitely warned that if he makes any statement it may be used in evidence against him in the trial for the offense of which he is accused. Further, my bill provides that within 3 days after the accused is arrested or confined, he shall be furnished a true copy of such charges and specifications, and that he shall forthwith have a hearing. However, the accused shall not be forced into the trial of his case within a period of 5 days subsequent to the service of charges, in order that he may prepare for trial.

H. R. 2143 proposes that each side, that is, the judge advocate and the accused or his counsel, shall be privileged to examine any member under oath as to his competency as a member of the court-martial board, and to place challenges for fitness against such member. Now you can imagine the position of an enlisted man who goes before a general court-martial board composed of officers—as is the present provision—to challenge a member as being incompetent to serve in the trial of his case, due to any prejudice or knowledge of purported facts. You know and I know that such an enlisted man would prejudice his position, and probably convict himself before the trial had ever started. Even if it were known that a member of a court-martial board had previously made up his mind from hearsay that the accused was guilty, in how many instances do you think an enlisted man would exercise the present flimsy and weak provision of challenge to the officer member? We know that the judge advocate, under the weak provision now in force, theoretically is supposed to see that the accused has fairness. However, in most instances the judge advocate is a junior officer, and he is not too willing nor ready to challenge a senior member of a court-martial board who may be—and usually is—there to convict the accused. Therefore, I maintain there should be a positive provision that each member of a court-martial board should be examined separately as to his fitness to serve impartially and without restraint and reservation in dealing with the life and liberty of one brought before the board charged with crime.

The bill provides that the president of the court shall state the proposition to all members of the court that:

First. The law presumes every person to be innocent of any violation of these articles until his guilt has been established by legal and competent evidence, and until it has been so established the accused is presumed innocent.

Second. After all testimony and evidence has been adduced in open court, if there is a reasonable doubt in the minds of the members of the court as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the accused and he must be acquitted.

Third. If there is a reasonable doubt as to the degree of guilt, the conclusion must be resolved in favor of the accused and the finding must be in a lower degree as to which there is no doubt.

Fourth. In making any finding, the court must strictly observe the rule that it must reach its conclusion solely from the evidence adduced.

Fifth. It is the individual responsibility of each member to exercise his duties as a member of the court in accordance with the foregoing rules of law.

H. R. 2143 further provides that the reviewing or confirming authority shall examine the entire proceedings to determine whether any error was committed which injuriously affected any substantial right of an accused. In any case where error was committed, the proceedings of the court shall be held invalid, and the findings disapproved in whole or in part, whichever may be necessary to protect the substantial rights of the accused. Any reasonable doubt as to whether an error has injuriously affected a substantial right of the accused shall be resolved in favor of the accused.

These are some of the high lights in H. R. 2143, and again I emphasize that it is not a cure-all bill by any means, and that improvement can be made. For instance, I believe it would be a good thing to permit the accused through his counsel to make exceptions to the rulings of the court, and to state those objections as a part of the record setting out reasons for so doing with the view of bringing the matter to the attention of the reviewing authority as is done in appeals in our civil courts. I have not incorporated such provision in my bill because it does become technically involved depending upon the extent to which it may be allowed. But as a matter of record, I call this to the attention of the Armed Services Committee for study by their legal counsel. I might go even further and say that it might not be a bad idea to have a supreme reviewing board in Washington to review such cases as may be finally submitted to them in the form of an appeal on merits.

Now I am not a criminal lawyer, never was, and never intended to be. But I do know that a great many of you in this House are aware that wide abuses have existed under our present, antiquated system of court martial. I judge that in many cases—and in all cases which I happen to know anything about—the accused does not have the same privilege of defending himself before a jury of his peers as is accorded the criminals in our civil courts. I am constrained to tell you of one situation that I experienced on Okinawa. I doubt that it is radically different from many others, except no other place could have had an officer in command of the receiving station who had a greater disregard or who could have been more grossly incompetent than the one at that place. I want to call his name and have it printed in this RECORD because I have silently promised myself and the thousands of men who came under his command that some day I would try to do something about it.

I hope that I may be pardoned for this personal reference and experience; but something like 30 days after hostilities had ended in the Pacific, my job being more or less at an end, I began defending boys charged with offenses before the general court-martial board on Okinawa. I did so at the insistence of a chaplain friend of mine who told me of the existing situation and prevailed upon me as a matter of moral duty to try to do something about it. I am not a martyr to causes, and am even inclined to distrust martyrs. But be that as it may, I did find a number of boys being held in a bullpen—you know what that is: a wire stockade with no protection from the elements at all—living in mud and filth worse than a pigpen. Some of them had been there for days without any formal charges placed against them. Inquiry among officers revealed that this commanding officer, Commander Howard W. Neely, was instructing prospective members of the court-martial board—before he appointed them to that duty—as to the sentence to be imposed on certain of the accused. It would be comparable for a judge in our civilian courts to say to a prospective juror, "You will be accepted on this jury if you are willing to impose a sentence of 5 years, or 10, or 20, or even death, upon this defendant, or accused."

In defending these boys, I argued from the standpoint of the criminal law, which I once knew something about as a State's attorney in Texas. I freely admit I used every trick of the trade, took every advantage, and used the truth loosely in my effort to defend them. The president of the general court-martial board a great part of the time was a sympathetic gentleman from Orlando, Fla., who had served as a district or circuit judge in that State, and who was understanding of the situation. He was liberal enough to afford advantages resulting in the acquittal of a number of boys—a thing unheard of until that time. I never had an understanding with that officer, but he was a kindly man, and rendered a real service in an almost intolerable situation.

Some of you may have observed or experienced the position of the officer who volunteers, or who is appointed to defend those accused of crime before a general court-martial board. In too many instances their duty is imposed upon them and either they do not realize their moral responsibility as an attorney, or else they are aware that they may become unpopular with the convening authority if too great an effort is made to defend the accused. I know, of course, that the recorder or Judge Advocate is supposed in such cases to see that the accused is given a fair trial, and that even though he may have no defense counsel at all, it is the duty under existing procedures that the accused's side of the matter shall be presented. But the Judge Advocate is fundamentally a prosecutor, who is usually more conscious of his duty to have imposed a conviction and a sentence, than he is to find in favor of the accused. Therefore, he cannot be one and the same. Though my bill does not so provide, consideration should be given to afford a counsel for an accused who is qualified, and who may conduct the defense free from the influence of the reviewing authority or immediate superior officers.

We must realize that all these items are fundamental. They are principles dealing with the liberty and in some instances the very lives of those involved. While a lot of people are crying their eyes out about the infractions of rights and liberties of our civilian population, these practices have gone on for years in the Army and Navy. It seems to me that while West Point and Annapolis are giving so much time to the high training of men to conduct war, they might be a little more practical and teach the men how to exercise more common sense in matters such as I have mentioned. And I might add as a purely collateral matter that the authorities might call attention at some convenient time in the educational processes, that the dollars which support the Army and Navy—which, in turn, of course, support the national defense of the country—come out of the pockets of the taxpayers. Though it is a seemingly inexhaustible source, the American taxpayer does not think so, as he will be well reminded the middle of next month.

I hope that every Member of this House will find the interest and time to give some thought to these matters. I hope you may find an interest in reading the bill which I have introduced and to study proposals made by the Army and Navy if, as, and when they are presented. As I said in the beginning, I know nothing of their intents other than what I read in the press, but if that is all there is to it, it involves about as many generalities as was contained in the Doolittle report, which did not go into the fundamentals at all. It only touched on those matters which were commonly known to the public, and which appeared at the time to be most popular. We probably never will be able to eliminate such men as Commander Howard W. Neely whom I have mentioned, but we should remove from the hands of such unscrupulous men the dictatorial powers which he and his kind administered overseas when they thought they could get by with it. Incidentally, I want to say here that I am not vindictive, nor did this Commander Neely ever do me a personal injury. In fact, I had no contact with him at all, and he was not my commanding officer. But I am not through with him yet. The record shows that by a board of inquiry he was recommended for a general court martial, and was relieved of his command. He was never tried for dereliction of duty, but instead, I understand, was promoted to rank of captain and is now up for retirement at 75 percent of his base pay as a captain. I expect to volunteer my opinion to the Navy Department on the subject.

There are some men who are just not big enough to be entrusted with authority, and it is better that they be in civilian life where—under the ordinary rule of conduct—they must earn their position and make their own way, and usually it is necessary for them to remain sober and at least fairly respectable.

I believe the changes proposed in H. R. 2143 will correct some of the present gross inequities, and I hope I may have your support in the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

REPATRIATION OF DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot permit myself to remain quiet at this most critical period in the lives of literally hundreds of thousands of persons living in the displaced persons camps in Europe.

No one who has had an opportunity to visit the war-ravaged countries of Europe has been able to find words to adequately describe the misery and the hopelessness of these persons—and the saddest part of it all is that there does not seem any prospect of a betterment in the immediate future. This is particularly true with respect to that portion of the displaced persons population who are Jews.

Prejudice and hate of the Jews has reached such a degree in nearly every European country that the only possible solution seems to be the establishment of Palestine as a Jewish national home with the right of unlimited immigration to that area of all persons who are Jews, or at least those who are homeless in Europe.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I am only expressing here in Congress the general attitude of the American public at large and, indeed, liberal opinion throughout the world when I say that the only humane and decent solution to the tragic problem of these people—haunted by fear and hunger, sick, and minus clothing and shelter—is to immediately repatriate them.

This great land of ours, founded on principles of justice and freedom, has a great moral responsibility not only to raise its voice but to take the necessary steps in a solemn demand that the United Nations permit the immediate immigration into Palestine of these 100,000 humans seeking and urgently needing a haven of security.

During the past quarter of a century Jews all over the world have bent their energies toward the upbuilding of their homeland and poured in great resources of capital, labor, and scientific knowledge to increase the absorptive capacity of the country. These people have given the world an example of cooperative endeavor which has aroused the admiration of men of all views and of all walks of life. Palestine has been transformed from a poverty-stricken, disease-ridden backwater of the Turkish Empire into the most advanced country in the Middle East. The country has facilities to accommodate these 100,000 Jews and their immigration would entail no cost whatever to any country or to world society.

The Jewish people have made unparalleled sacrifices on the altar of war and for the victory over the enemies of humanity.

No people have fought more valiantly and selflessly for the cause of freedom as have the Jewish people. No people have suffered so much by impoverishment, torture, and death as have the Jews. They deserve the reconstitution of Palestine as a free democratic Jewish commonwealth.

It is a matter of national pride that from the time of President Wilson, who played a creative role in obtaining the Balfour Declaration, every succeeding President has reiterated support for the Jewish national home.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge that no stone be left unturned by this Government to expedite the repatriation of those who are justly entitled to a haven in their historic and recognized homeland.

WAA MUST BE REORGANIZED AT ONCE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, this past week my attention was called to two important problems of direct concern to the Nation's taxpayers arising from the administration of our War Assets Administration.

The first of these issues is represented by a pair of pajamas. I found these in one of the largest department stores in Cleveland where they were on sale, marked down from $2.95 to $2.39. What bothered me were the little labels inside the coat and pants of these very good pajamas. One said:

> Stadium Manufacturing Co., Inc., P. O. No. 6453, Dated November 17, 1944, Fed. Spec. No. 139–0, Medical Item No. 71640–10, Phila. Q. M. Depot.

The other said:

> Nite Kraft Corp. Pajama Pants Contract W 669–Q. M. 24232, December 14, 1942, Spec. No. DDD.P–76. Stock No. 71660–10. Phila. Q. M. Depot.

I wondered how these articles got into the hands of this department store and how much they cost the Government originally, and I had my office check. We discovered that these pajamas were bought by the Federal Government for $1.50; 75 cents for the coats and 75 cents for the bottoms. The War Assets Administration informed us that they were sold as surplus property in St. Louis to veterans at retail only and in Kansas City to Federal agencies and veterans. They were sold for $1.08 a set, and there were 100,000 pairs offered.

This means that Uncle Sam lost $42,000 on this transaction to start with. But the thing does not end there. I am informed by one of the largest wholesalers in this line that these pajamas could have brought $24 a dozen without the slightest difficulty. And I am also informed that our Treasury Procurement Department is buying the identical type of merchandise for our hospitals and prisons at prices from $1.75 to $2.25, in spite of the fact that WAA offered them for sale at $1.08. You can figure out the loss we are taking on this kind of transaction every day.

One department of our Government apparently does not know what the others are doing. Or if it does, there is something very peculiar about this whole business. Why does not the Procurement Office of the Treasury Department buy directly from the WAA? How did these pajamas get into the hands of a retail department store, where they were offered for sale at a price more than twice what they were advertised for by WAA? Who fixed the price of $1.08 for merchandise worth over $2?

And this is not all. Within the past few days I received a letter from a man who is still an employee of the War Assets Administration. He says:

> The feeling of most of the employees of this office, from the head of the department down to the typists, is "Nothing around here is important, so why should I knock myself out doing a job?"

This employee says that he overheard someone who was apparently head of the WAA department say, "The Government could give the stuff away and save money instead of letting the War Assets sell it."

Not only is nobody busy at WAA, but there is nobody who appears able to give out any authoritative information. Veterans get the run-around in their efforts to buy anything from typewriters to trucks. Merchandise in warehouses or in boxes is frequently uncataloged for months and buyers cannot find anybody who can tell them how much the goods will cost or even when they will become available for sale. The Republican Party prides itself on efficiency. Let us start by cleaning out this mess in the War Assets Administration. There is no reason for our taxpayers to continue paying big taxes when Uncle Sam simply squanders it foolishly. It is costing more money to store our surpluses and to operate a sales force, to advertise the merchandise, than the property appears likely to bring. Certainly, if we lose money on every sale when we could do better by holding a public auction, it is time to clean house.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the special committee headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma, Representative RIZLEY, the subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures, will turn the searchlight on. At the present moment there are between seven and eight billion dollars' worth of surplus property under the jurisdiction of the War Assets Administration that has not even been cataloged. There are so many former Army officers being taken in as employees in this department who have no idea what the job is all about and who have had no experience or training for this work.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman said something which struck me immediately when he said that there are so many Army officers in charge of the various branches of the War Assets Administration. Anybody who has been in the Army or anybody who has seen the buck-passing that always goes on in the Army and the lackadaisical manner in which they perform their duties when it comes to handling merchandise in the Quartermaster Department would come to the conclusion that perhaps if we cleaned up some of those officers, the retired Army officers or the ones who have not been active in the military, and put in some practical merchandisers, we might get some results.

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman has a good point, and I am entirely in accord with his views.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am curious to know how the department store got that set of pajamas.

Mr. BENDER. That is what I would want to know, and I hope this committee will make it its business to find out.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I hope the suit is large enough for my friend.

Mr. BENDER. This is marked "Medium size." I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] might both get into them very easily.

Mr. McCORMACK. But my friend purchased them. Seriously, I was wondering if the gentleman made any inquiry as to how this department store got them when, as I understood, they were supposed to be sold to veterans for retail purposes.

Mr. BENDER. I think I know. We are going to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY], to subpena some of these people before his committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. The committee can do a great deal of good. I supported it. The committee can do real constructive work. There is no question about that. But my curiosity was how that department store got this material when it was supposed to be sold to veterans. We know that by act passed by the Congress, in which we participated, veterans are given a preferential status in the purchase of surplus goods. I was wondering how it was. I assume these were sold to veterans. Of course, some veteran resold them in violation of the terms under which they were sold to them. Certainly, a matter like that ought to be prosecuted to the fullest extent to find out if the law is being violated by anyone who purchased them and the department store.

Mr. BENDER. I am in entire accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am sure that this committee which has just been appointed and has been provided sufficient funds will delve into this matter. We will place all the facts before them. Obviously it is a violation.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I wonder whether the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department gets notices from the War Assets Administration as to the various sales. I thought the WAA notified all Government departments on the matters they have for sale.

Mr. BENDER. Certainly the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department can read. I trust they receive these notices. Possibly they do not get all of them. When they need garments of this kind, the exact garment, I would say the first places they would look, under the law, would be the War Assets Administration, and determine if these garments were available.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I hope the special committee will look into that phase of it.

Mr. BENDER. I trust it will.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my recollection of the law that where any department has anything that is surplus it must notify every other agency of the Government to see whether they are interested in it before it can be declared surplus and sold by the War Assets Administration. That is my understanding. Has the gentleman any information as to that?

Mr. BENDER. That is the law. All of the facts have been checked thoroughly.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not questioning that at all and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is not. We are trying to have the record as complete as possible. I do know that Mr. Mack, who has been in the Federal service longer than I have been in Congress, is a very honorable man, as the gentleman well knows. It seems to me there is a law that other agencies are to be notified of surpluses by any agency having the surplus. The gentleman has called attention to something which ought to be looked into and all the facts ascertained, and let the chips fall where they may.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

139. By Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Memorial of the Thirtieth Session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, House Concurrent Resolution No. 4, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to reclaim and keep in full force and effect all Federal taxes, license fees, and regulatory measures now existing, relating to the manufacture, distribution, and sale of margarine or butter substitutes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

140. Also, memorial of the Thirtieth Session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, House Concurrent Resolution No. 3, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to discontinue the Federal gasoline tax and Federal lubricating-oil tax as soon as possible and refuse to reenact such taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

141. By Mr. MUNDT: Memorial of the Thirtieth Session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to appropriate the necessary funds to carry on the construction of Fort Randall and Angostura Reservoirs and to initiate construction of the Oahe Reservoir as proposed by the Corps of Engineers and to initiate construction of the Shadehill Reservoir as proposed by the Bureau of Reclamation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

142. Also, memorial of the Thirtieth Session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to grant full rights of citizenship to American Indians who served in the armed forces of the United States of America in time of war; to the Committee on Armed Services.

143. By Mr. LYNCH: Petition of National Department, Catholic War Veterans, New York City, urging admission to the United States of 300,000 displaced persons; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

144. By Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin: Resolution adopted by the Lithuanian fraternal and cultural organizations which constitute the Racine, Wis., chapter of the Lithuanian-American Council, at their mass meeting held at St. Casimir's Church hall, February 16, 1947; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, at this moment of supplication, we pray that Thou mayest be the food for our thoughts and the wisdom for our understanding, and that in Thee we may find rest of mind and soul. O hold before us the object of our quest, that our endeavors may bear the sense of dignity and humble toil.

As we are confronted with hard duties in our high calling, give us the courage to be kind rather than resentful; to be merciful rather than arrogant; and, above all virtues, crown us with the spirit of self-sacrifice rather than self-assertion. As shadows are still hovering over our world, constrain us to unburden ourselves of all unreality and find heart's ease in being true to the living precepts of our Lord. Without pretense, may we live in that upper realm of freedom and sincerity, with reverence for God, for home, and for native land. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein a copy of a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PHILBIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, there has been some criticism leveled at the Committee on Un-American Activities in the past along the lines of our not having introduced legislation. Much of that criticism has been unjustified.

I wish to announce to the membership today, however, that the Committee on Un-American Activities has in preparation some 15 different bills which will be introduced in the near future. Two of these bills will be introduced today. All 15 are aimed at the elimination of un-American activities in the United States. If this Congress should approve all or a majority of these bills, un-American activities would be to all practical purposes eliminated.

The first of these bills to be introduced is one to combat un-American activities by providing for forfeiture of the office or position of any Government employee whose loyalty to the United States is found to be in doubt.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I am introducing a resolution today which will raise the crime of contempt of the Congress from a misdemeanor to a felony. The top level of punishment would be established at a fine of $5,000 and 5 years in jail.

The committee unanimously feels the last two persons who were found in contempt of the United States Congress chose to accept the punishment that was given for contempt of this House under the existing laws. I am sure the House will welcome this and will probably unanimously support it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

[Mr. STEFAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am getting tired of being maligned, lied about, and abused by the Washington Post, a Jewish newspaper published in Washington, which is doing the Jews of this country more harm, the Negroes of Washington more injury, and the white people of the District of Columbia more damage than any other paper I know.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to publishing all the lies that Drew Pearson spreads about me over the radio, the Post came out editorially on yesterday and attacked me and the majority of the members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and the real veterans' organizations, particularly singling out the Veterans of Foreign Wars, because of a resolution our committee adopted to stand by the policies that the members of the Veterans' Committee have stood by for the last 22 years.

I ask you to turn to the RECORD of February 24 and read my speech on page 1365, answering the attacks on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. This outfit that the Post is complaining about has joined the Communists in picketing even the homes of Members of Congress.

The editorial goes on to say that this organization stuck its nose into BILBO's election contest in Mississippi.

Not only that, but I may say, Mr. Speaker, there is a Member of this House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], whose home was picketed by this same outfit. I am told they also joined the Communists in picketing Senator BILBO's home here in Washington. They were after the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] because he would not vote to extend the OPA.

If the Post wants to continue its campaign against me, I say:

Lay on, Macduff,
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

I am ready for them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ARNOLD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Wall Street Journal of February 25.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BAKEWELL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow the Committee on Foreign Affairs may sit during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial by Dorothy Thompson.

Mr. CHADWICK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech recently made at a meeting in his county.

"HELLO, SUCKERS"

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include a memorial adopted by the South Dakota Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, back in the fantastic twenties, before the debacle of 1929, a young lady in the night-club circles of New York by name of Texas Guinan made a great reputation for herself by addressing the customers as "Hello, suckers," when they came into the night club. In 1947 on every income-tax payment date the people of 9 community-property States of the Union might well say, "Hello, suckers," to the other 39 States of the Union because the people of these 9 favored States get by with paying a fractional percent of the tax that the rest of the country has to pay. I hope that the Committee on Ways and Means of the House under Republican leadership for the first time in 16 years corrects this iniquity.

This is a perfectly idiotic injustice that the people living in the same commonwealth of States, with the same incomes, and the same tax levies, and the same exemptions, should permit the people of 39 States to pay approximately twice as much tax per individual as the people living in those 9 favored States of California, Washington, Idaho, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Texas. I think that situation should be corrected by the current Congress. With these remarks I now call attention to Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 4 passed on this subject by the South Dakota Legislature a few days ago:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to give like privileges to income-tax payers resident in non-community-property States as are being enjoyed by residents of community-property States

Whereas an inequality exists between citizens and residents of the several States of the United States, in that residents of 9 States having community-property laws are privileged to divide incomes between husband and wife for income-tax purposes, thereby reducing the income taxes required to be paid by said residents, which privilege is being denied to the residents of 41 States not having community-property laws; and

Whereas, by reason of the premises, legal privileges are enjoyed by a minority of the citizens of the United States of America, solely determined by residence, which are not permitted to all the citizens of the United States; and

Whereas it is within the power of the Congress of the United States of America to correct such inequality by adopting suitable and appropriate legislation therefor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in its thirtieth regular session assembled, respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States of America that suitable and appropriate legislation be enacted permitting division of income between husband and wife for income-tax purposes by the citizens and residents of all of the States of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be dispatched to United States Senators CHAN GURNEY and HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, to Congressmen FRANCIS CASE and KARL E. MUNDT, and to United States Senator EUGENE D. MILLIKIN and to Congressman HAROLD KNUTSON.

SIOUX K. GRIGSBY,
President of the Senate.

NIELS P. JENSEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

G. W. MILLS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

W. J. MATSON,
Clerk of the House.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to say a few words in commemoration of the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the birth in 1807 of a man who was born in Portland, Maine, which I have the honor to represent, who loved it and praised it in many of his works. As earlier this month we have observed the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln, Thomas A. Edison, and George Washington, it seems fitting to give this moment of deference to a man who was neither a general nor a statesman, nor an inventor, but who loved and served his fellow man and preached in a moving way the dignity and worth of men. I refer to the poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

More than most poets Longfellow has suffered from being best known by some of his worst poems. But he wrote works of insight and dignity. He wrote most memorably of elementary things, the sea and ships, the Indians, the daily occupations of men on this continent. Many of his tales and ballads like that of Paul Revere are still at our tongues' end. He was a fine scholar and student of the romance languages, a famous teacher in Bowdoin College in Maine, and in Harvard College, and an interpreter of the humanitie to generations of young men. He pondered the same problems of war and human welfare that so tragically occupy us today. And though he may not have changed the current of human history, his will always be one of the most familiar and best loved names in the history of American letters in the nineteenth century, when this country was beginning to assert itself in literary expression.

THE PACIFIC ISLANDS AND THE GEARHART RESOLUTION

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday the American people were electrified and very agreeably surprised, gratified is, perhaps, a better word, to learn from what appeared in the public prints that Russia had gladly conceded the right of America to retain the Pacific islands.

Today we find that that generous concession by the Russians was typically in line with their policy toward the United States; in other words, their consent to our retention of the islands that our boys died to win is upon conditions.

From this morning's paper, I ascertained what those conditions are. The Times-Herald tells us:

> One of the conditions would authorize the Security Council to order changes in the trusteeship agreement giving the United States control of the islands.

The plain implication of this is that Russia can keep us in hot water from now on, creating and fomenting trouble for us in the United Nations forever and anon. If this concession, or, rather, condition, is acceded to by the United States, it will mean that we will be constantly called upon to resist proposal upon proposal to in one way or another modify and change the status of these Pacific islands. This would be intolerable.

To read further from the Times-Herald:

> Another [condition] would pledge the United States to let the 48,000 natives on the islands work toward independence as well as toward self-government.

So the Russians speak piously of independence for the uncomplaining peoples of the mid-Pacific. Could they possibly have been thinking of the Poles, the Lithuanians, the Latvians, the Estonians, or, perhaps, of the Manchurians or Koreans when they concocted that? Or were they dreaming of the world revolution, of the part these backward peoples might be made to play in the blood drama which so many believe is a part of their master plan? But whatever their motive in suggesting it, it bodes no good for these United States.

And, as the Times-Herald recites, the U. S. S. R.'s deep solicitude for the United States is reflected in this final condition which the Soviets would impose upon us:

> The final Soviet proposal would strike out an American proposal to administer the islands as an integral part of the United States.

Though our friends the Russians generously concede that it is right and proper for the United States to control the Pacific isles, the emphasis, it strikes us, is a bit heavy on that which might be regarded as right and proper; but, oh, so very, very light on the control they would permit us to exercise over them.

Mr. Speaker, to agree to any of those conditions to a trusteeship over those dearly won Pacific islands would be to beggar the heroism, discount the sacrifices, insult the memory, of the thousands upon ten thousands of our servicemen who laid down their lives on those enemy-occupied and disease-infested atolls that liberty might not perish on this earth. Is it possible that those who represent us in the United Nations conferences would barter away America's honor upon such base considerations? May God forbid it.

Mr. Speaker, these islands of the Pacific mean nothing to the defense of any Eurasian country, least of all to the Russians who propose these humiliating conditions. But to America, upon which rests the unwelcome burden of the maintenance of the peace of the Pacific, they mean everything. And we should have them. And not upon any conditions that might be laid down in councils held behind the iron curtains, but by the right of conquest, the letting of the blood that won them.

Mr. Speaker, let us hear no more of mandates and trusteeships and stand up for our dearly purchased rights for once if never again. Let us pass the Gearhart resolution—House Joint Resolution 137—and be done with this.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

EUGENE MEYER

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable chagrin, if not sadness, to the gentleman from Mississippi, who used this Chamber as a forum to asperse the character of a good citizen, Eugene Meyer, publisher of a splendid paper, the Washington Post of this city. The gentleman again shows his flair for intolerance—intolerance of freedom of opinion. He spoke of this gentleman as being a publisher of a "Jewish newspaper." He undoubtedly used the word "Jewish" to connote opprobrium—to connote contempt. I must resist efforts of that sort with every power within me. I ask the gentleman to read the Federalist—the writings of Jefferson—and read what he said with reference to freedom of opinion and freedom of speech. I fear me that the gentleman from Mississippi just cannot take it. He gets rather excited when anyone disagrees with him. The right to disagreement is a precious right in our land, and Eugene Meyer has that right, as everyone else in this House or this country has.

PALESTINE

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a White House statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure most of the Members of the House have read the intemperate and insulting remarks of the Foreign Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Bevin, about the President of the United States. Not only are those remarks false, as remarks by that gentleman usually are when they regard Palestine, but they are insulting as well to the head of a friendly nation.

I call the attention of this House to the fact that in 1944 and 1945, before the present Labor government was elected in Great Britain, one of the pledges they made to their people and one of the planks in their platform was to the effect that they advocated the immediate admission of 100,000 Jewish displaced persons into Palestine. They also agreed that if the findings of the Anglo-American Inquiry Committee were unanimous, they would implement them by permitting the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews. The findings were unanimous, and yet no such action was taken.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will yield, that is what we get for giving Britain $4,400,000,000.

Mr. KLEIN. I am afraid I agree with the gentleman.

Now Mr. Bevin is seeking to blame President Truman for his own faithlessness and double dealing on this question and for his failure to live up to his solemn promises, or those of his Government, to resolve this problem, at least temporarily.

All right-thinking people must condemn the present regime in Palestine. This once-great Government has descended to employ its Army and Navy in military operations against defenseless men, women, and children who have lived with death for many years, and who ask only the elementary human rights of life, work, and home.

The American Government has gone on record many times as favoring the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews. I suggest that you read the White House reply to Mr. Bevin, issued yesterday.

PALESTINE

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, if the Government of the United States, in accordance with its repeated pledges, intends to assume practical, as well as moral, leadership in settling the dangerous controversies which threaten world peace, it must without further delay assume leadership in solving the problem of Palestine.

If our recent vacillations and procrastinations continue, the hope of any peaceful solution will become increasingly remote. Not only is the artificial hostility engendered among the Arab leaders becoming more acute but Palestine threatens to become a scene of increasing contention.

The commonwealth will come into being only when the United Nations decides, as it must, that the establishment of a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine is essential to world peace and to world stability.

Unless the international trusteeship council of the United Nations is charged with the obligation of carrying out such a decision, the commonwealth of Palestine will continue to be an ideal and not a reality. Only the concerted determination of the free peoples of the world who possess the authority can achieve a final solution of the Palestine problem.

President Truman's courageous official statement of yesterday is testimonial that a solution must be found for this question now.

Are not 6,000,000 Jewish dead sufficient or must British obstinacy destroy the remaining 1,500,000? American Jewry is outraged at this failure to get action and demands that during this interim period before the Palestine matter is resolved by the United Nations that the Palestine mandate be carried out in letter and spirit.

This Nation must assume a larger share of responsibility for Palestine than we have been willing thus far to bear.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address to be delivered by Louis E. Starr, chairman of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

REGULATING THE RECOVERY OF PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 117 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order consideration of H. R. 2157, to define the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes. To be more specific, passage of this resolution would bring before the House a measure to relieve the uncertainty confronting the Nation's industry because of claims exceeding five and three-fourths billions of dollars for retroactive portal-to-portal pay. H. R. 2157 is rightly considered urgent legislation. Its passage would put an end to these uncertainties which now threaten our national economy.

Realizing that Members of Congress representing all grades and variations of social and economic opinion will want to assert themselves on this important issue, this resolution has provided 4 hours of general debate. This is a general open rule to which I think there will be no objection. Amendments to the bill are in order under the 5-minute rule, and provision is made for one motion to recommit.

Opponents of this bill will probably charge that its provisions limit the rights and privileges of labor, and they will probably try to make political capital of today's debate. They undoubtedly will say that the Republican Party has taken the side of capital and has forsaken the laboring man. This, of course, is not true. And those who should make such a statement will know it is not true. We all realize, of course, that some have built their political careers by encouraging the belief that the welfare of labor must be mutually exclusive to the welfare of capital. I cannot subscribe to this theory.

The Republican Party does not believe that capital should be brought to its knees at the feet of labor, nor does it believe that labor wants capital crippled permanently. Neither does the Republican Party believe that any of the legitimate rights and privileges of labor should in any way be diminished or, for that matter, even questioned. We believe that the future welfare of both capital and labor are inextricably bound together. We believe that both capital and labor can derive equal benefit from legislation intelligently drawn after consideration of the needs of both members of our industrial team.

I refer to capital and labor as our industrial team because the Republican Party refuses to foster the class hatred that has been, and is being, encouraged by some political groups. Such class hatred can never produce anything desirable in the way of social, economic, or political development. It is merely a vehicle by which some political charlatans hope to rise to power. This philosophy can lead only to the total destruction of our economic and social system, and finally to the collapse of the form of government under which we, as a people, have chosen to live.

Visualizing capital and labor as an industrial team, the Republican Party is cognizant of the fact the one can do nothing without the cooperation of the other. What helps one, benefits the other; and, just as indisputedly, what harms one, hinders the other.

Those who recognize and appreciate the problems of both members of the team can undeniably do more to insure its smooth operation than those who imagine a cleavage, and therefore believe that one member must be crushed that the other may survive.

It is my sincere hope that all legislation passed by this Congress will be drawn in a spirit of sympathy for both members of the team. In my opinion, such legislation should restrict neither, but should simply define the rules, thereby increasing the benefits of both. I do not find any of the provisions of H. R. 2157 inconsistent with this concept.

In effect, this bill would outlaw claims for make-ready time in portal-to-portal suits. It would also establish restrictions on actions of employees to recover other forms of overtime pay to which they have no just claim. To this extent, this bill would repeal those sections of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the Bacon-Davis Act which are inconsistent with its provisions.

Because many of these claims cover past years on which management has long since closed its books, H. R. 2157 protects employers from unexpected liabilities, which in many cases exceed working capital, and in some cases exceed the employer's net worth. In other words, these suits would force many employers into bankruptcy.

This measure would protect employers who acted in good faith, consistent with court decision and Government regulations. It takes into consideration the custom of the industry regarding payment for make-ready time. In most union contracts make-ready time is considered in fixing wages for hours actually worked. In such cases, these portal-to-portal suits are not morally justified.

The bill would also allow an employer to compromise with employees to settle disputes involving claims for other accrued wages. Under existing laws, no such compromise is possible. Either workers must strike, or employers must lock out their employees. This legislation was drawn in recognition of the just points in both sides of the argument.

Realizing that collection of these claims would in many instances plunge industrial corporations into bankruptcy, workmen themselves generally regard the portal-to-portal suits with disfavor, particularly the effort to make collection retroactive.

I cannot believe that organized labor, which has filed these claims against industry, would be willing to wreck companies by which it is employed in order to collect money for which it has no legitimate claim.

The opinion of a large segment of organized labor on the portal-to-portal issue was expressed recently by John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor. I will quote a few excerpts from his article in the February issue of the American Federationist, the official magazine of the American Federation of Labor:

> In reaching a decision on the question of suing employers for so-called portal-to-portal back wages, the executive council * * * was governed by one basic consideration * * * its faith in and loyalty to the principle of collective bargaining.
> When labor and management enter into negotiated agreements, the integrity of both is involved. Unless such agreements can be depended upon by both parties, collective bargaining cannot be successfully continued.

Remember that is a representative of organized labor speaking. He continues:

> When agreements have been negotiated and signed, they specifically express what the employers are willing to pay in the field of wages and what trade-unionists are willing to accept for the period covered by the agreement.
> In the application of all terms and provisions of agreements * * * the question of each party's good faith and integrity is involved. Without this good faith and integrity, collective bargaining would be of little, if any, value to either labor or management.

The spokesman for the American Federation of Labor then sums up the crux of the point in question in these words:

> When an agreement is entered into the employer knows what his labor costs will be, so far as wages are involved. Trade-unionists under the agreement pledge themselves not to introduce new questions of wages during the life of the agreement unless the agreement specifically contains a provision for the reopening of the agreement.
> To inject now the question of back pay for portal-to-portal time would be an admission that when wage agreements were signed by trade-union representatives they had been insincere during the negotiations and had held mental reservations which they were unwilling to discuss with employers while seated at the conference table.

That is the view of organized labor on the portal-to-portal-pay question.

Having carefully considered the needs and desires of this body before reporting this resolution from the Rules Committee, I earnestly urge its adoption. The bill, consideration of which it makes in order, should, in my opinion, be passed to protect our economy from chaos and uncertainty which might lead to catastrophe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has consumed 10 minutes.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized.

RULE ON GWYNNE BILL

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], has splendidly and adequately explained the rule which makes in order H. R. 2157, an ill-advised and poorly constructed catch-all for harrying labor unions.

This is, I am happy to say, a broad and liberal rule, for which, of course, I am grateful, notwithstanding that I was denied the opportunity of bringing before the Rules Committee the minority members of the Committee on the Judiciary who signed the minority report, in order that they might at least be given a chance to explain their opposition to the bill, and why they felt the rule should not be granted with unseemly haste.

I did not, of course, expect much more than I received, namely, that the rule was gaveled through; and I did not have many on the Rules Committee to support me in my urging that additional time be given for consideration.

GUILTY CONSCIENCE DICTATES WORDS

As has been explained by my chairman, the rule provides for 4 hours of general debate and for amendment. Thus the Members, either in debate or under the 5-minute rule, will have an opportunity to be heard.

It seems to me that my chairman must have a guilty conscience, for he began his remarks by saying that Democrats very likely would charge the Republicans with unfriendliness to labor. No one had yet made that statement on the floor; but it seems to me, nevertheless, that the implication is there, and the Democrats will be compelled to repeat, again and again, the clear and undeniable charge that the Republican Party is unfair to organized labor, and to labor in general, and always has been.

VICIOUS AS ANY BILL EVER PRESENTED

This bill, to my mind, is as vicious as any other antilabor bill ever brought to this House. You remember that last year we had a Gwynne bill before us. The committee has taken that bill and has made it more drastic than the original. They even ignored the recommendation of their own subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that a 3-year limitation of liability be substituted for the absurdly brief period in this bill of 1 year in which to bring proceedings for recovery of wages.

In actual fact, some of the most restrictive and unfair provisions have been embodied in the present bill.

The proponent of this bill stated before the Rules Committee that it does not deprive labor of any rights or benefits; whereupon I inquired why then the bill was before us for a rule.

But the gentleman could not answer.

He knows, and I know, and all those familiar with the bill know, that it is as stringent and restrictive of the rights of labor as any that ever came before us here; and it aims, if not utterly to destroy labor, at least at weakening the cause of labor by taking away legal rights of equity.

The Democratic members of the Committee on the Judiciary who have signed the minority report will, I am certain, more thoroughly explain my contention, and make clear why my position is correct, and show that the bill is antilabor and in the interest only of employers. Its effect is to emasculate the Bacon-Davis Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the Fair Labor Standards Act.

PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY PROVISIONS RESTRICTIVE

As to the portal-to-portal-pay provisions, I concede that some suits of this character have been unfairly instituted; but in the majority of instances such actions are justifiable, and are not based merely on walking to and from the place of work but on work actually done.

The minority report from the Committee on the Judiciary says in this connection:

> The phrase "portal-to-portal" is a bad label to designate all these suits, suits which are for "time worked" as in the following:
> (a) Checking machinery.
> (b) Adjusting and readjusting safety equipment.
> (c) Repairing, oiling, washing machines.
> (d) Checking and sharpening tools.
> (f) Taking inventory.
> (g) Submitting to a periodic physical examination.

(h) Travel time within the plant or mine, which sometimes consumes as much as a half hour.

(i) Cleaning and washing off the body grease, soot, and toxic matter.

Nevertheless, this legislation will adversely affect all suits that have been filed and which may be filed in which justice may demand that labor receive extra pay and extra compensation for extra work performed pursuant to orders, and which I feel they are properly entitled to.

LAWS PASSED IN GOOD FAITH

We have in good faith passed laws giving labor certain rights and privileges. This bill would repeal those rights and privileges given by the Congress and upheld by the courts. It is, in my opinion, manifestly unfair to do that. However, in view of the actual circumstances, of our fundamental law, and the precedents of the courts, it is not really necessary for me to dwell upon this point because this bill will never become law. It is unconstitutional beyond doubt. It is ex post facto legislation, and the courts will not violate the Constitution by holding it to be within the Constitution. That, at least, is my opinion.

REPUBLICANS FEARFUL OF SHADOWS

Our Republican friends have said they are fearful that if this bill is not passed that the poor manufacturers, industrialists, and employers of labor may be ruined; that they cannot survive if labor is not shorn of its rights under the Constitution to proceed with legal action to recover what they feel to be just and fair and due them.

WHERE ARE THESE INDUSTRIALISTS FACING IMMINENT RUIN?

So far I have been unable to find any of those manufacturers or employers that have been ruined or are imminently threatened with ruin by the Labor Relations Act.

If you will read the newspapers and the financial reports, whether it be Dun & Bradstreet's, the New York Journal of Commerce, the Wall Street Journal, or any other, and you know that none of them is unduly friendly to labor, you will find that not only are the manufacturers and the industrialists, the businessmen of this country, in a splendid position, but they have made more and more millions in 1945 and 1946; and even in this year are increasing their profits to such an extent that they are now obliged to declare extra stock dividends and cash dividends, thereby increasing their shares outstanding, so it cannot be shown how much per share is being paid. They are accumulating great surpluses and retiring their indebtedness.

PROFITS INCREASING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS

In view of the fact that their profits still are increasing by leaps and bounds I do not think they are going to be seriously hurt.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include as a part of my remarks some reports and articles as well as statements relative to the profits and standings of these corporations which my colleague, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, is fearful might be ruined or destroyed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed grateful that business is prosperous. I hope that the country and business generally will continue to prosper notwithstanding the temporary control of the legislative body by the Republicans. In my opinion, with all their effort, they will not be able to arrest the growth of business, profits, and the prosperity of our Nation. Because of these ever-increasing profits, and increased materials cost, the cost of living has gone up tremendously, as you all must know. In the last six months the cost of food, yes, of living generally, has increased over 50 percent.

DUN & BRADSTREET REPORTS SHOW RISES

No one can successfully accuse Dun & Bradstreet of being too favorably disposed toward labor or toward the Democratic Party. Dun & Bradstreet are a well-known, highly respected firm of business reporters and analysts whose credit and market reports are standard in all business circles.

Their current consolidated food-price index shows that food costs hit an all-time high on February 25 of $6.62 a pound for 31 standard food staples. This was the price per pound arrived at by adding up the cost per pound of these 31 items. This is a rise of $2.42 since last July, or 55-percent increase since the original OPA was killed. There has been an increase of 13 cents a pound in this index in the short time since the last high point last November 19.

Or take the Dun & Bradstreet commodity index, which shows the level, in terms of percentage over their base year, of basic commodities, which includes foodstuffs, grains, metals, rubber, leather, hides, cotton, rayon, and wool.

This index reached an all-time high on February 25 of 252.33, a rise of 72 points or 40 percent since January 1, 1946, when the basic commodity index stood at 180.

CONFIRMED BY FEDERAL RESERVE

These exorbitant increases are confirmed by every official source. The Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Reserve, all point to the same conclusion. The newspapers published the story of the figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics showing a 33½-percent rise in the wholesale prices of foods in 1946, all of which took place after OPA was done in.

The Federal Reserve cost-of-living index shows a jump of 20 points, from 133.3 in June 1946 to 153.3 on December 31, 1946.

In the United States a coalition of Republicans and other reactionaries killed the Office of Price Administration after a violent campaign of propaganda and misrepresentation from big business; but Great Britain and Canada kept their price controls on. Here are the comparative figures from the Federal Reserve Bulletin:

	1942	1946	Increase
	Points	Points	Points
Great Britain	200	204	4
Canada	117	127	10
United States	117	153	36

In other words, because the vast pressures brought by organized greed in an unparalleled campaign of misrepresentation brought about the end of effective price controls, prices have increased in the United States nine times as much as in England in the last 4 years, and almost four times as much as in Canada. England and Canada have both had genuine and absolute shortages in many items; the United States has been saved from the wildest kind of inflation—thus far—only by the fact that we are the richest Nation in the world in our natural resources and in our national production. Our shortages have been relative, and due to the increase in purchasing power and to maldistribution and not to absolute shortages of any commodity except perhaps sugar and soap.

WORST STILL TO COME

Even so, economists and statisticians agree that the worst is yet to come.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics says today that wholesale prices have reached a new high not yet felt at the neighborhood market.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and the gentlemen of this House, may not feel that rise so acutely. It is doubtful if the members or the employees of the National Association of Manufacturers or of the National Association of Retail Dry Goods Dealers or of the Textile Institute will feeel it appreciably.

But the workers—the clerks, the machinists, the laborers, the mechanics, the railroad men, the newspaper reporters, and telegraph messengers—will feel it and feel it hard.

REAL WAGES FALLING

The wages and salaries and annuities of the 18,000,000 white-collar workers and pensioners have not kept pace with this rapid spiral of prices. Department of Commerce figures show that average weekly earnings and average hourly earnings have been declining steadily for the last 2 years, in spite of wage increases here and there.

Real wages are falling more rapidly.

Every price increase is a wage and salary cut for the little man.

If the real wages of John Jones, laborer, were $2,000 a year on January 1, 1946, and he has had no increase in dollars, then his real wages today are but half of that.

RENTS UP NEXT

It will not be long until the rent ceilings are pierced or perhaps destroyed.

That will mean another cut in the real wages of the people.

Can you please tell me how these people can continue to exist when you continually pass legislation which gives industry greater power, greater opportunity to push up production costs artificially, to push up the cost of living, pass all their added expense and bookkeeping charges on to the consumers, who are the workers, and yet evade the law we passed in good faith and the courts sustained?

RELATIONS PEACEFUL NOW

In spite of the unbalance between corporation earnings and individual earnings; in spite of high living costs and low real wages; in spite of all the labor-baiting and price raiding that is being done; in spite of an unending campaign to destroy labor organization and the rights of the common people, we are in a period of great peace right now.

Labor and capital exhibit almost perfect harmony outside of Washington. Our employment levels are high. Purchasing power is great despite rising prices. Our national production was never so high.

We should not destroy this truce.

But if we pass this bill, which is class legislation, which is unconstitutional ex post facto legislation, which is punitive and discriminatory legislation, and deny labor the right to recover wages properly due under the law and under their contracts, at a time when employers can and should meet the assessments without financial injury, we are going to cause trouble.

WILL BE FORCED TO DEMAND MORE INCOME

If people cannot live decently on what they earn and we make it difficult or impossible to recover through the courts and the process of law, working people will be compelled, yes, forced, to demand higher wages and higher incomes.

I know that when that time comes all these businesses and industries will say, as they have said in the past, "Oh, we cannot afford it."

But when their true report is made and they send the statement of their real financial condition to their stockholders you will find that the statements that they have been making to mislead the American people are not founded on fact, and are untrue.

While there have been some instances of operations at a loss, they have or will recover it in rebates on taxes under the law that was passed. Let me remind you again that the Ruml tax plan "forgave" some six billions of corporate tax liabilities, and that the repeal of the excess-profits taxes gave back more billions in gifts.

Let me again remind you that estimates based on Government figures indicate that profits in 1947 will reach the staggering figure of $20,000,000,000.

FARMERS ARE PROSPERING

I saw a report a few days ago that showed the tremendous progress that has been made not only by American industry but also by agriculture.

If my recollection is correct, this showed that agriculture, due largely to Democratic legislation, has increased its profits by some 135 percent.

The December issue of Survey of Current Business, an official reporting service of the Department of Commerce, shows, for instance, that cash income from farm marketing in 1946 would substantially exceed $26,000,000,000.

Contrast that with the low point of $5,000,000,000 in 1932, when a Democratic, progressive, responsible administration took over after 12 years of Republican misrule.

Wheat and other grains are still going up. Hogs were selling last Monday at an all-time high of $30, and only buying resistance brought down that phenomenal price by a dollar.

Do not misunderstand me, Mr. Speaker; I do not begrudge the farmers of this Nation one cent of their incomes. Unless the farmers are prosperous the country cannot be prosperous. They work hard for what they make.

SHOULD NOT FOLLOW TRUSTS' EXAMPLE

But I hope and pray that they will not follow the example of the avaricious industrial combines and demand and insist upon ever higher prices; for instance, the poor packers, such as Armour & Co., who, in 1946, by their own report, made profits of $20,700,000, or Swift & Co., with reported net profits of $16,394,739.

And there are many others which have increased their earnings in the same proportion.

These tremendous increases in profits are due to their successful emasculation and murder of OPA, and their long strike against the American consumer when they deliberately withheld meat from the market waiting for the end of price controls and a chance for quick and easy profits at the expense of consumers—and the consumers are all of us, but especially the workers and the farmers who are also the producers. The kind of manipulation was worked in dairy products, vegetables, and fruits.

JUST AS TRUE IN HOUSING

You must remember that that also applies to housing, when the builders groups insisted that if price ceilings on homes and controls on materials were removed they would be in position to supply the need of housing for our veterans at reasonable prices the veterans could pay. I will leave it to you whether they have kept their promises.

How many homes have they built in the last 6 months? The few that they did build they hold for sale at exorbitantly high prices. The only excuse they give is that it is due to the cost of labor. The fact is that construction labor has increased but 10 percent, while the price of homes to the veterans have increased from 33⅓ to 100 percent. This should and will be remembered by the veterans and the people in general.

FARMERS OPPOSE UNION WRECKING

Who wants these union-wrecking bills?

Not the farmers, Mr. Speaker.

Here is a news story from the conservative Washington Star provided by the equally conservative Associated Press—and I challenge any Member to say that the Star or the Associated Press are pro-New Deal—which tells of one public declaration on that:

FARM LEADERS OPPOSE CRIPPLING OF UNIONS

(By the Associated Press)

DES MOINES, February 15.—Leaders of two large farm organizations today decried what they termed existing antogonisms between farmers and urban laborers.

Joseph W. Fichter, Columbus master of the Ohio State Grange, and Ole L. Olson, Buxton, N. Dak., president of the Farmers Union Grain Terminal Association, voiced their sentiments at a panel discussion of the ninth annual National Farm Institute on problems to be faced with declining farm prices.

"We farm folks should oppose any legislation considered by Congress which would seriously cripple our labor unions," Mr. Fichter asserted. "Farm folks must come to see the point of view of the great labor groups of the city."

Mr. Olson declared that the farmer must realize "that the stomach of the worker is his greatest market."

William G. Murray, economics chairman at Iowa State College, said he believed that farmers would be in a better position now than after World War I if prices should decline because they have a better cash reserve.

Mr. Olson asserted that the large commercial farm operator would be better off, but that the small farmer did not have the necessary cash backlog.

WOMEN AND CONSUMERS OPPOSE UNION WRECKING

It is not the women, who are the buying agents for our great mass of ultimate consumers, Mr. Speaker.

Here is another story from the Washington Star of February 17, Mr. Speaker, which tells about the decisions of one of the largest and most respected of the national women's organizations, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; and this is typical of the attitude of thinking women and thinking consumers everywhere:

WOMEN'S LEAGUE ASKS CONGRESS TO REJECT ANTIUNION BILLS

Rejection by Congress of all proposed antiunion legislation was asked last night by the national board of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, which closed a 2-day meeting at the YWCA downtown center, 614 E Street NW.

The board suggested strengthening of Federal arbitration machinery and the provision of competent industrial relations advisers for both labor and management. In a resolution it said both labor and management should assume responsibility in making and keeping contracts, and should make their records available for public inspection.

The resolution opposed particularly the anti-closed-shop proposals now before Congress and legislation to ban industry-wide bargaining.

The board in other resolutions:

1. Expressed opposition to the bill of Representative KNUTSON, Republican, of Minnesota for a 20 percent across-the-board cut in income taxes. Objections were raised to cuts in useful peaceful functions of Government and to tax cutting in general until the end of this inflationary trend.

2. Urged passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill but asked elimination of the unfortunate pattern of (racial) segregation now practiced in public housing.

3. Backed the administration's reciprocal trade agreement policy.

4. Called for the United States to accept a fair share of the war's displaced persons, suggesting that 400,000 refugees could be admitted; half or even less of the war years' unused immigration quota numbers were used for that purpose.

Miss Annie Lee Stewart, of Chicago, national president of the organization, presided at the meeting.

WHERE IS LABOR'S SHARE?

They have all prospered; they are all making money—the farmers, the packers, the manufacturers, the brokers, the retailers.

But when labor comes and says, "You gentlemen have added this extra cost to the price of what you have produced and sold to us and to other American consumers and to the Government, and we want our share," why, then, that is not so good, and all the professional labor baiters rush in and demand a new law. During the war we heard that labor should not strike while the country is at war, but now we just hear that labor should not strike.

We have this Gwynne bill to restrict the rights of labor in the courts, although the labor baiters want to get the unions into court.

MOST PAY SUITS JUSTIFIED

In some instances, perhaps, as I have said earlier, the so-called portal-to-portal pay suits are not justified; the burden of unpaid work is too little to support the court action. Perhaps some have been frivolous or retaliatory.

The fact remains that most of these actions have been entered into, not only in good faith but under great justification, against employers always ready and willing to chisel a little free work from the men and women who work for them. The employees performed the work; the employers benefited; the employees got nothing but tired.

We should not by our action here today preclude them from recovering that which is actually due them.

To deprive the workers of rights and benefits which are theirs, which we granted them by law, and which the courts have approved, is manifestly unfair, unwarranted, and unjustifiable.

THIS BILL IS AGAINST LABOR

If you think such a bill as this is in the interest of labor, I must of necessity disagree with you.

You surely cannot honestly maintain that there is nothing in this bill inimical to the rights of organized labor and of all workers.

My colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] read extracts from testimony given by one of the minor labor leaders, and I think from an actually uninformed and unthinking leader, who must, unfortunately, be one of those who always play into the hands of the labor squeezers.

Read instead the statements of William Green, the head of the great American Federation of Labor, and of Philip Murray, the head of the great Congress of Industrial Organizations. You will find out then whether intelligent and responsible labor leaders favor this legislation. You will learn what they think of it.

I say again it is one of the most drastic antilabor bills ever brought in here.

REPUBLICANS DO NOT SERVE CAUSE OF LABOR

Of course, Mr. Speaker, you Republicans are in power here.

You have a great majority; but not because you promised before the election that you would legislate against labor. Most of you promised labor you would be fair, that you would see that no legislation was enacted which would be detrimental to their interest.

But now, after your election, after you are in control, you come in here and with almost complete unanimity you bring in discriminatory legislation of this kind and you consistently vote against the interests of labor.

My colleague has asserted that the Republican Party does not serve the big interests. Well, surely, it is not serving the interests of labor.

Oh, I know there may be a few gentlemen on our side who are unfriendly to labor, and they may join with you, which I naturally deplore and regret, but you do not need their assistance at this time.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS PEOPLE'S PARTY

I think that in the best interests of the Nation the Democratic Party should and will continue to be the party of the people—the party which has the interests of the workers and the farmers and the small businessmen and the little people generally always at heart.

I hope and I expect that we will, with very few exceptions, continue to vote that way, work that way, strive that way, and we will again be in a position to show the country that the Democratic Party is a party that all those who believe in justice and fair play and in mature, responsible government can and will support, to restore a Democratic majority in the Congress and at the right time to reelect a Democratic President.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN CAN BE REELECTED

For President Truman, Mr. Speaker, if he consents to run, will be reelected, because the country realizes that he is honest and fearless, and has the interest of the country and of the people at heart.

Oh, I appreciate that the Wall Street controlled cartels and industrial czars, because of their inability to use him, now and until election day, will exert every conceivable effort to defeat him. And that, I presume, will be followed by a few labor leaders, like Lewis, but every honest and sincere labor leader will recognize that it is for their own and the country's interest to reelect him. The Republicans, of course, who are controlled by the interest, will again nominate a man that they can own and control.

VOTERS ALREADY REPENT

All I wish to say in conclusion is this: The big industrial leaders, almost without exception, misled not only the American people but the Congress in promising that if OPA were done to death, price regulations thrown down the well, and free enterprice given its head—but enterprise is not free, but is saddled and bridled and ridden with a tight rein by cartels and trusts and monopolistic trade associations—the black market would be eliminated and prices would be held down by natural laws.

It looks as if those natural laws, so-called, which are not laws but the inevitable result of uncontrolled greed, just did not work, or did not exist.

Today neither those who planned and paid for that propaganda barrage, nor anyone else, can honestly deny that their purposes were purely selfish and were for the purpose of hiking prices and profits, and that has been the result in almost every line. This the American people are commencing to realize, and to recognize as a fact.

The proof is in my mail; for almost daily I receive communications from many who state that they permitted themselves to be misled by these false statements and assurances.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] care to use any more of his time?

Mr. SABATH. Knowing the situation, and that the rule will be adopted, and in view of the fact that there will be 4 hours of general debate, I shall not take more time now.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2157, with Mr. JENKINS of Ohio in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the time is divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable talk on the rule explaining the bill. In addition, my very good and distinguished friend, the former chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SABATH], has just made a political speech. I hope, in the beginning, that we all realize we are legislating or attempting to legislate here in the interest of the American people. I hope we all realize that this bill is not a Democratic bill, a Republican bill, a labor bill or an antilabor bill. It is an honest effort to deal with an emergency which at the moment faces the economy of the country.

If there ever was a time when there should be no thought of class legislation in this House or in the debate of Members, it is at this good hour. The Committee on the Judiciary has given long hours and days in an effort to bring before the House legislation which will be helpful—not perfect, no, but we have not asked for a closed rule. We simply bring the bill before the House for its consideration and action. The subcommittee which held the hearings has done a grand job and a laborious one. There has been no undue speed. There has been no rush. Every group and every interest which wanted to be heard has been heard, and as a result I hold in my hand the printed hearings consisting of 512 pages. These hearings have been available for several days. The report of the committee is available. It explains in detail just what this bill attempts to do and the reasons why this attempt is being made. The members on the majority side are Mr. GWYNNE, of Iowa; Mr. GOODWIN, of Massachusetts; and Mr. KEATING, of New York. The minority members are Mr. WALTER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. BRYSON, of South Carolina; and Mr. LANE, of Massachusetts. These gentlemen heard the witnesses, asked them questions and studied the problem with them. I am sure they are best able to discuss the details of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this bill had its genesis in the Gwynne bill—H. R. 584—on which the hearings were held. After completion of the hearings and due deliberation, the subcommittee prepared another draft of the bill, which was further considered by the full Judiciary Committee, and that committee wrote the bill—H. R. 2157—which is now before the House. In short, the bill as here presented was not written by anyone outside of the Congress.

There will be 4 hours of general debate. It is hoped that all Members desiring will be given an opportunity to express their views in connection with this proposal. At the conclusion of the general debate, the bill will be read line by line for amendment. We are not considering this bill under a closed rule, and all Members desiring will be permitted to offer germane amendments.

Much care has been taken in preparing the committee report. It is complete and understandable, and any additional statement on my part would be superflous. I therefore want to impress upon the membership that report, which is as follows:

GENERAL STATEMENT

H. R. 2157 may be divided into two parts. One part deals with certain claims, actions, and proceedings concerning alleged wages and overtime compensation, based on activities not at the time in question considered compensable, either (1) by express agreement between employer and employee, or (2) by custom or practice at the time and place of employment. These are popularly known as portal-to-portal claims or suits, although the term is not entirely accurate. The other part relates generally to claims, causes of action, actions, and proceedings under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the Bacon-Davis Act.

PART I. CLAIMS BASED ON ACTIVITIES NOT AT THE TIME CONSIDERED COMPENSABLE BY EXPRESS AGREEMENT OR BY CUSTOM OR PRACTICE

1. Nature of the problem

The Fair Labor Standards Act requires the payment to all employees under the act of a certain minimum wage, together with overtime compensation at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which each is employed. Section 16 (b) provides that any employer who violates these provisions "shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in the amount of their unpaid minimum wages, or their unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be, and in an additional equal amount as liquidated damages."

Provision is made for an action by any employee in behalf of himself and other employees similarly situated, in which attorney fees may also be taxed as part of the costs against the employer.

The Fair Labor Standards Act does not define "work" or "workweek" and does not prescribe what preliminary or incidental activities shall be compensable under the provisions of the law. That was left to be settled by the employer and employee, either by express agreement or by implied agreement, based on the custom or practice in that particular place of employment. That had been the general situation for many years prior to the passage of the act.

In Anderson v. Mount Clemens Pottery Co. the Supreme Court had before it important issues "concerning the proper determination of working time for purposes of the Fair Labor Standards Act." Involved was the question whether time spent in walking on the employer's premises to the work station and time spent in certain preliminary and incidental activities must be included in the compensable workweek.

The Court said:

"It follows that the time spent in walking to work on the employer's premises, after the time clocks were punched, involved 'physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business' (Tennessee Coal Co. v. Muscoda Local (321 U. S. 590, 598); Jewell Ridge Co. v. Local No. 6167 (325 U. S. 161, 164–166)). Work of that character must be included in the statutory workweek and compensated accordingly, regardless of contrary custom or contract."

A similar conclusion was reached in regard to the preliminary activities.

The far-reaching result of this new doctrine may be demonstrated by applying it to a concrete situation.

For example, suppose an employee receiving a 70-cent regular hourly rate and who had already worked during that week the statutory maximum number of hours had also put in 30 minutes each day in the walking or other incidental activities referred to by the Court. For a 5-day week, such employee could recover under section 16 (b) $2.625 in addition to the wages previously agreed upon between him and his employer either by express agreement or by custom or practice. Assuming he worked 50 weeks in the year, the recovery for that period would be $362.50. There being no Federal statute of limitations covering the Fair Labor Standards Act, the claimant's right of recovery would extend back to the beginning of his employment, limited only by the effective date of the act (June 25, 1938), and by any applicable State statute of limitations. If the latter were 4 years, the liability of the employer would be $1,050, plus attorney fees and costs. Multiply that figure by the number of employees similarly situated and an idea will be obtained of the employer's potential liability. Apply these calculations to the total number of employers under the act and an idea will be gained as to the seriousness of the threat to the national economy.

It must be remembered also that the action for liquidated damages under the wage-hour law cannot be waived or compromised by agreement between the employer and employee (Brooklyn Savings Bank v. O'Neil, 323 U. S. 698).

Nor can the Court avoid the assessment of the full amount of liquidated damages, regardless of the good faith of the employer.

"Is this provision of the law as to liquidated damages mandatory or discretionary? Since the act has been violated in good faith in this case, we would indeed like to hold that it is discretionary. It seems a keen injustice for employers bewildered by strange legislation and confused by divergent authority in the courts to be subjected to such a measure. Yet no matter how much we lament its harshness, the section appears to be mandatory, and virtually all the courts have so construed it (Missel v. Overnight Transportation Co., 316 U. S. 572)."

2. Extent of the problem

Following the decision in the Mount Clemens Pottery case, many suits were filed in all parts of the country seeking to recover large amounts claimed to be due under the formula laid down in that case.

The quarterly report of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, dated February 13, 1942, points out that between July 1, 1946, and January 31, 1947, 1,913 such cases were filed in the Federal district courts. Of this number, 398 did not claim a definite amount but left the court to establish how much was due. The remaining 1,515 cases claimed a total of $5,785,204,606. Sixty-two percent of the 1,913 cases commenced during the 7-month period were filed the last month thereof, January 1947.

The report, of course, does not include the number of similar cases filed in the State courts.

Considerable evidence has been presented as to the impact of these suits in particular industries. For example, one listing of suits filed in all parts of the country shows 395,223 employees claiming a total of $775,705,800, or an average of over $1,900 for each claimant. One incident is known where the amount claimed for a single employee is $10,000. The fact that the time period involved includes the war years when wages were high with many hours worked over the statutory maximum, has greatly increased the potential liability. Then, too, the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act has been greatly extended since its effective date in 1938. The Administrator estimated as of October 4, 1945, that the act applied to 21,000,000 workers.

The serious nature of these claims is illustrated by the largest settlement reported to date. Under this settlement, an employer agreed to pay a total of $4,656,000 to 4,200 employees and covering a period from September 9, 1940, to September 9, 1946, or an average of $1,108 per employee.

The procedure in these suits follows a general pattern. A petition is filed under section 16 (b) by one or two employees in behalf of many others. To this is attached interrogatories calling upon the employer to furnish specific information regarding each employee during the entire period of employment. The furnishing of this data alone is a tremendous financial burden to the employer.

One employer testified that he had been called upon to furnish information concerning 462 claimants. The data called for included job classification for each of 425 weeks, the scheduled starting and quitting time, total number of hours for which compensation was paid, the regularly hourly rate paid, number of hours for which payment had been made at overtime rates, number of hours shown on their cards between punching the time clock in and out. In all, 4,123,050 items would need to be listed separately at a total estimated cost of $80,000. The same witness estimated the total cost to supply data for all employees, plus the cost of defending the suit, would be $300,000.

In addition to the financial problem, the suits constitute a serious threat to industrial relations and to the principle of collective bargaining. In some cases the time now sought to be declared compensable had been the subject of collective-bargaining agreements.

One good illustration will be found in the coal industry. For many years, both coal miners and operators generally agreed that "traveltime" was not worktime. Wages were adjusted on that basis. In fact, it was the subject of collective-bargaining agreements between the operators and the union. In accordance with this understanding, the Wage and Hour Administrator ruled that such traveltime was not worktime under the act. Thereafter, in the case of Jewell Ridge Coal Co. v. Local No. 6167, United Mine Workers (322 U. S. 756), the Supreme Court of the United States held that, notwithstanding the collective-bargaining agreement, traveltime was worktime. This decision had the practical effect of creating new and unforeseen contingent liabilities which both parties had deliberately attempted to avoid.

The successful prosecution of these suits will cost the Federal Government a staggering sum of money. The amounts paid by employers having cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts, together with litigation expenses, are all chargeable against the Government. The Comptroller General has so decided (Comptroller General Decision B-38642, 23 Comp. Gen. 439). There will also be a loss of revenue through deductions and refunds in taxes.

Cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts in the War Department during the period 1941 to 1946 totaled between forty and forty-five billion dollars. As of February 14, 1947, claims had been asserted under these contracts of about $600,000,000. It was estimated by Under Secretary Kenneth C. Royall at the hearings that the maximum potential liability could go as high as $1,400,000,000.

Attention was also called to the fact that during the period 1941 to 1946 the War Department also awarded approximately $100,000,000,000 in lump-sum contracts. While the Government would not have the same legal liability as attaches in the cost-plus-fixed-fee type of contract, nevertheless there might be a moral obligation, the discharge of which would add another huge amount.

There might also be an additional, although apparently limited loss, in connection with renegotiation proceedings.

As of February 5, 1947, the Maritime Commission had received notification from 18 contractors of the filing of portal-to-portal suits against them. In five of the suits the amount claimed was $128,500,000. The witness for the Commission estimated the additional liability as between $50,000,000 and $150,000,000.

"The greatest potential liability would undoubtedly arise under the ship-construction contracts. To a lesser extent, liability will presumably arise under ship-repair contracts, stevedoring contracts, terminal contracts, and miscellaneous contracts of a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee nature."

The Honorable W. John Kenney, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, pointed out in his statement to the committee the effect of the portal-to-portal pay problem on the Navy Department. He said:

"There are four fields in which the Navy has an interest. First, cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts; second, fixed-price contracts containing provision for escalation in price by reason of increased labor costs; third, terminated fixed-price contracts; and fourth, renegotiation."

Mr. Kenney estimated a potential liability in cost-plus-fee contracts of $720,000,000. In the field of fixed-price contracts with escalation clauses, he declined to make an estimate but said the liability "will probably be substantial, as the great bulk of contracting done by the Navy Department during the war was on a fixed-price basis, and many contracts contained escalation clauses of this character." In regard to terminated fixed contracts and renegotiation, there was also the possibility of liability but apparently in smaller amounts.

The Walsh-Healey Act also concerns itself in its field with minimum wages and overtime compensation. The Bacon-Davis Act has provisions relating to minimum wages and other conditions of employment. These two acts are therefore affected by the Mount Clemens decision. The situation described herein as to the Fair Labor Standards Act applies to that existing under the Walsh-Healey Act and the Bacon-Davis Act. The same necessity exists there for remedial legislation.

The witnesses for the Government departments called attention to the serious administrative burden placed upon the departments "in maintaining such controls and review as are necessary to safeguard the best interests of the Government." It was admitted generally that the expense involved here would be tremendous, whether the various suits were successfully prosecuted or not.

The evidence is conclusive that the maintenance of these suits or the attempts to prosecute them further is a serious threat to the welfare of the Nation. The cost would bankrupt many employers and seriously retard the activities of many others. The amount claimed in some suits is more than the value of the employer's plant. The aircraft industry reports that the suits against it amount to more than its present net worth.

The uncertainty of the present situation with its tremendous threat is seriously interfering with efforts to return to a peacetime economy with full and efficient production; it has clogged the courts with new and expensive litigation; it interferes with the right of collective bargaining; it threatens to add greatly to the cost of goods and services bought by the Government, while at the same time reducing the Federal revenue; it is a serious burden on interstate commerce.

Pay for the activities and time in question was not contemplated when the contract of employment was made. As stated by Under Secretary William C. Foster, of the Department of Commerce, at the hearings:

"Businessmen have indicated to the Department that when they worked out employment agreements, the rates of pay which were set were regarded as compensating the employee for all work done for the employer's benefit."

The amounts recovered are purely a windfall to the persons recovering them.

3. The remedy proposed in H. R. 2157

The claims and suits heretofore described are dealt with directly in sections 3 and 4 of this bill. These sections prohibit the maintenance of such suits in any of the courts of the United States, either Federal or State, and declare that such courts shall have no jurisdiction to proceed with such actions. These sections apply to actions commenced prior to the effective date of the act as well as those commenced thereafter.

The sections apply to all actions and proceedings of every kind based on the activities in question, including all suits for wages, damages, or penalties, actions for injunctions and criminal prosecution.

4. Constitutionality

The constitutional questions involved have been carefully considered by the committee. No attempt will be made here to review the many cases bearing on the subject. We call attention however to the following propositions:

A. Congress has the power to regulate the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts and may withdraw entirely the right of such courts to proceed with suits based on rights created by a Federal statute (Kline v. Burke Construction Co., 260 U. S. 226).

B. It also has the power to withdraw from the State courts the right to adjudicate causes arising out of Federal statutes (Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U. S. 503).

C. Claims for minimum wages, overtime compensation, liquidated damages and penalties are not vested property rights within the protection of the fifth amendment. They are purely statutory rights which may be withdrawn by the Congress at any time before they have ripened into a final judgment from which appeal cannot be taken (16 C. J. S., sec. 254; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429; U. S. ex rel Rodriguez v. Weekly Publication, Inc., 144 F. 2d, 186; National Carloading Corporation v. Phoenix-El Paso Express, Inc., 142 Tex. 141; In re Joseph T. Hall, 167 U. S. 38; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 258 U. S. 13; Maryland v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 3 How. 534).

D. Even if the right to recover overtime compensation, etc., is a vested property right, it could nevertheless be abrogated by Congress in the exercise of its constitutional duty to regulate interstate commerce (Norman v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 294 U. S. 240; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467; Second Employer's Liability cases, 223 U. S. 1; Philadelphia B. & W. R. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U. S. 603; North American Co. v. Securities & Exchange Comm., 327 U. S. 686; American Power & Light Co. v. Securities & Exchange Comm., 67 Sup. Ct. 133).

PART II. PROVISIONS AFFECTING ALL CLAIMS, CAUSES OF ACTION, AND ACTIONS UNDER THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT (29 U. S. C. SECS. 201, 219), THE WALSH-HEALEY ACT (41 U. S. C. SECS. 35, 45), AND THE BACON-DAVIS ACT (40 U. S. C. SECS. 276A TO 276C)

1. Statute of limitations

Actions for the recovery of wages, overtime compensation, penalties, or damages (actual, liquidated, or compensatory) must be commenced within 1 year after the cause of action accrued. This provision applies to actions accruing both before and after the effective date of this act. Causes of action which had accrued more than 1 year prior to the effective date of the act may nevertheless be commenced within 6 months after said effective date. As to the individual claimant, the action is deemed to be commenced when he is named as a party to the action. In other words, the commencement of an action does not stop the running of the statute for all those who later become parties. Causes of action which on the effective date of the act are already barred by any applicable State statute of limitations are not revived but remain barred. In computing the 1-year or 6-month period, the period or periods of time during which a defendant is not found within the United States so that process may be served on him, will be excluded.

The limitation herein provided applies only to the statutory actions or proceedings set forth in the acts enumerated in section 5 of H. R. 2157. Actions under the common law, or under State statutes for recovery of wages are not affected.

The desirability of a uniform Federal statute of limitations has often been pointed out. In the absence of such a statute, courts are required to enforce the State statute deemed to be applicable. (See U. S. Code, title 28, sec. 725.) This has caused confusion and a lack of uniformity throughout the Nation.

2. The good-faith provision

The purpose of this provision is to protect the employer against the retroactive effect of changes in administrative regulations, etc. It is not limited to regulations of the Wage and Hour Administration. On the contrary, the protection extends to all regulations, etc., of the executive branch of the Government which affect the liability of the employer in the three statutes set out in section 5. Included also is a decision of a court of record to which the employer was a party in interest.

The defense must be pleaded and proved by the employer. It is a permissible defense in any action pending on the effective date of this act or commenced any time thereafter. It applies to causes of action regardless of the time when they may have accrued.

Congress has the power to provide protection to employers who have complied in good faith with administrative regulation, interpretation, or enforcement practices. (See Graham & Foster v. Goodsell, 282 U. S. 409; Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U. S. 134.)

3. Settlement of claims

Section 2 (b) provides that any claim, cause of action, or action may be settled or released. This provision applies to settlement both before and after the effective date of the act. To be valid, however, such a settlement must be free from fraud or duress.

Assignment of such claims, causes of action, action, or interest therein, is prohibited.

4. Assessment of damages

In Missel v. Overnight Transportation Co. (316 U. S. 572) the court expressed regret that the imposition of the full amount of liquidated damages under section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act was mandatory. Section 2 (g) of this act would remedy that situation. Under its provision, the court could award liquidated damages or penalties for a violation of the law only if it found that the violation was in bad faith and without reasonable ground. In that event, the amount awarded would be in the discretion of the court but not of course in excess of the maximum specified in the law under which the action arose.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the author of the bill, 20 minutes.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, following the hearings the subcommittee and later the full committee gave very careful consideration to this entire subject. I mean this general subject of portal-to-portal claims and suits, and also other problems caused by giving retroactive effect to certain rulings and regulations. Growing out of those investigations this bill, H. R. 2157, was recommended.

I believe I can say that this is a committee bill, in every sense of the word. It represents the final majority views of the committee. However, I do not wish to infer that every member is in accord with all the provisions of the bill. There will be some disagreements about certain provisions, and you will hear about those later.

The bill has to do with three acts of Congress.

First, the Fair Labor Standards Act; second, the Walsh-Healey Act, which is the Public Contracts Act; and, third, the Bacon-Davis Act, which is the act regulating the building of buildings in behalf of the Government.

The bill, however, is not an amendment to those acts. It affects certain liability under those acts.

This bill may be divided into two parts. The first part has to do with general claims and actions under those three statutes. You will find that in section 2 of the bill. Section 2 undertakes to prescribe certain limitations, to lay down certain conditions under which action for wages, liquidated damages, attorney's fees, and costs may be brought. The first limitation laid down has to do with the statute of limitations. Under existing law there is no Federal statute of limitations limiting the time within which suits may be brought under any of these acts. This bill would put a limit of 1 year. That is to say, every person must sue his claim within 1 year after the cause of action arose. That applies whether the cause of action arises prior to the effective date of the act or after the effective date of the act. Of course, when the act becomes law there will undoubtedly be certain causes of action which have already been running more than a year. Those are not cut off, however. All those people have 6 months after the effective date of the act within which to bring their suits.

In the absence of a Federal statute of limitations, the courts, in trying these cases, are required under the Conformity Act to apply any applicable State statute of limitations. So, under those statutes, some actions are now barred. This act makes it clear that any action now barred under State statute is not revived. We have also cleared up a point about which there was some confusion among the courts. That has to do with the question when the statute begins to run as to a person who later joins a representative or class action. In other words, is the statute tolled by the bringing of the action for everyone who later joins in? This bill makes it clear that such is not the case. Every person joining the action can be met by the statute of limitations, and it begins to run at the time he is made a party to the action.

Let me say this to you about the statute of limitations: It purports only to limit the time within which the statutory actions may be brought; that is, for example, under the wage-and-hour law, an employee may sue for minimum wages or for overtime compensation and may recover that amount, plus an equal amount as liquidated damages and attorneys' fees and costs. That is the statutory action. This would limit only the time for beginning of that action; it does not affect his right under common law to bring an action for any wages in the State courts, and be subject there to the usual statute of limitations.

I think the situation is entirely similar to that which exists in cases of mechanics' liens. For example, suppose I buy material for my house from a lumber dealer. He may furnish me the lumber and sue me for the amount involved at any time within the statutory period, which, in my State, is 5 years on oral contracts. It was thought by the legislature that that was not an adequate remedy, so they gave the lumber dealer a special statutory right—just like we gave to employees under the Fair Labor Standards Act. They gave the lumber dealer a mechanics' lien. He could file in the courthouse a statement of the amount due and that became a lien on my property; that gave him great rights over every other creditor, and he could foreclose it in due time. The legislature required—and you will find similar provisions in your own State—that the filing of that lien must be within 90 days and the action to foreclose it must be brought within 1 year.

I point that out simply to indicate that it has been the general policy of legislative bodies when they give a special and drastic statutory remedy to require that that remedy be exercised within a rather short period of time. If the beneficiary thereof does not care to rely upon that particular remedy his right to sue under common law as ordinary people sue ordinary claims is in no way affected.

The next provision has to do with the so-called good-faith provision. One of the great complaints about the operation of the Fair Labor Standards Act has to do with the many conflicting and confusing rulings. The act has been greatly extended, as you know, the coverage of the act has every year been made broader and broader. Just to give you one example, they held, and the Supreme Court held with the Administrator some time ago, that an elevator operator in a building who simply took customers up to the top floor where a company was engaged in manufacturing goods to be sold in interstate commerce, that that elevator man was under the Fair Labor Standards Act. There are literally hundreds of cases that might be cited. The net result has been that many small employers have gone to the person responsible for enforcing the law, have gotten rulings, interpretative bulletins, and have relied on them, only to find that next year the ruling has been changed by the Administrator or that a court decision has changed it.

Regardless of his good faith, the employer finds himself subject to suit, not just for the amount involved but for twice the amount involved, together with attorney's fees and costs. This simply provides that the employer in any such case may plead and prove that what he did was done in good faith and in reliance upon administrative rulings or regulations.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I notice in that section reference to reliance in good faith on any administrative regulations and in the report, page 7, second paragraph, it is provided that the protection extends to all regulations, and so forth, of the executive branch of the Government which affect the liability of the employer under the three statutes set out in section 5. I am wondering whether or not the language in the report is a correct statement of the intention of the committee. I was under the impression that the good faith was to be extended to reliance on orders of the War Labor Board as well as good faith reliance on all orders from any executive branch of the Government.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct. My understanding is exactly the same as the gentleman's. This good-faith provision extends to any administrative order, regulation, or practice of any department of the executive branch of the Government insofar as it affects liability under these three acts.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN. I would like to clear my mind on that. For instance, if the Wage and Hour Administrator, or one of his deputies, issues a ruling or an interpretation under the act, the employer is allowed to proceed under that without being penalized later when they change their minds?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. BARDEN. That is the same issue that was fought out here on the floor when the amendments were offered 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. BARDEN. And they turned me down on that.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I hope we have better luck now.

Mr. BARDEN. They turned me down on the 1-year limitation also. I hope they are truly repentant today.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. We should bear in mind that this in no way interferes with the right of any administrator to issue rules and regulations and interpretations as provided by law and to change those rules and regulations. All this provides is that the changes will not operate retrospectively.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I have listened to the colloquy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Iowa, and I was very much interested. I thought he raised the point that the committee's real intention was not expressed in the report, and whether or not the interpretation that you now place on it is different from that of the report. I would like to know about that because if it comes to a matter of ascertaining the intent of Congress and the court referred to the report, perhaps not looking into the debates, I am wondering where we stand now.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I think the report sets out very clearly what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] and I have in mind. It says:

> The purpose of this provision is to protect the employer against the retroactive effect of changes in administrative regulations, etc. It is not limited to regulations of the Wage and Hour Administration. On the contrary, the protection extends to all regulations, etc., of the executive branch of the Government which affect the liability of the employer in the three statutes set out in section 5.

Mr. REED of New York. Then it is understood that in your colloquy here you did not intend to say that the report did not reflect the intention of the committee?

Mr. WALTER. What I had in mind was clarifying the order feature of the language in the report because, after all, the proceedings are under one of the three statutes; however, wages may be fixed by a Government agency other than the wage-hour, Walsh-Healey, or Bacon-Davis agencies.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. As illustrative of this situation, the Wage and Hour Administration, as you know, was required to define areas of production under the Fair Labor Standards Act. They issued such a definition under which the employers, especially in the canning business in the agricultural fields, operated. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States in which the Supreme Court held that that definition was unconstitutional, and set it aside, and required the Wage and Hour Administrator to issue a new definition of "area of production," something that the Congress refused or failed to. Now, then, under this new definition of area of production, as now defined by the Wage and Hour Administrator, we find that under the decision of the Supreme Court it is retroactive, and an employer who may have been complying with the first definition may now find that he is faced with penalties that have arisen because of this decision of the Supreme Court which makes those penalties retroactive.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. What I want to know is this: Is it intended, under this good-faith provision which the gentleman discussed on page 7 of the report, that an employer who has in good faith complied with the regulations established by the Wage and Hour Administrator under his then existing definition of area of production, is protected against suits for double damages or treble damages because of the subsequent change by the Supreme Court directing a new area-of-production definition?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct. That is exactly what we have in mind.

There are two other features in part I of the bill that are quite important. Under existing law this action for double damage under the Wages and Hours Act cannot be settled. We allow settlements to be made, and a settlement will be valid in the absence of fraud or duress. Also under existing law if there has been a violation of the wage-and-hour law or any of these laws, regardless of the good faith of the employer who makes the violation, the court has no discretion other than to assess the amount found due plus an additional amount for liquidated damages. In this bill we provide that the court may assess this liquidated damage only if he finds that the violation of the law was in bad faith and without reasonable grounds, and then he may assess such amount as he thinks is right, but not to exceed the amount fixed in the particular law.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Upon whom is the burden of proof as far as this bad faith is concerned?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I presume it would be on the plaintiff.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The employee rather than the employer. It would be a question of having the employee prove the state of mind of the employer; is that correct?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I do not know that that is it at all. The bill simply says that if the court finds that the employer acted in bad faith then he may assess such sum as he thinks is equitable.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The burden is on the employee then?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I would not say it was. It is a question for the court to determine; whoever proves it or disproves it. I do not suppose it makes any great difference.

The second part of the bill has to do with suits for the recovery of compensation in connection with activities which, at the time they were performed, were not considered compensable either by express agreement or by implied agreement, based on custom or practice—portal-to-portal, so to speak.

The portal-to-portal situation is simply this: The wage-and-hour law, the Walsh-Healey Act, and others, do not contain any definition of "worktime" or "workweek." Those acts do not say what activities are compensable. It was the general understanding, I believe, when the laws were passed, that that would be settled by agreement between the parties either expressly or by custom and practice which necessarily would enter into the minds of the contracting parties.

In the Mount Clemens case the Supreme Court considered whether or not certain walking time from the gate to the work station or time used in certain preliminary activities, changing clothing, and so forth, was compensable under the wage-hour law. The court held that it was compensable time and was covered by the Wages and Hours Act, even though the parties themselves may have expressly agreed that it was not compensable.

We set out in the report exactly what that would mean in practical figures. Take a person working at a basic rate of 70 cents an hour and putting in 30 minutes every day in these preliminary activities. If he worked 5 days a week and 50 weeks a year for a period of 4 years, he would be entitled to recover from his employer over $1,000 with attorney fees and costs. You can multiply that figure by the number of employees in the plant and apply those calculations to all the employees under the wage-hour law and see what it means to the economy of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. We move in on that problem very directly. Section 3 provides that the courts, Federal and State, have no jurisdiction to entertain suits of that character. It is as simple as that.

This brings me to a question I had better touch on before my time expires, the question of constitutionality. The ex post facto provision of the Constitution prohibits the making of any criminal statute retroactive under any circumstances. There is, however, no similar provision in regard to civil legislation. That does not mean that the Congress is without limitation in the matter, quite the contrary. We are limited by the fifth amendment, which states that no person's property shall be taken from him without due process of law.

What does "property" mean? The court has held that "property" was used in that amendment in the same sense you and I ordinarily use it. It means tangible, definite property. It does not mean some inchoate right that you have not reduced to possession. It does not mean some fish in the river you have not yet caught. It does not mean some judgment under a statutory right that you might recover but have not yet recovered.

What is this right of the employee to recover time and a half for overtime? Is it based on the common law? Certainly not. Is it based on contract? Certainly not. It is based entirely on a statute of the Congress. The Congress in the exercise of a great public policy said, "We believe it to be in the national interest that any person who works more than a certain number of hours a week should be paid time and a half of the basic rate for that time." It is purely a statutory right, and the courts have held that all those statutory rights that are given by Congress may be taken away by the Congress at any time until they have ripened into a judgment from which further appeal may not be taken.

I can make that very clear if I give you an illustration or two. Prior to 1850 Congress passed a law which provided that any person who aided in the escape of a fugitive slave could be sued by the master and a $500 penalty collected from him. A man named Norris brought such a suit against a man named Crocker. He proved all these facts and was entitled to recover.

While the case was pending, the Congress amended the law and took away that penalty. The Supreme Court held, in substance, that Congress simply had pulled the rug out from under Mr. Norris.

We did the same thing in the informer statute.

We did the same thing in connection with the insurance bill. You remember in the Southeastern Underwriters case, the Supreme Court held that the business of insurance was interstate commerce, thereby reversing decisions of 75 years' standing. The net result of that was that the insurance companies of the land were immediately made liable to suit for treble damages under the antitrust laws, and chaos faced the insurance companies as well as the country at large. The Congress moved in and passed Public Law No. 15, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which provided that these suits could not be maintained until January 1 of next year, at which time it was thought that other legislation will take care of the matter.

Somebody may say, "You are wrong in your major premise. You are going on the theory—which I am—that this right to recover overtime is purely a statutory right coming under the decisions which are cited." Let us assume it is not a statutory right but that it is a private right and, therefore, does not come under these decisions. Let us assume that and proceed from there. Some years ago a man named Norman bought from the B. & O. Railroad a gold bond. He paid his money and received the bond, which entitled him to recover the face value thereof in gold of a certain weight and fineness. That was not a statutory right, was it? That was clearly a private right which he had bargained for. That was property in any man's language, and no court would hold other than that that was a property right such as was meant to be protected by the fifth amendment. In the meantime, the Congress stepped in and passed the well-known gold law. When this man brought suit against the B. & O. Railroad to recover in accordance with the provisions of the bond, he was met by that statute which made it impossible for the railroad to pay the bond in gold of the agreed weight and fineness. The Court held, in substance, that every contract right in the country is subject to the paramount duty of the Congress to regulate interstate commerce and to perform the other great duties which it must perform for the country. That was the case of Norman v. The B. & O. Railroad (294 U. S. 240).

There are many other cases I could cite but I will not take up your time further.

The due-process clause is one of the great basic principles of government, and we have relied on it many times. For instance, a great depression comes along. Courts always held that a man was entitled to sue on his mortgage bond if the defendant does not pay the interest. According to the decisions of the courts, that creditor is entitled to his pound of flesh even though it carries with it the blood of the unfortunate debtor who cannot pay. That is what the courts have held. But during the depression the State legislatures stepped in there and stayed the hands of the courts. The action of the State legislatures was upheld under the due-process clause. We do the same thing in time of war when all the young men who produce food and clothing for the people are out on the battlefield. Here is a man at home who has bought a lot of food and clothing. He says, "It is mine. I will charge what I please." The Congress says, "You will not. We will recognize the right of the public as superior to any contract right you have." Putting it briefly, that is the due-process clause. You may cite cases by the hour and all you would conclude finally is that it is a basic principle of law which is rooted deep in the great fundamentals of common sense, justice, and fair play.

This due-process clause has often been applied to protect the few against the many, but it is just as powerful to protect the many against the few, as we are doing in this case.

Mr. Chairman, the due-process clause is a shelter for the helpless in the time of their emergency. It is not a sword for the unrighteous in the day of their aggression.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, you have just listened to one of the major prophets of the law in this Congress, and I think you have listened to an exposé of the law with reference to the pending bill as succinctly put as any man could have done. We in our committee regard the gentleman from Iowa, JOHN GWYNNE, as one of the soundest and best lawyers in this House. We believe that he and the subcommittee over which he so ably presides have done as fine a job with this bill as could be done with the approach they used. My hat is off to them. I am for the bill very cordially. I think that an amendment which I will propose would be helpful to the bill and helpful to the cause. I understand that the Parliamentarian will, as the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee did in our committee, rule my amendment out of order. I have no hard feeling, and bow respectfully, as I must.

My proposal of that amendment was simply because I believe profoundly that it goes to the root of the trouble and is the best possible approach. I know it is being ruled out of order because the Congress, as I see it, is following the practice of the jurisdictional strike, which I abhor. The reason the point of order was sustained, and will again be sustained, is because jurisdiction over the so-called Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is in the Labor Committee rather than the Judiciary Committee. That may or may not be true, but we are representatives of the people of America. What we are trying to do is to do a thorough, workmanlike job for the people of America against pending and threatened evils that jeopardize our economy nationally. No matter who does the job, I submit, it ought to be done. The proper approach in all such matters is to do what needs to be done, well, thoroughly, and immediately. When you have a cancer, medical science has convinced the surgeons who know their business that the way to cure it is to excise it entirely. They cut it out wholly, root and branch. We are dealing here with a cancer. We may treat it otherwise, no matter how skillfully, but if we spare the knife the patient may die.

Every single pillow-to-pillow or portal-to-portal claim arises out of these three sections of the Wage and Hour bill. The manly, the right, the direct, the skillful, and the only safe approach is for Congress to repeal those three sections from which all our trouble flows. Then either in the same act, this act, or some separate act, whichever may be preferable, we can reenact those three sections suitably revised and safeguarded.

I believe that this bill with the repeal of sections 6, 7, and 16 (b) of the Wage and Hour bill will be a better bill than it is now. It is good now, but I have no fear that with the repeal of those three sections it will be a better bill and one which is more bombproof. So I submit with the highest respect for the subcommittee, for its able leader, the gentleman from Iowa, JOHN GWYNNE, and for the great committee which has brought this bill to the floor, that we ought to do the whole job that needs doing, and kill what may otherwise kill the economic life of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I speak for the members on the Judiciary Committee who signed the principal minority report. It is always difficult to swim against the tide, and I fear that in making my remarks this afternoon I will be swimming against the tide; I feel intense currents of opposition; but somebody has to bring these facts out, and I willingly do so.

The gentleman from Michigan, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said that the American people were interested in this bill. I want to remind my distinguished chairman, for whom I have the highest regard, that the working men and women of this country who, with the members of their families, very likely constitute over 100,000,000 of the population of the land, are vitally concerned with this bill. That number of people is a pretty good chunk of the American people.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is going on the false assumption that all of those people favor these portal-to-portal suits.

Mr. CELLER. I wish the gentleman would let me finish. I did not say that. I will say that those workingmen and their loved ones are very much interested in this bill and they are very much concerned that under the guise of blacking out or blocking out some unwarranted so-called portal-to-portal suits we are attacking and emasculating the Fair Labor Standards Act; and surely those working men and women are very much interested to see that the Fair Labor Standards Act is not destroyed even piecemeal.

As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] said, he would like to cut out the "cancer" in its entirety, meaning the Fair Labor Standards Act. Should his suggested amendments prevail, the very guts of the act would be taken out and there would be no Fair Labor Standards Act. He spoke truly when he said that we are doing this thing piecemeal, this destruction of the Fair Labor Standards Act. So what I say finds favorable lodgment and is reechoed in the mind of the gentleman from Alabama. There has been a great deal of hysteria about these portal-to-portal claims. Some of those cases are good and some of those cases are bad. I am sure the distinguished author of the bill, the gentleman from Iowa, will agree to that. He did say in committee that he wanted to protect the good cases, but, again, this bill would at least throw a shadow across all the good claims if it would not preclude and proscribe them.

The adding machines have been taken out by some commentators and some of the publicists appearing for newspapers and they give a staggering figure as to the amount of these portal-to-portal claims. The figures are greatly exaggerated. What is claimed in a suit and what is recovered are entirely two different matters. In a lawsuit lawyers for plaintiffs usually balloon the claims. I admit willingly that many of these suits are utterly unwarranted and should never have been brought by the representatives of labor. Those who instituted some of the cases have done labor a disservice. But much of the hubbub is unwarranted. There are many good claims and we must protect those good claims. The bill does the opposite.

There is nothing new about portal-to-portal claims, although we are told that it is a novel situation; that we have never had portal-to-portal claims heretofore. Look at the interpretative bulletins of the Wage and Hour Division and you will see that Mr. Metcalfe Walling away back in 1939 warned management that they would have to pay for this type of work. I read from his testimony given before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, page 245. Mr. Metcalfe Walling, a very distinguished administrator, states:

> I make no claim that I anticipated the situation created by the Mount Clemens case specifically, but I have made it clear on repeated occasions that I was seriously concerned about the possibility of retroactive liability growing out of a fundamental defect in the act.

That fundamental defect, he said, was his inability to make any administrative regulations. We deprived him of the right to make rules and regulations. May I say, Mr. Chairman, if we had given to the Administrator of the Wages and Hours Act the power to make rules and regulations, and therefore to define a workday or a workweek, or a productive day or a productive week, we would not have been bothered by all these portal-to-portal claims. He could have readily and timely settled all of them.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Was it the purpose of the Congress in not doing the thing the gentleman states, that employers' employees could under the Collective Bargaining Act settle their own disputes, bargain, and collect, and if they have done that they have acted in good faith; but because some misguided court makes a mistake as to what Congress intended and the people intended who entered into the bargain, we find ourselves in this emergency?

Mr. CELLER. The observation made by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee is in part sound, but it does not go far enough. Surely that is the situation with organized labor. But how many organized men are there in this land? Fourteen million. But what of the forty or fifty million unorganized men? The situation that the gentleman adverted to does not apply to unorganized labor, and we must be interested in unorganized labor as well as organized labor. The unorganized workers cannot collectively bargain. It is the unorganized man who does not know his rights. He has not got the pipe line of intelligence to the counsel of the union who can tell him adequately what his rights are. But the vast army of unorganized labor, forty or fifty million—I do not know the exact number—does not have the advantages that the union can give its men. When we adopted the Fair Labor Standards Act, we adopted it not only for union labor but for nonunion labor as well, and particularly for the nonunion workingmen.

Again, to supplement the statement I made that there is nothing new with reference to these portal-to-portal claims, the contrary notwithstanding, as the editorials and the commentators would have it, I call attention to the Tennessee Coal & Iron case, decided in 1944, which, in part, reads as follows—the Supreme Court speaking:

> We are not here dealing with mere chattels or articles of trade, but with the rights of those who toil, of those who sacrifice a full measure of their freedom and talents to the use and profits of others. Those are the rights that Congress has specifically legislated to protect.

And, again, further down in the opinion:

> It is vital, of course, to determine first the extent of the actual workweek. Only after this is done can the minimum-wage and maximum-hour requirements of the act be effectively applied. And in the absence of a contrary legislative expression, we cannot assume that Congress here was referring to work or employment other than those words are commonly used * * * as meaning physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business.

Now, that was fair notice to all the employers. I am sure that you will agree with me that all employers are not lily white. There are some who cut corners and, to use words of common parlance, there are many chiselers, and it is because of those chiselers that we must be very careful, and I fear we are not careful in this legislation when we seek to offer amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Now, it has been the practice in many unions to recognize portal-to-portal claims. I had this to say in the minority report, and you will forgive me for repeating it:

> A wide variety of activities which employers have always compensated, not unlike the portal-to-portal claims, occur in the building trades, longshoring, petroleum, newspaper editorial and photographic work. In the American Federation of Labor unions, time spent in traveling from designated bases to the work site, by collective bargaining, is considered worktime and paid for. In carpenters' agreements, tool sharpening is considered worktime during working hours and paid for. In street and bus transportation, getting the car ready for servicing and returning it to the barn is considered time worked and paid for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

This is in organized labor. That time is paid for. But that time is not paid for when it concerns the unorganized working men and women of the United States.

Judge Picard, who has been maligned up and down the Nation, and who was sought to be impeached—I think it was by a Member of this body—has rendered another decision, a second decision, which says where the time expended is of little consequence, is ineffectual and of very short duration, applying the so-called de minimis rule, suit should not be brought and is of no value, and he threw the case out of court, and I wager that thousands upon thousands of cases brought will be thrown out of court by virtue of Judge Picard's second decision.

Now I come to a provision of the Gwynne bill which to my mind is most obnoxious, and that is the limitation of 1 year as a statute of limitations. All past claims have applied to them a limitation of 6 months. But when it comes to future claims, I have many objections to the statute of limitation of 1 year. To my mind that is a rank discrimination against the working man.

In my State of New York a businessman has 6 years within which to bring a money claim against anybody. If a workman borrows money from him, the employer can wait 6 years before he brings action for recovery of the loan against the employee. Many of our Federal statutes have more than 3 years, at least more than 2 years, in which actions may be brought. Under present law a suit for a penalty of forfeiture operates under a 5-year statute of limitations. A suit under the Federal Employers' Liability Act operates under a statute of limitations which was originally 2 years but that was found to be inadequate and the Congress changed it to 3 years. A suit for infringement of patent rights operates under a 6-year statute of limitations. Suits under the Trust Indentures Act of 1939 and the Perishable Commodities Act operate under a 3-year statute of limitations.

We passed a bill similar to the Gwynne bill in the last Congress. We did not say in that bill that the statute of limitations was to be 1 year, we said it was to be 2 years, and over in the other Chamber they lifted it to 3 years. The bill died finally because of the abrupt ending of Congress.

I should like to warn the businessmen and warn management that if Congress can take away the rights of labor by limiting their claims to 1 year, then let businessmen beware. There is here established a very solemn and serious precedent, and similiar rights may be filched from businessmen and management in the future.

Let us see what the statutes are in the various States concerning claims for compensation. In Arkansas it is 5 years; California, 3 years; Illinois, 5 years; Indiana, 6 years; Nebraska, 4 years; Nevada, 6 years; New Hampshire, 6 years; New Jersey, 6 years; New Mexico, 4 years; New York, 6 years; North Carolina, 3 years; Ohio, 3 years; and Oklahoma, 3 years. Where in several States the statute was made 1 year or 6 months, the courts declared the statutes unconstitutional as setting entirely too short a period of time within which a claim could be brought.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. Would the gentleman claim that any of these statutes of limitation on bringing actions for wages are repealed or amended by this law, which merely applies to the special double damages and other features provided in the Federal laws?

Mr. CELLER. I am only instancing these particular State statutes to show that there is far more wisdom in the States with reference to statutes of limitation than there is in this Congress if we pass a 1-year statute of limitations. Also if we pass the bill it would control the time in the various States within which a suit for wages can be brought.

Mr. VORYS. I asked for information. Is it not true that even if the Gwynne bill were passed in its present form an employee would still have a right for an action for work performed?

Mr. CELLER. No. This law would be paramount to State statutes, and it would be only 1 year. In the various States I indicated, where there are 5- and 6-year limitations, the time would be whittled down to 1 year if we passed this bill.

Mr. VORYS. Can the employee recover for any work for which his employer agreed to pay him under the longer statute of limitations? I think that is obviously the case.

Mr. CELLER. If the claim is brought under the Bacon-Davis Act or under the Walsh-Healey Act, or under the Fair Labor Standards Act, if we pass this bill which is applicable to all three acts, there is only 1 year in which the claim can be brought in court.

Mr. VORYS. That is perfectly true, but the man would still have his right under the common law to recover if the employer agreed to pay him.

Mr. CELLER. Yes. That is under common law but not if he bases his claim on the right that we accorded him under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, my very distinguished colleague on the committee.

Mr. ROBSION. The gentleman speaks of the statute of limitations with reference to the question of wages and so forth. The statutes to which the gentleman has referred do not carry with them this penalty as provided in the Federal Wages and Hours Act.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct; but we are taking away the liquidated damages.

Mr. ROBSION. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that the limitation would not apply to the cases where the claim is just for wages, but with reference to double damages, that is an unusual weapon or privilege granted to the worker.

Mr. CELLER. But may I remind the gentleman that he forgets that if we pass this act as it is worded now we practically take away the so-called liquidated damages, which is the incentive for an employer to abide by the law. If we pass this law, we say that the employee cannot bring his action for anything other than the amount of the wages that the employer had to pay in the first instance, unless the employer was guilty of bad faith. We take away the right of the employee to sue for what is known in the act as liquidated damages, which is 100 percent of the amount of wages due unless there is bad faith. If we take that right away, we take away from him the right to sue for liquidated damages and the right to sue for the penalty. Then what happens? If a man violates a law, all he will be responsible for, despite his violation, is the amount of wages he would have had to pay in the first instance. What kind of penalty do you have then? What kind of incentive is there in the act so that the law will be obeyed? Remember, also, that the public, in addition to the employee, is interested in the matter of liquidated damages.

Mr. VORYS. The criminal penalty is still in the law; is that not true?

Mr. CELLER. But the criminal penalty is greatly changed by this act because even in the case of bad faith the court is not compelled to impose the full penalty but has discretion in the imposition of the penalty. Therefore, upon a showing of good faith, all the employer is obliged to pay is the amount which he was obligated to pay in the first instance. Therefore, there would be an incentive to violate the law instead of obeying it, and an employer could do all in his power to prevent giving an adequate wage to an employee for 1 year, and if he was successful in doing so for 1 year, then the employee is out of luck.

Mr. ROBSION. May I remind my friend the gentleman from New York that there is not a line in this bill which wipes out the liquidated-damages provision. It merely provides for changing this provision of liquidated damages or civil penalty to the extent that it gives the court discretion not to allow no sum at all but to allow an amount according to the proof.

Mr. CELLER. Oh, no. I must respectfully differ with the gentleman. There is no provision providing for the collection of liquidated damages unless there is bad faith, and in good-faith cases liquidated damages go out the window.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. Where in the act is the liquidated-damage provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act eliminated?

Mr. CELLER. On page 5, subsection (g), which provides that in cases where the action of the employer was "in bad faith and without reasonable ground," and then the court may award the penalty up to the limit of 100 percent of the wage—that is, up to full liquidated damages in its discretion.

Again, I am interested in the nonorganized workers. A worker would be very fearsome of bringing in a claim for any action, especially if he is not in a union, because there would be fear and trepidation that he might lose his job. We must help in every way the worker—especially the unorganized worker. He is not inclined to make any claim, but even if he is inclined to make a claim, and he does make a claim, no matter how violative of the law the employer may be, the employer can compromise any claim; he can stick under the nose of an unsuspecting employee a waiver or release and shove into his hand a $10 bill, and then there is compromised a claim for perhaps several hundred dollars. I do not think that is the American way, and that is why I must oppose this bill.

Now, beyond that, take this 1-year statute of limitations: The testimony showed there were 550,000 establishments in this country subject to investigation by the Wage and Hour Division. Mr. Walling testified that with his staff he could only conduct 50,000 investigations. Therefore, it would take over 10 years to complete the investigations of these various establishments who operate under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Yet the poor devil who is not a member of the union, who does not know his rights, must rely upon the investigation of the Wage and Hour Division and he may have to wait for 10 years before he will know his rights. By that time he is confronted with a fait accompli: this 1-year statute of limitations will have operated against him.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION. Does the gentleman object to a worker having the right to settle his claim?

Mr. CELLER. I think that the worker should be permitted to consult the Wage and Hour Division, the various regional offices, to determine what his right is. I think the Wage and Hour Division, particularly with reference to unorganized workers, should first have some say in the matter. For that reason I hope that we can amend the bill to permit the Wage and Hour Division to determine, by regulation, what is productive work, what is a workweek, and what is a workday.

An employer can absolve himself completely if he claims he relied on any "administrative regulation, order, ruling," and even "enforcement policy or practice."

There is no limitation to rulings or interpretations of the Administrator. Any minor regional official can make any ruling that will absolve the corner-cutting employer.

A complete defense is not only reliance upon administrative opinion, ruling, interpretation, regulation, or order, but also even something called "enforcement policy or practice." Frequently an enforcement policy may include a decision not to act in certain cases only because of lack of funds or because it is decided that other cases are more important and more urgent.

Rights of workingmen are thus dependent on rather vague formulas.

It were better to give the Administrator power to make rules and regulations—a power which we withheld. Such power would enable the Administrator to make rules defining "workday," "workweek," "production work," "compensation for work," and so forth. That power heretofore granted would have done away with the so-called portal-to-portal suits.

The employer can, under the bill, compromise and settle any claim. Thus an employer may pay his employee 30 cents an hour instead of the legal rate of 40 cents and then free himself from liability for his law violation simply by securing from the underpaid employee a signature on a waiver or release.

Also liquidated damages can only be recovered if bad faith is shown. The bill says in effect that double damages can only be recovered by proving something that is quite difficult if not impossible—bad faith—the operation of the employer's mind. Yet even the product of the employer's bad faith the proposed bill would permit the employee to compromise away. Compensation may be barred by custom or practice. And it is not custom or practice in the industry but in the particular establishment. Practices in different plants within the industry may differ. Thus wages may differ in different places. That may be noncompetitive conditions.

What is practice, especially in a new plant or new industry? It would take more than 1 year—the statute of limitations is 1 year—to know what the custom and practice in a new plant is. But by that time the claim for overtime pay is foreclosed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has again expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, of course, in the consideration of a measure of this sort, sometimes people, accidentally or otherwise, get away from the legislation under consideration.

This bill does not do any of the things that either the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] were so apprehensive about in their statements. You must bear in mind that when the attention of the country was focused on the so-called portal-to-portal suits it was the opinion of everyone that there were things in the wage-and-hour law, in the Walsh-Healey Act, and in the Bacon-Davis Act that required clarification so that the chaotic condition that our Government, courts, employers, and our labor unions found themselves in could not be continued for long.

This bill does not whittle away one single right of the workers under the wage-and-hour law. I say to you if it did I would not be in the well of this House urging that this bill be enacted. After all, when the wage-and-hour law was written, it was written to protect the health, efficiency, and general well-being of workers who are engaged in those activities which are considered to be interstate commerce. The statute affects about 21,000,000 workers, of which number approximately 12,000,000 are unorganized.

These 12,000,000 workers should be given even greater protection than they now have from those unscrupulous employers that very few of us know very much about. Unfortunately, when we consider legislation of this sort, we think of the reputable employer, we think of the man who is today confronted with claims for something he never anticipated he would be obliged to defend against, and we lose sight of those people who would destroy the reputable businessman and get into his markets through the cutting of corners. There is nothing in this bill, as I said before, that affects that class of employers, that I think we should continue to protect to the best of our ability.

What have we done that affects the wage-hour law? We have provided that where an employer acts in good faith and does that which in his judgment he has a right to do by virtue of established custom not in violation of the law, or by virtue of a decision of a court in an action in which he was a party, or by virtue of a ruling by an administrative agency, he has a valid defense, which, of course, must be established as is any defense, when a suit is brought under the statutes set out in section 5 of the bill, and in that instance only. Even the very capable Administrator of the wage-and-hour law, Mr. Walling, urged that settlement of claims should be allowed. Bear this in mind, that under existing law, under section 16 (b) of the wage-hour law, the court has absolutely no discretion whatsoever in the imposition of a penalty when there has been a violation, whether willful or otherwise. If the court finds that an employee is entitled to compensation for minimum wages or for overtime employment, then it is mandatory on the court to impose the penalty. In many cases the courts have stated that they would like, if possible, to relieve the employer of a penalty for something that he did innocently and not deliberately, but are powerless to do anything but impose a penalty as liquidated damages in an amount equal to the amount recovered for unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation.

We have provided in this bill that where there is a violation then the court has jurisdiction to impose whatever penalty he sees fit to impose up to double the amount of the claim. I cannot imagine a court anywhere in this land that would not impose the full penalty prescribed under the statute in a case of willful violation of the law.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman think it fair to have the employer rely upon the administrative ruling or interpretation of law by anyone, say, of the lesser echelons of the Wage and Hour Division, some insignificant servant or employee?

Mr. WALTER. It seems to me, I may say to the gentleman from New York, in that regard, that the usual rules of the law of agency should prevail, and that where a person is apparently clothed with the indicia of authority to speak for his employer, in this instance the agency, then it seems to me that the person who receives his interpretation from such a person ought to have the right to rely on it. Certainly if he calls some minor official or writes a letter to a minor official, if the minor official has the right to reply to such letter it ought not to be construed as bad faith to rely on it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. There is nothing in the act which puts that limitation upon the ruling; it can be any administrative ruling, or order, or interpretation by anybody in the service.

Mr. WALTER. But the record discloses that the rulings are made by the Administrator—and this is Mr. Walling's testimony—the rulings are either made by him or made by somebody to whom he had delegated the authority to make the rulings. I cannot imagine the important queries we have in mind ever reaching the desk of anyone without the authority to act thereon.

Now, that is the substance of the testimony as disclosed by the record. The thing that appealed to the members of the subcommittee charged with the responsibility of considering this problem was the language of the wage-hour law which ties the hands of the court in the imposition of the penalty in all cases.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. As a layman, I cannot quite understand the language in section 3, particularly the words "either by custom or practice." Would that mean that if the custom or practice is admittedly bad or in error that would be a defense?

Mr. WALTER. I was about to come to that. That phase of the problem as contained in section 3 of the bill caused our committee a great deal of trouble. What is custom and practice? What is the custom and practice in determining what the employer has a right to compel his employees to do? You will notice that that language applies to activities that are heretofore or hereafter engaged in. As to activities heretofore engaged in there can be little question; however, as to what is a custom or practice in a new business will cause difficulty. Bearing in mind the fact there are about 55,000 new employers a year, of course we can foresee difficulty. But custom and practice in that connection means a custom and practice not in violation of the law. Certainly no employer could, for example, compel an employee to get to his place of business an hour before he punches the clock and because he had done that for a while relieve himself of his responsibility to comply with the law by saying, "That is the custom and practice of my business." No court would uphold any arrangement of that sort. Certainly that is work under any of the definitions of the courts and we have to rely on a common-sense interpretation of that language.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Would not the effect of that particular section also make the agents in collective bargaining a little more careful in writing the terms and conditions of their employment?

Mr. WALTER. Of course, it would be notice to the employer and the collective-bargaining representatives of the employees that their contract ought to be very explicit. But I am not thinking of that kind of a situation because where there is a strong labor union certainly the employee is protected against the vicious practices which some of us know about and the kind of practices that were heard described in the testimony adduced at many hearings before various committees of both the House and Senate. No employer can establish as a practice activities for which an employee should be compensated. That would clearly be in violation of the law. As to that language, I am certain that while there may be some confusion for the moment there is not going to be any great difficulty in proving what is de minimus and what is a genuine claim for compensation under the law, and I cannot foresee any employee being imposed upon because of this provision. However, with the 1-year limitation written in the act, there will be a strong temptation on the part of chiselers to take a chance. There is no reason for such a short period of limitation, and I am sure that something more reasonable will be provided before this legislation becomes a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN], a member of the subcommittee considering the bill, 10 minutes.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to amplify the suggestion made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] when he paid a very well-deserved compliment to the able and distinguished chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]. In my opinion, we owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Iowa for the ability and the industry which he has displayed in the matter of this legislation. His masterful presentation of the issue early in this debate is entirely in line with the industry he has displayed throughout the consideration of this matter, and in my opinion his contribution is little less than monumental, and I say this without derogating at all from the credit which is due the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and the other members of the subcommittee and of the full committee. Something has been said in debate, and more will be said, undoubtedly, to the effect that there is danger that we may magnify and overemphasize the issue before us, and I think we ought to make very certain that we do not minimize the urgency of the situation.

The need for the legislation now being considered becomes dramatically apparent from the avalanche of so-called portal-to-portal pay suits which have been filed following the decision of the Supreme Court in the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case in which it was held that certain incidental activities of employees are compensable under the wage-hour law.

These incidental or preliminary activities now declared compensable under the Fair Labor Standards Act are not defined in that law. Everybody, the Congress, the employer, and employee have apparently always assumed that that was something which was to be settled between the employer and employee either by agreement, express or implied, or by custom or practice in the locality or in the industry.

The Mount Clemens decision has opened the flood-gates to an epidemic of suits based upon claims allegedly valid under this new and unexpected formula.

It is estimated that nearly 1,000 companies have been sued and that the claims may be in excess of $6,000,000,000. In some cases claims have been filed for an amount greater than the working capital or net worth of the company. In very many cases if pending suits were upheld, bankruptcy and ruin would be inevitable.

Industry faces a situation little short of chaotic. Credit is impaired and the necessity for preparation for defense of the suits interferes with the normal process of production. If the suits are successful operating capital might be wiped out.

The confusion and uncertainty creates a serious hazard to our economic system which is all the more unfortunate at this particular period of national recovery when full speed ahead in production is so urgently needed throughout every segment of industry and business.

If industry must pay for these dead horses in the shape of back pay that was never contemplated or considered, then with an increase in costs, with no more goods provided, it will mean higher prices and the consumer must in the end pay the bill.

In the light of uncertainty as to what may happen as the result of suits which may be brought, it is certain that we shall see a slowing down of production. Business will naturally cancel plans for expansion and jobs. Thus everybody is affected, the businessman, the investor, the wage earner, the consumer, and the taxpayer.

Also aside from the portal-pay issue, it appears likely that future demands for liquidated damages penalties and other claims which may be made against employers, even though acting in good faith, might equal or even exceed the actual portal-to-portal pay claims because of the retroactive effect of the new ruling.

We face still another economic danger. It seems probable that those concerns which are least likely to weather the storm let loose by the court decision are the smaller and weaker companies. Thus is fostered the possibility of further concentration of economic power in the hands of those few larger and stronger concerns whose greater facilities for procuring extended credit in time of financial stress may enable them to survive.

The Government, and that means the taxpayers, has a tremendous stake in our attempted solution of the problem imposed by this portal-pay issue. I think I can do no better than quote from our report, on page 4:

> The amounts paid by employers having cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts, together with litigation expenses, are all chargeable against the Government. The Comptroller General has so decided. There will also be a loss of revenue through deductions and refunds in taxes.

Cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts in the War Department during the period 1941 to 1946 totaled between forty and forty-five billion dollars. As of February 14, 1947, claims had been asserted under these contracts of about $600,000,000. It was estimated by Under Secretary Kenneth C. Royall at the hearings that the maximum potential liability could go as high as $1,400,000,000.

Attention was also called to the fact that during the period 1941 to 1946 the War Department also awarded approximately $100,000,000,000 in lump-sum contracts. While the Government would not have the same legal liability as attaches in the cost-plus-fixed-fee type of contract, nevertheless there might be a moral obligation, the discharge of which would add another huge amount.

There might also be an additional, although apparently limited loss, in connection with renegotiation proceedings.

As of February 5, 1947, the Maritime Commission had received notification from 18 contractors of the filing of portal-to-portal suits against them. In five of the suits the amount claimed was $128,500,000. The witness for the Commission estimated the additional liability as between $50,000,000 and $150,000,000:

"The greatest potential liability would undoubtedly arise under the ship-construction contracts. To a lesser extent, liability will presumably arise under ship-repair contracts, stevedoring contracts, terminal contracts, and miscellaneous contracts of a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee nature."

The Honorable W. John Kenney, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, pointed out in his statement to the committee the effect of the portal-to-portal pay problem of the Navy Department. He said:

"There are four fields in which the Navy has an interest. First, cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts; second, fixed-price contracts containing provision for escalation in price by reason of increased labor costs; third, terminated fixed-price contracts; and, fourth, renegotiation."

Mr. Kenney estimated a potential liability in cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts of $720,000,000. In the field of fixed-price contracts with escalation clauses he declined to make an estimate but said the liability "will probably be substantial, as the great bulk of contracting done by the Navy Department during the war was on a fixed-price basis, and many contracts contained escalation clauses of this character." In regard to terminated fixed contracts and renegotiation, there was also the possibility of liability but apparently in smaller amounts.

Witnesses for the Government departments called attention to the serious administrative burden placed upon the departments, whether or not these suits are successful, in maintaining such controls and review as is necessary to safeguard the best interests of the Government, and it was admitted before the committee that the expense involved here would be tremendous.

Mr. Chairman, with all this outstanding liability against the Government, with a possibility of millions and millions of dollars having to be paid back in taxes to the companies that have suits filed against them, I think it is safe to say that unless and until this Congress is able to find some solution to this portal-pay threat as it exists today, it is absolutely useless for this Congress even to consider any reduction in income taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield to the able gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. Subsection (f) of section 2, which is at the bottom of page 4 and continues on page 5, disturbs me a little bit. It is provided in that section that—

> Any claim, cause of action, or action may be comprised, adjusted, settled, or released, in whole or in part, either before or after commencing such action by the person entitled to bring such action, and any such compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release according to the terms thereof, and in the absence of fraud or duress, shall be a complete satisfaction of such claim.

In view of what the gentleman has just said, does he believe that the phrase "in the absence of fraud or duress" is sufficient to protect the Government against settlements that might be made? In other words, I can see where an employer and an employee might get together and make a settlement which would contemplate, of course, ultimately that where a contract on a fixed-fee basis had been readjudicated or otherwise compromised, they would go back to the Government for that amount of money. Does the gentleman believe that provision is sufficient to protect the Government in such a case?

Mr. GOODWIN. I think the general observation of the gentleman is absolutely sound. There would be a temptation, and the temptation has already been taken advantage of, to effect these settlements, with the understanding on the part of the employer that the Government will reimburse him for what he has to pay.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Can the gentleman explain to us why the one-year period was determined for the statute of limitations rather than the average throughout the country, which I understand is a longer period of time?

Mr. GOODWIN. Because it appeared to the majority of the committee that that was a reasonable period, considering the unusual subject matter concerned, and that we are legislating here for something entirely apart, in our opinion, from the ordinary run of contracts, and, therefore, the employee should be restricted to that limited period of time if he wants to take advantage of his rights.

There was also this consideration which influenced some of us to some extent. If an employee, and I am not saying that all employees would be of that kind, but there might be some; but if an employee, knowing full well that he would be able to get the benefit of these liquidated damages and penalties and that this right to sue would run over a long period of time, were tempted to withhold the filing of his suit until the period had expired, he could do so in order to get the greatest benefit from it, and in the meantime the employer would have no notice of the claim to be made against him.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman. That information will be very helpful in replying to inquiries concerning that matter.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I arise in support of H. R. 2157, the revised Gwynne bill. Few measures have received more extensive, careful, and sincere consideration than this bill. The members of our Judiciary Committee had no desire except to find a solution that would be just and fair both to employees and employers, and with that high purpose of mind a great deal of time has been given by the members of our committee in hearing witnesses for both sides and also from Federal officials who are familiar with matters of this kind. Our committee was anxious to preserve the rights of the workers and at the same time protect employers from unfair and unjust demands. Let it be said in the outset that this is not a bill in the interest of the chiselers. No one on our committee is interested in that type of employer, and neither are the members of our committee interested in a group of workers making unfounded and unjust claims. We want to protect all from any unfair treatment by chiselers, either employers or workers. We desire to do the right thing and the just thing for workers and employers.

I wish to commend the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor and the editorials in the publication called Labor, spokesman in many respects for the railroad brotherhoods, and also the officers of the railroad brotherhoods, for their condemnation of the avalanche of the so-called portal-to-portal suits aggregating more than $6,000,000,000. Some of these distinguished representatives of labor pointed out that some of these single suits involved tens and tens of millions of dollars, and in the aggregate amounted to billions of dollars, and were without merit, and the filing of this great number of damage suits was most harmful to the cause of labor. The reaction to these suits throughout the country was most unfavorable to the workers.

I wish to point out, however, that practically all of these suits were instituted by the CIO. Many officials and leaders of the A. F. of L. and railroad brotherhoods urged the members of their organizations not to file such actions. These actions sought recovery and damages from their employers for wages under the wage-and-hour law, also for overtime and a like amount for so-called liquidated damages, attorneys' fees, and costs over a period of many years, and some of our courts take the position that the employees would not have to make out their case but the employers were required to make out the case for the plaintiffs. This litigation was precipitated by a decision handed down by the Supreme Court in the case of Anderson against Mount Clemens Pottery Co. The master commissioner of the Federal judge of that court, after hearing the witnesses, arguments, evidence, and so forth, made a report to the judge that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

The judge took a different view and awarded the plaintiffs several thousand dollars. The pottery company took the case to the United States Court of Appeals and this court reversed the decision of the district court. The plaintiff, Mr. Anderson, then appealed to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the Court of Appeals and the case was sent back to the district Federal court for further consideration.

In the month of January 1947, under this ruling of the Supreme Court, more than 1,500 cases were filed, making claims for approximately $6,000,000,000 in wages and damages. The district judge recently retried this case of Anderson against the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. and reached the conclusion that Anderson and his associate workers, plaintiffs in the action, were not entitled to recover any sum. The action of the Supreme Court created consternation among the employers in the country and a lot of unrest among the workers. To meet this situation, many bills were introduced in Congress. Among them was the bill introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] one of the most capable and honorable men as well as one of the very best lawyers in the House.

In the Seventy-ninth Congress and after the Supreme Court's decision in the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] introduced a bill, which passed the House and was also passed in the Senate with some amendments. Due to the adjournment of Congress it was never finally acted upon by the Congress. Many of us believe if that bill had become law we might have avoided this upset in the economic and industrial life of the Nation. We have pointed out that more than 1,500 of these suits were filed in January 1947.

I suggest that my colleagues examine carefully the reason set forth in the bill making necessary this legislation. The bill declares:

That the Congress hereby finds that serious inequities and hardships have resulted and are resulting from the administration and enforcement of the statutes of the United States mentioned in section 5 of this act, thereby creating a serious national emergency, endangering the public welfare, and giving rise to certain evils hereinafter described; that the statutes above referred to, regulating wages, hours of work, and other conditions of employment have been and are being administered and interpreted in disregard of long-established customs, practices, and agreements between employers and employees with the result that:

(1) The retrospective effect of frequent changes and innovations arising in the interpretation and application of such statutes has been and is creating great uncertainty, with new and unexpected financial liabilities upon employers and windfalls of unearned compensation to employees.

(2) Voluntary collective bargaining is being interfered with and industrial disputes are being created.

(3) These new and wholly unexpected liabilities, immense in amount and retroactive in operation, threaten many employers with financial ruin and seriously impair the capital resources of many other employers, thereby resulting in reducing industrial operations, curtailing employment, and the earning power of employees and burdening and obstructing interstate commerce.

(4) The Public Treasury will be deprived of large sums of revenue and the public finances seriously deranged by claims against the Public Treasury for refunds of taxes already paid.

(5) The cost to the Government of goods and services heretofore and hereafter purchased will be unnecessarily increased, * * * stabilization of the currency, and the maintenance of the national credit.

(6) The courts of the country are being burdened with excessive and needless litigation.

We know that these large claims will impair the credit of many concerns. A company's credit may be good for a million or five million but when some group suddenly files a suit demanding twenty, fifty, or one hundred million dollars, claiming wages and liquidating damages, financial institutions furnishing the credit will at once be alarmed. This would not only close down many industrial plants and throw many workers out of work but it would discourage persons from investing their money in job-producing industries and activities. These suits cover contracts carried on over a period of years and during the war. Many of these contracts were cost-plus, cost-plus-a-fee contracts. Settlements were made with the contractors from month to month on the money paid out by them. If these claims should be allowed, these contractors could come back on the Government, and Government officials indicate that these suits mean a potential liability to the amount of one billion and four hundred million. Early in February 1947, the Maritime Commission had received notification from 18 contractors of the filing of portal-to-portal suits against them claiming $128,500,000 damage. This Commission states that this would involve an additional liability on the Government for refund to the contractors of fifty million to one hundred fifty million. Of course, the employers had settled with the Government for their taxes on the basis of the amount that they had paid out for wages and so forth.

If the claimants should be successful in these suits, representing billions and billions of dollars, the contractors could come back on the Government for a refund of taxes. This would mean, of course that our national debt would likely be increased and there could be little hope of balancing the budget or reducing the income taxes for the workers as well as the employers.

It can be seen at once that this is not merely a matter of concern between the workers and the employers, but the people of the Nation as a whole, workers and all, are vitally and deeply concerned.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case is a heavy blow at collective bargaining. The company and the pottery workers had a collective-bargaining contract freely entered into and which was accepted by both sides as to wages, working conditions, and so forth, and the workers and employer had been operating under that contract. The Supreme Court ignored this collective-bargaining agreement and authorized the recovery over and above the contract. Such action had never been contemplated by the parties to the contract.

The workers, as I well known, were first given the right under the law to bargain collectively when the railroads were returned to their owners after World War I. I helped to pass that law. In nearly all of these actions involving billions and billions of dollars, the workers and the employers had collective-bargaining agreements but these suits ignore these collective-bargaining contracts and are demanding additional billions of dollars. If these collective-bargaining contracts are not to be observed by the parties to them and one side or the other rises up many years after they have been entered into and makes claims that were not included in or contemplated by either party to the contract, then we might as well wipe out our collective-bargaining statutes.

We have always beer told that the right to organize and bargain collectively is a part of the great charter of American labor, but the Supreme Court, in the Mount Clemens Pottery case, disregarded these contracts. Many of these collective-bargaining agreements contain the so-called portal-to-portal pay provisions. The United Mine Workers have such a provision in their contract and many other industries. This bill does not take away the right of the workers and employers to bargain collectively on portal-to-portal pay, the hourly rate of pay, and overtime. This bill reiterates and preserves the minimum-wage law, time and a half time for overtime, and the right to sue for liquidated damages. It takes away no right that the workers now have under the wage-and-hour law, the Bacon-Davis Act, or the Walsh-Healey Act.

This measure denies to workers the right to recover provided the employer has paid the employees the amount agreed upon by collective-bargaining contract, or the amount agreed upon by implied contract or in accordance with custom and practice, where there is no express or implied contract. In other words, if the employer has paid his employees according to the collective-bargaining agreement, or according to an implied agreement, understood between the parties, or without such express or implied contract, according to the custom and practice in that plant and other plants, and in that particular industry and section, he could not be required to pay a greater sum; but, of course, it is expressly stated in this bill that he cannot, by agreement or otherwise, pay less than the statutory minimum wage or less than one and one-half the basic hourly rate for overtime.

It can be seen here at once that the express provisions of the wage-and-hour law, as to minimum wages and overtime, are reaffirmed and continued. Is there any good reason why the employees and employers should not enter into a contract through their bargaining agents, or if the shop or plant is not organized, for each individual to understand fully what he is to receive and what work he is to do and when his worktime begins and ends? But, the employer cannot enter into any agreement in violation of the wage-and-hour law.

The purpose of this bill is to eliminate trumped-up claims that are not included in agreement between the parties express or implied or are contrary to the customs and practices when the employee rendered his service in the particular plant if there is no agreement express or implied. The wage-and-hour law as to minimum wages and as to overtime, remains intact. Congress is trying to eliminate these billions of dollars worth of unconscionable and inequitable claims. It does not cut out just and honest claims for wages or liquidated damages.

EMPLOYER NOT LIABLE

This measure relieves the employer of being mulcted in damages where he has followed and relied upon a decision of a court of record in a case in which he is a party defendant or if he has obeyed in good faith regulations, orders, rules, interpretations, approved enforcement policy or practice of the Administrator and his authorized deputies or Executive orders of the President or other executive officers of the Government in carrying out the provisions of the wage-and-hour law, but in this regard he cannot escape liability if he has not paid the minimum wages or paid for time and one-half overtime as provided by the wage-and-hour law. It would be unfair to permit liquidated damage against employers who followed the orders and the judgments of the courts and the orders and directives of those who administer the wage-and-hour law, the directives of the President and the other executive agents and departments of the Government.

Of course, under this act the employer must pay according to his collective-bargaining agreements with the workers or according to the implied agreement between him and his workers, and if there is no such agreement then according to the customs and practices at the time the services were rendered. It can be seen at once on every hand the rights of the workers under the wage-and-hour law are protected.

This bill also gives the worker and his employer the right to compromise, adjust and settle any claim that the worker may have against his employer, and such compromise or settlement shall be binding in the absence of fraud or duress. Under the present law it has been held that the employer and the worker cannot settle or compromise any dispute as to wages and so forth.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES

Under the present law the worker has the right to sue for back wages, including wages for overtime and attorneys' fees, and for liquidated damages, and under the present law the courts are compelled to award to him liquidated damages for a sum equal to the amount of wages recovered.

In the case of Missel v. Overnight Transportation Co. (316 U. S. 572), the Supreme Court expressed regret that the imposition of the full amount of liquidated damages under the Fair Labor Standards Act was mandatory in any case.

This bill does make some changes in that respect. Where the court should find that the employer is liable for back wages, the court must award damages, but he is given discretion as to the amount of damages, not to exceed a sum equal to the award for wages. This is put in the bill as a matter of equity and fair dealing between man and man. There are some chiseling employers. No doubt, a court in dealing with that type of defendant, can and will award to the worker the maximum amount, which is the same as is now provided in the present law. On the other hand, the failure to pay to the employee the full amount of wages may be due to mistake and an honest misunderstanding on the part of the employer. In such a case, the court could award in liquidated damages a less amount than 100 percent. In nearly all of our laws we recognize that there is a difference in degree of culpability or responsibility in civil and criminal cases and Federal courts are given discretion to fix the punishment or amounts according to the degree of culpability as shown by the evidence. Granting discretion in this measure follows the general principle of all Federal statutes. In some cases no doubt 100 percent would be just and proper, while in others a less amount would be in keeping with common sense and justice.

EIGHTEEN MONTHS' LIMITATION

It has been pointed out that there is quite a difference in the limitation of time for the filing of actions in the various States of the Union. Many of these have a limitation of 1 year, others more than a year, for collecting wages or other debts; but we must bear in mind that where a longer period of limitation is fixed in these State actions to recover wages, there is not this extraordinary remedy to collect additional sums as liquidated damages or punishment. This is an extraordinary remedy, and the parties ought to be required to appear in court within a reasonable time while witnesses are available and their evidence can be had. It is quite a different thing to be sued for wages or other debts with no liquidated penalty attached and sued to recover for not only the wages but for an additional sum as liquidated damages as punishment and also attorneys' fees and costs.

I worked in the shops and mills and other places by the hour and by the day, and I never had any trouble of knowing whether or not my employer owed me. They paid every 2 weeks, and when any of my associate workers on pay day believed they were paid less than due them there were squawks about it, and they set about to correct whatever error had been made. I cannot understand why it should be claimed that a worker could not find out for several years that somebody owed him back wages. While the limitation is 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, yet as a matter of fact it is 18 months. This bill provides that the worker shall have an additional 6 months from the date this measure becomes effective to file his action, provided not more than a year had elapsed before the effective date of this act. In other words, the worker will have 18 months, and not 12 months, on all the claims arising at the time of the effective date of this act.

The chief opponent of this limitation stated that he had no complaint as to the causes of action heretofore accrued. He seems to be worried about the future. I am quite sure that workers in the future will be alert as to the amount of wages that may be due them and will know within a year after they become due and payable.

We are now engaged in general debate. The bill will be read word for word, and full opportunity will be afforded to offer amendments; and while the Judiciary Committee has worked long and hard on this bill, we do not claim to be infallible. We are trying to meet this situation with a measure that will be just and fair to sincere workers and employers, and that will stop chiselers whether they be employers or workers.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may use.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, in explanation as to how the House Committee on the Judiciary acquired jurisdiction of the bill now before the House, H. R. 2157, I will state that such jurisdiction is acquired by our committee by reason of the fact that the substance thereof relates to the courts. Of course, the House Committee on Education and Labor normally has jurisdiction of proposed laws with reference to labor.

It is generally conceded throughout the country that in view of the confusion which has arisen as evidenced by the number of portal-to-portal-pay suits. that the law should be clarified. The opening paragraph of the pending bill clearly states the condition which now obtains:

That (a) the Congress hereby finds that serious inequities and hardships have resulted and are resulting from the administration and enforcement of the statutes of the United States mentioned in section 5 of this act, thereby creating a serious national emergency, endangering the public welfare, and giving rise to certain evils hereinafter described; that the statutes above referred to, regulating wages, hours of work, and other conditions of employment, have been and are being administered and interpreted in disregard of long-established customs, practices, and agreements between employers and employees with the result that (1) the retrospective effect of frequent changes and innovations arising in the interpretation and application of such statutes has been and is creating great uncertainty, with new and unexpected financial liabilities upon employers and windfalls of unearned compensation to employees; (2) voluntary collective bargaining is being interfered with and industrial disputes are being created; (3) these new and wholly unexpected liabilities, immense in amount and retroactive in operation, threaten many employers with financial ruin and seriously impair the capital resources of many other employers, thereby resulting in reducing industrial operations, curtailing employment, and the earning power of employees and burdening and obstructing interstate commerce; (4) the Public Treasury will be deprived of large sums of revenue and the public finances seriously deranged by claims against the Public Treasury for refunds of taxes already paid; (5) the cost to the Government of goods and services heretofore and hereafter purchased will be unnecessarily increased, thereby causing serious interference with the development of sound fiscal policies, the stabilization of the currency, and the maintenance of the national credit; and (6) the courts of the country are being burdened with excessive and needless litigation.

The many so-called portal-to-portal suits have turned into a giant snowball, gaining size and momentum as it rolls along, to threaten not only the financial structure of many small and large industrial plants and thereby cause unemployment and labor unrest and confusion, but also to place a burden on the taxpayers who must carry a great portion of the load by the refund of taxes by the Government, which the Treasury Department has said must be done in many cases.

It is indeed unfortunate that such a piece of legislation must be contemplated. But in fairness to all concerned, including, of course, the millions of workers in industry, something must be done to stave off this crisis.

As the representative of a great industrial area, I am happy to say that to my knowledge no portal-to-portal cases have been filed in my district. The workers in the textile plants of South Carolina have a high sense of responsibility and an inate regard for justice. They do not search for legal loopholes whereby they may throw their employers into bankruptcy. There are no sweatshops in my district, and consequently there has been a bare minimum of labor-management strife, even when the Nation as a whole was wracked by industrial confusion and strikes.

The need for legislation to forestall the economic catastrophe that would certainly result if the many portal-to-portal suits are permitted to continue until final judicial determination is not a moot question; a national calamity is impending. This is no less true now than before the district court, to which the Supreme Court remanded the case, found that the compensatory time claimed in the action was within the deminimis doctrine, for the uncertainty of the employer as to his potential liability for portal-to-portal pay, and so forth, still persists.

The cause of this drastic action stems from the unfortunate fact that the Supreme Court has dared give a definition of the term "work" and other terms which the Congress deliberately refused to define when writing the laws under which these portal-to-portal cases have been filed. Those definitions were left to agreement between workers and employers. The Court established the means whereby millions of employees would be allowed to receive pay for which they had neither bargained nor expected to receive.

It is significant that following the Mount Clemens case, thousands of suits began flooding into the courts throughout the Nation. If prior to that decision it was generally believed by the labor organizations that workers were entitled to receive compensation for portal-to-portal time and other related activities, then why had these cases not come into the courts long before? It is my observation that labor organizations have never been reluctant to file suits against employers whenever it was believed they had the slightest legitimate claim under the law. Why were these portal-to-portal cases not filed before the Mount Clemens decision of the Supreme Court? It appears that the Court in that case usurped the power of Congress and wrote into the law certain considerations which Congress itself had deliberately omitted.

The subsequent effect of this legislation written by the Supreme Court is illustrated in a letter written to members of the Textile Workers Union of America in Georgia by one of the union officials, in which he said:

> The United States Supreme Court has ruled that you are entitled to be paid for all the time you spent in the plant, either before beginning your regular shift or after your regular shift ends.

You will notice that this union official said that a decision of the United States Supreme Court, not an act of Congress, authorized this extra pay for time not spent at work.

Between July 1, 1946, and January 31, 1947, there were 1,913 portal-to-portal suits filed in the United States district courts; of these suits there were 1,515 claiming a definite total of $5,785,204,606, while 398 did not claim a definite amount, but if they were proportional in amount to those making definite claims, they would add approximately $1,446,301,152 to the outstanding claims for portal-to-portal pay. In addition, it is to be remembered that there may be many similar suits pending in the State courts, but I have not been able at this time to determine definitely the number of such suits nor the approximate amount claimed.

The recovery of this enormous sum would create a serious Nation-wide emergency, endangering the public welfare, in that it would bankrupt or close many businesses, and may even permanently cripple or destroy whole industries. An instance which would lead to bankruptcy was cited by Frank L. Dirver, of the Dirver-Harris Co., to the House Judiciary Committee when he testified that his company is involved in a suit with the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, covering alleged overtime wages and damages of $4,000,000. This amount, he asserted, is more than the net worth of the company, and, if finally levied, would bankrupt the company. The closing of a business was cited by Frederick H. Waterhouse, general counsel of the Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut, Inc., when he declared before the Senate Judiciary Committee that one company with 65 employees in his State had been closed down by a portal-to-portal suit for $65,000. The possible destruction of an industry was clearly indicated by Mr. E. E. Wilson, chairman of the board of the Aircraft Industries Association of America, Inc., when he testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that the aircraft industry would inevitably succumb if the disaster threatened by portal-to-portal suits materializes.

It is neither hysteria nor organized propaganda that supports the demand for legislation to prevent these portal-to-portal suits, but it is the inherent and undeniable sense of fair play characteristic, thank God, of the vast majority of the citizens of our great country. In this majority there will be found many millions of laborers whose sense of justice balks at such an attempt to reap a windfall of unearned compensation. They realize and readily admit that their contracts and agreements with their employers did not contemplate payment for such inconsequential fragments of time as are the basis of most of the portal-to-portal suits which have been filed so far.

The bill before us is not denying the laborer his just wage.

It is not discernible from the wording, nay, it is not even conceivable to a rational imagination that the Fair Labor Standards Act requires an employer to pay, or entitles an employee to receive, the wages demanded in the many fantastic claims filed. For example, Fred Davis, treasurer of the Potash Co. of Americ cited the suit against his company in which pay is demanded for a 21-mile bus ride in a public carrier from the workers' homes to the mines, for cleaning up time, and for walking time.

This bill is applicable to every claim, cause of action, and action for the recovery of wages, overtime compensation, penaties, or damages—actual, liquidated, or compensatory—pursuant to the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1011); the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036, the Walsh-Healey Act); and the act of June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1060, the Fair Labor Standards Act). The bill requires that all actions predicated upon the foregoing acts for the foregoing reasons shall be brought within 1 year after the cause of action accrues but requires that all actions accrued upon the date of approval of this bill shall be brought within 6 months. This provision, I think, is constitutional, for all that is required in such cases is that a reasonable time be allowed in which to bring suit. See Mills v. Scott (99 U. S. 25); Vance v. Vance (108 U. S. 514); Wilson v. Isminger (185 U. S. 55); Atchafalaya Land Co. v. F. B. Williams Cypress Co. (250 U. S. 190).

The act, in addition to placing a limitation upon these causes of action, permits a defense of good faith when consistent with or in reliance upon a court decision or an administrative order or regulation. Certainly this provision is not unreasonable nor inconsistent with justice.

The bill allows the compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release of liquidated damages. This is in accordance with the usual procedure and is felt necessary because of a previous ruling of the Supreme Court in the case of the Brooklyn Savings Bank v. O'Neil (325 U. S. 697).

In favor of labor this bill permits courts to award penalties or damages upon proof of bad faith on the part of an employer with respect to wages claimed under these acts.

On the other hand the employer is protected under the bill by a prohibition against recovery of wages for activities which were not required to be paid for by custom or practice of such employer or by express agreement between the employer and the employee or his collective-bargaining representative.

To accomplish these purposes the bill denies jurisdiction to Federal to other courts except in conformity with the foregoing provision.

Manifestly all of the provisions of the bill are not totally acceptable to all the Members of the House. It must be acknowledged that the subcommittee on which I served as a member of the Judiciary Committee, has carefully considered all the testimony and the present bill is a fair compromise of all the views expressed.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN].

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, there are many objectionable features in this bill, but I will devote my remarks at this time to the statute of limitations, the 1-year limitation in the bill.

I can conceive of no greater incentive to violate the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act than that offered under this bill. Here is a bill that would practically wipe that law from the statute books. It would expunge that law by extracting its teeth, leaving its minimum wage, overtime compensation, and child-labor standards mere pious declarations, to be flouted at will by unfair and unscrupulous employers.

I am referring to section 2 (a) of this bill, which curtails the rights of employees to sue for back wages under the Fair Labor Standards Act. This section provides that no action shall be maintained unless the same is commenced within 1 year after such cause of action accrued. There are other rights that are abridged under this bill, but I want to direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to this section which limits a worker's right to collect back wages illegally withheld from him—wages that are rightfully his—to a period of 1 year. His grocer, his butcher, the small-loan company from whom he borrowed money, the automobile finance company can sue him for a period of from 3 to 6 years on his debts. But his rights on a debt of his employer—on money he earned which has been proved to be due him—would be limited to but 1 year under this bill.

Let us look at the facts. The Wage and Hour Division, in its annual report for 1946, states that there are currently about 550,000 establishments with employees subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act. During 1946 the Division inspected 42,000 of these establishments. At that rate of inspection—and let me say that the Division did a pretty good job in enforcing the act—at that rate it seems virtually certain that an employer can illegally withhold money from an employee for more than a year before the Division finds it out.

I have heard it mentioned here that the wage-and-hour law is pretty much self-enforcing — that section 16 (b), which gives employees the right to sue, takes care of enforcement. I wish it were true, but it just is not so. The annual report of the Division states that employee's suits have been instituted in only a small percentage of cases in which substantial violations were found. In fact, not only do few workers sue their employers but only 14 percent of the inspections made were made as a result of complaints. Only about 6,000 workers of about 20,000,000 covered by the act filed complaints against their employers. It is evident that employees are slow to sue for their back wages, even slow to file complaints. Either they are afraid to sue or file a complaint or they do not know their rights under the law. This is particularly true of the workers who do not belong to a union, and about half of the workers covered by the wage-and-hour law do not belong to unions.

These figures, representing employee suits and complaints, do not mean that the rest of the employers were complying with the act. I will quote you a few more figures from the Division's report. Half of the 42,000 establishments inspected in 1946 were in violation of major provisions of the act, 36 percent in substantial violation. In that 1 year, the Division found over $21,000,000 due as back wages owed to 365,000 employees. This was a year of generally high wages and high profits, yet 11 percent of the establishments inspected were in violation of the minimum-wage provisions of the act.

These figures indicate clearly that dependence cannot be placed on the worker to enforce the act, that in thousands of establishments there are violations which employees—through lack of knowledge of the law, through weakness or fear—do not bring to light. And every violation, Mr. Chairman, means that the law-abiding employer is put at a competitive disadvantage. Regardless of whether the violation is intentional or not, the competitors of the violator must operate at a disadvantage.

I do not wish to seem to imply, from the statistics I have quoted, that half the employers in the country are violating the Wage and Hour Act. The Division states that it inspects where a need for enforcement is indicated, and perhaps a measure of its success in this endeavor is the high ratio of violations found. I do want to make this clear—it is not the employer who complies with the act that is our chief concern, it is the chiseler, the corner-cutter, and the downright unscrupulous who need our attention. It is this small percentage of employers who drag down our business standards and make it harder for the overwhelming majority of our American businessmen to compete on a decent basis. These are the men for whom we need a Fair Labor Standards Act—let me call it a Fair Labor Competition Act—and these are the men we should keep in mind in voting on this bill. With this kind of employer, a 1-year statute of limitations is utterly and totally inadequate unless we are prepared to greatly enlarge the Division's enforcement staff.

The 1 year given an employee to sue for his back wages, it is evident, must be looked at realistically. The typical worker does not institute suit against his employer—he waits for the Division to do so. Where violations are involved, the Division has found that about 4 months are required to complete the inspection. There may be several more months involved in attempting to get the employer to come into compliance and pay the back wages rightfully due his employees. If he refuses, another 2 months are required to prepare the case for court action after the employee is informed of his rights. And this is the case where violations are promptly brought to light. In the great majority of cases claims will be barred under this bill even before they are ever brought to light.

Mr. Chairman, you can see what a 1-year statute of limitations means to the law-abiding businessman. He gains nothing by it, he plays fair. His competitors who operate unstable concerns, who have a great temptation to cut wage costs, can chisel and undercut him with practically no penalty to them. The wage-and-hour law would remain on the books, but it would be an empty and meaningless law. In the period into which American economic life is entering, a highly competitive period where businessmen must struggle to reduce costs and lower prices, we need a Fair Labor Standards Act that has teeth in it.

I urge the Members of this House to recommit this bill, so that we can have an equitable bill brought before us.

I understand my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr CELLER] will introduce an amendment tomorrow to raise the statute of limitations to 2 years. I hope that the Members will see fit, in their wisdom, to vote for it.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. My colleague the gentleman from New York, as well as our other colleague from New York, contends that in judging the significance of the merits of the proposed 1-year statute you may judge it by analogy to the long list of statutes of limitation applicable to all other sorts of suits and claims.

Mr. KLEIN. That is correct.

Mr. COUDERT. Does the gentleman completely ignore the profound and vast difference between this kind of a claim and the ordinary contract claim where the amount sued for was fixed and final at the time the debt was originally contracted, and could only increase through the years by the amount of interest for failure to pay, whereas in this case are we not dealing with a claim that is unknown to begin with, unascertainable in fact, constantly increasing and contingent, so that the employer in the case is entitled to have his liabilities either disposed of or fixed at an early date so that he will not run the risk of being confronted by numerous unknown and unascertainable liabilities.

Mr. KLEIN. My colleague from New York is too good a lawyer to use that kind of argument. There are many, many cases, and I am sure he knows of them, where suit can be brought for a claim, the amount of which was not ascertainable at the time it accrued or that the debt came into existence. Certainly he will not deny that in our State, particularly, we have a 6-year statute of limitations for debts of this kind. I cannot see that it makes much difference what kind of a suit is brought; whether it is for an ascertainable amount, or whether it is on contract. If a debt is actually due, then the creditor should have the right to bring suit within a specified period. I do not believe, however, that he should be limited to so short a period as this.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, my particular interest in this bill is in its relation to the wage-and-hour law.

I have asked for this time in order to comment on certain aspects of this legislation which I believe may be lost sight of because of the emphasis on portal-to-portal issues dealt with in H. R. 2157. I believe that the public and this Congress have an interest in these aspects of the legislation which is at least equal to the interest of management and labor.

I refer to the interest which the entire Nation has in maintaining a national uniform floor under wages which will protect the minimum living standards of the millions of unorganized American wage earners and which will protect the ethical American employer against the unfair competition of those relatively few employers who would again under this bill be able to obtain a competitive advantage at the expense of their employees' wages and living conditions. Section 3 of the pending bill in effect defines work for purposes of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Davis-Bacon Act of 1935, and the Walsh-Healey Act of 1936, as those activities for which each employer pays, according to the custom or practice or agreement in effect at the time in his plant. What does this mean? It means, in my opinion, an opportunity for complete destruction of the national minimum-wage standards established in the Fair Labor Standards Act. Such a definition leaves unorganized workers at the mercy of their employers. Whatever work their employers choose to pay for will, under the provisions of section 3 of this bill, become the compensable worktime under the law, since the employer's payment will establish the custom or practice or employment agreement for his plant.

In the nature of things, such practices will vary from plant to plant, industry to industry, and area to area. Thus, instead of a uniform floor under wages for the entire country, we shall find ourselves with a multitudinous series of levels. As a matter of fact, the floor need not even remain constant at the same plant since the employer can, under the language of the bill, change his custom and practice from pay period to pay period. I am afraid that the legislation, if enacted, may as effectively cut the heart out of the minimum-wage and overtime provisions of the wage-and-hour law, as well as the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and Davis-Bacon Act, as would a bill permitting each employer to decide for himself whether to pay 20 cents an hour, or 30 cents an hour, or 40 cents an hour. For if an employer paying 40 cents an hour can work his employees 10 hours a day and pay them only for 8 hours, he is in the same position as if he were permitted to pay them only 32 cents an hour for 10 hours of work. Thus, an employer whose practice is not to pay for such make-ready work as obtaining and cleaning tools, preparing machines, and putting on required safety equipment will, under this bill, receive a substantial competitive advantage over the more modern and enlightened employer whose custom is to pay for such work. It is easy to foresee that in a short time the employers with the antiquated and unfair practices will force down the standards of their more modern and ethical competitors.

There are other important aspects of the legislation: a 1-year statute of limitations, provision for compromises of claims in the future, the establishment of a good-faith defense to new suits, and the nullification of the effectiveness of future employee actions, all of which I shall attempt to analyze.

The so-called portal-to-portal bill prepared by the Judiciary Committee may have started out as a bill to solve the problem of retroactive liability arising out of claims for portal-to-portal pay made after the Supreme Court decision in the Mount Clemens Pottery case. The bill, in fact, goes far beyond the portal-to-portal pay question and constitutes instead a full-scale attack on the very foundations of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the other acts to which it applies. It alters basic provisions of the act, cancels fundamental rights under it, and thwarts its objectives. Even that part of the bill which seems most nearly pertinent to the portal-to-portal question is far too sweeping in its reach and far too drastic in its remedies.

I realize that a great deal of excitement and public emotion have been generated by the wide publicity given to the portal-to-portal pay suits. There is grave danger that the good work and the hard work of many years in the establishing of fair labor standards for American industry will be undone if the undiscriminating emotionalism with which the phrase "portal to portal" seems to be charged is permitted to carry along this bill to enactment. Every part of this bill should be given the most careful scrutiny, so that the full meaning of its unjustifiable and insupportable provisions may be made clear.

As I have pointed out, the bill applies to the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Public Contracts Act, and the Davis-Bacon Act. Section 1 is a long description of the uncertainties in industry, losses of revenue by the Government, and other aspects of enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, all of which together are represented as tending to burden and obstruct the flow of commerce. The presumptive purpose of this section is to give the amending bill the status of having a purpose lying in the same general field as the Fair Labor Standards Act itself, and to secure the advantages of its construction by the courts as a remedial statute.

The statement is made in section 1 that these laws "have been and are being administered and interpreted in disregard of long-established customs, practices, and agreements between employers and employees," with results that are described as threatening the entire fabric of the American economy and jeopardizing the functioning of the Government. This is an astonishing assertion. If the Congress which enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 had not intended antisocial practices of certain types of employers in dealing with their employees to be replaced by minimum fair labor standards, that Congress would not have passed the law. As to the final interpretation of the law, under the Constitution of the United States that function rests with the courts. Certainly, in matters which the Administrator was given authority to issue regulations, he has exercised the utmost care and judgment in ascertaining the full facts of the industrial operations and the employer-employee relationships involved. Interested parties have been heard in full statements of their views. Decisions in such matters were made, giving the greatest possible weight to the need for avoiding disruption of industry, consonant with the basic objectives of the law. The right to petition for hearing and for review of administrative acts has been held open.

Some remarks are in order, also, on the extent of the calamity described in section 1 as hanging over the Nation. The portal-to-portal pay claims have been grossly exaggerated. This scarcely needs elaboration, in view of Judge Picard's recent decision, dismissing the claims in the Mount Clemens Pottery case. Perhaps the vast effects so vaguely and terrifyingly set forth in section 1 are an indirect admission of the obvious fact that this bill goes very far beyond the portal-to-portal question.

The content of the substantive sections of the bill are given here in brief summaries, to provide a quick view of its tenor and scope. Comments on each of the major provisions follow.

Section 2 (a): One-year statute of limitations.

Section 2 (b): Six-month savings clause. This does not appear to apply to actions covered under section 3, below.

Section 2 (c): Individual claimants must be named in the action.

Section 2 (d): Time lost in serving process because the person liable is outside the United States is disregarded in computing the applicable period of limitations.

Section 2 (e): Employer's defense in pending or subsequent actions: good faith, consistent with or in reliance on any decision of a court in connection with which such employer was a party in interest, or any administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, enforcement policy, or practice.

Section 2 (f): Compromise or waiving of claims. Any and all claims that have arisen under the acts or that will hereafter arise under the acts may be compromised or waived at any time and under any circumstances. The provisions of the subsection are also applicable to settlements previously made.

Section 2 (g): Damages. The Court may award not more than the amount specified under the law as penalty or damages, in its discretion, if the violation was "in bad faith and without reasonable grounds."

Section 3: No action may be maintained for payment for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in not specifically required to be paid for either by plant custom or practice or by express agreement.

Section 4: The provisions of the bill are applied to future and pending actions, including actions in which final judgment has already been entered but from which an appeal can still be taken.

Section 5: The bill applies to all actions under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Public Contracts Act, and the Davis-Bacon Act:

Any parts of said acts inconsistent with any provisions of this act are to such extent hereby repealed.

Section 6: Separability of provisions.

SECTION 2

The sweeping provisions of section 2 go far beyond the portal-to-portal problem, and strike at the foundations of the enforcement of the act. The 1-year statute, the good-faith defense, the compromising or waiving of claims, and the bad faith and without reasonable grounds barrier to the imposition of liquidated damages in any court action actually concluded are basic changes in the whole structure of administration and enforcement of the act. The 1-year statute and some parts of the good-faith provision would require several times the Division's present staff in administrative employees as well as in enforcement employees in order to leave some hope of maintaining even the present dangerously low level of enforcement activity. Other parts of these broad provisions are so elusive and disruptive as to preclude any expectation of equitable law enforcement if this bill is enacted.

SECTION 2 (A)

The 1-year statute of limitations would virtually nullify the rights of hundreds of thousands of employees to the wages legally due them under the acts even if this were the only change proposed. Many employees do not know of their rights under the FLSA, for example, until after the Divisions have made an inspection. The disclosure of violations on inspection results in the employees' finding out that money is due them. By the time the inspection case is closed an employer of the type that is intent on evading the act may cancel claims of the employees by coming into temporary compliance. The provisions of the acts would thus be ineffective both as measures to compensate employees for the loss of wages legally due, and as measures to discourage the unscrupulous type of employer from violating the law. With a 1-year statute and an enforcement staff that can inspect only one-twelfth of all establishments with covered employees in a year, an employer seeking an unfair advantage over his law-abiding competitors at the expense of his own employees can do so almost with impunity.

It is obvious that employers voluntarily maintaining fair-labor standards would be subject to severe competition. Employees in low-standard establishments would fail to secure the protection of minimum standards established in the act. No doubt the millions of unorganized workers engaged in covered activities would feel this blow first, but the competitive inequities thus created would soon spread to all covered employment. The whole purpose of the act would be thwarted.

SECTION 2 (C)

The added requirement that each employee must be named in the action merely tightens the stricture of the 1-year statute. In almost every inspection case disclosing violations it is found that there are many former employees to whom back wages are due. If the Divisions have made an inspection, the Divisions might succeed in locating former employees to tell them what their rights are, but the time lost in finding them would mean a further whittling away of their just claim for reimbursement. In the ordinary case such former employees would lose out altogether.

SECTION 2 (E)

The good-faith defense would on its own account be as disastrous to equitable enforcement of the law as the 1-year statute of limitations. The provision deals with action consistent with, required by, or in reliance upon administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, enforcement policy, or practice. In its context in the proposed bill this provision merely adds confusion to a situation already hopelessly chaotic. Even if it stood by itself, however, it would seriously undermine enforcement. The inclusion of interpretation, enforcement policy, and practice as defenses against action for recovery would greatly burden the administration of the act. Inspection activity would be bogged down under the necessity for extreme thoroughness, with no possibility for oversight or omission and little or no room for on-the-spot judgment of the inspector.

This would follow from the fact that any action or decision by an inspector could be considered an administrative enforcement policy or an administrative practice. Detailed searching to make sure there is no minor error or omission would ordinarily not be worth while in terms of securing the maximum compliance with limited personnel. Under the proposed bill, few errors or omissions could be considered minor. The failure to check through on such a matter in a single inspection might result in noncompliance over a wide area if the word were spread that a new practice was available for use in court defense. Inspection time on a case would thus be greatly lengthened and the large increase in the inspection staff would be necessitated. Along with this would be the need for careful and detailed review of each inspection case before closing in place of the currently used, and far more efficient, spot-check postreview. Reviewers would call upon the national office for detailed analyses in advance of closing cases involving difficult questions and decisions that could be interpreted in varying ways under other circumstances.

These provisions of the proposed bill are worlds apart from a clean-cut grant of the rule-making power. Under the rule-making power, all pertinent evidence is analyzed, interested parties are heard, and expert judgment applied to any of the major problems arising in the administration of the law. The aim is to clarify the rights and obligations of parties subject to the law and to achieve a reasonable balance between the needs of uniformity in law enforcement and of a reasonable flexibility in the application of general rules to complex and varying situations.

Whatever the purpose of the provisions of section 2 (e), the results are very different from those to be achieved under a rule-making power. Thousands of employers would argue before thousands of judges as to the meaning of a "practice," and as to whether their own action was consistent with a given decision or practice or "in reliance" on it. Economic situations are complex and changing. The situations differ, and so do opinions about them. Assuming "good faith" on the part of all concerned, the result would still be chaos.

SECTION 2 (F)

Section 2 (f) provides for the settling, in whole or in part, of any claim arising under the acts. The provision also applies retroactively to any settlement previously made. There are no safeguards in this provision against unfair settlements. There is no requirement, for example, for administrative or court review or approval. In addition to weakening the employee's rights to liquidated damages and even back pay under the FLSA, for which compromise might reasonably be permitted in certain situations and with proper safeguards, it permits compromise settlements of employees' rights to the basic wage guarantees in the act.

This provision would apply not only to the past but to the future. It would result in a very uneven application of the act, since each employer's liability would vary with his ability to "drive a bargain" with his employees. Workers in unorganized low-wage industries would be likely to settle claims on an individual basis and would thus get a relatively smaller share of the wages and damages due them. Even if the waivers or compromises are limited to disputes on hours worked and on rates of pay in excess of the minimum, the basic minimum wage would still be seriously endangered. Hours actually spent on the employee's work might be traded away in a compromise by an employee getting the bare minimum for the hours for which he has been compensated. The result would be the granting of full legal sanctions to what is in fact a violation of the statutory minimum wage.

The result of this unlimited permission to waive or compromise basic rights under the act would be the wholesale cancellation of wages due. The authorization to make settlements would apply not only to past liabilities but to future liabilities as well.

This sweeping authorization for employers to compromise or arrange the waiver of any and all claims under the act violates a fundamental principle of labor legislation. Traditionally, and uniformly, labor legislation has outlawed the compromising or waiving of the wage earner's claims for pay due him under the law. This has always been recognized as a basic protection of the individual employee and of the complying employer. Without it there is gross inequality in the benefits actually received by individual employees who are within the scope of the law and who are equally affected by its terms. Without it the law applies unequally to competing employers who are intended to comply with uniform minimum standards.

Here, again, the bill proposes an answer that is all out of proportion to the problem in hand. The problem of uncertainty under the law is raised and the solution proposed is to nullify the law, not only for the area of uncertainty but over much wider areas; not only for the past but for the future. This is done in spite of the availability of a clear remedy for uncertainty in the future. The rule-making power, with whatever guides and boundaries the Congress chooses to set upon it, is the obvious answer, for the future, to the problem of uncertainty. This is the answer that would not whittle away basic substantive provisions of the act but would apply directly to the problem of uncertainty. This is the answer of those who do not seek to undermine the substance and purpose of the act but who truly seek to improve its administration.

The final subsection of section 2 rules out liquidated damages unless the court finds that the violation was in bad faith and without reasonable grounds. Where the court makes such a finding it may in its discretion award damages not to exceed the maximum now provided in the act. The extremely broad definition of good faith provided in section 2 (e) would put an almost insurmountable barrier in the way of an award of liquidated damages. It appears to be intended to make this even more difficult by adding "and without reasonable grounds." Such a provision would encourage the unscrupulous employer to find some plausible pretext for underpaying an employee. After the long delays and hardship of litigation, the employee would still be most likely to receive only the sum to which he was entitled in the first place. There is thus no incentive for this type of employer to pay what the law requires. Operations of such employers constitute the type of competition in labor standards that the law was designed to prevent.

The individual employee would have to go through the difficulty of court action in order to recover the wages he should have been paid currently. He is in no way reimbursed for the delay. Unorganized employees are the most likely to suffer this loss.

This section provides that no action may be maintained against an employer to the extent that such action is based upon nonpayment for activities which at the time of the nonpayment were not specifically required to be paid for by custom or practice of the individual employer at the individual employee's place of employment, or by agreement at the time in effect between the employer and the individual employee or the employee's collective-bargaining representative. Section 3 is apparently the section designed to deal with the portal-to-portal problem. In other words, this section is the vehicle on which the whole bill rides. It is obvious that, even in this section itself, the bill goes far beyond the portal-to-portal question and beyond anything that could be called a related question.

No activities are excepted from section 3. It is therefore not limited to fringe activities or matters that have been subject to debate, but to a host of other activities that the vast majority of employers have long regarded as part of the workweek. The section would perpetuate the worst practices followed anywhere. Employers who have been refusing to pay for special types of work done by their employees in open defiance of regulations by the Administrator or by specific ruling of the Supreme Court in situations totally unrelated to portal to portal could continue to do so with impunity. Practices of the type that obtained before the act was passed would now be made legal. For example, an employer in a logging operation who refused to pay his mule tender for 2 hours a day spent in feeding and taking care of mules could legally continue that practice. A mine operator who refused to pay his miners for hours of arduous work laying track, putting in supports, and extending drifts underground would be free to go ahead.

Not only would such existing evils be perpetuated, but employers of the type engaging in them would be encouraged to institute new practices of that sort. There is nothing to prevent the unscrupulous type of employer from instituting new practices depriving his employees of pay that is morally due them and would be legally due them but for section 3. The individual employee in the unorganized establishment has no choice but to agree when confronted with pressures, statements, or implications that would still be well within the bounds of provable fraud and duress. And even this last puny protection of such employees does not appear in section 3. Compromise and waiver of wages due are limited under section 2 (f) by the requirement that there must be no fraud or duress. While this may be legally implied in section 3, it is not mentioned. In any event, it would be a forlorn hope to think that fair labor standards could be maintained when any employer is free to make any arrangement he pleases with respect to compensating his workers for various types of activities with only the proviso that he must not engage in fraud or duress in a manner making it possible for his employees to prove fraud or duress in court.

Obviously, section 3 is not designed to clarify labor standards, but to undermine them. Whatever its purpose, this is the effect.

Other courses of action are clearly open to anyone interested in solving the portal-to-portal problem within the framework of maintaining fair labor standards. Section 3 does not even give the minimum protection to employers voluntarily maintaining decent labor standards against the unfair competition of other types of employers that might be obtained by looking to industry practice rather than the practice of an individual employer.

It would be far better to approach the whole problem through rule-making power. Even the most extreme position for which there could be any shadow of defense should limit the compromising or cancellation of employee's rights in the debated issues to past liabilities. Many would question the wisdom and justice of going that far. Surely, some safeguards must be provided in administrative or court review of compromises or settlements. Some rules must be set down that have regard for the basic value of general application of a law. Provision for flexibility is important, but if each employer can rewrite the law on his own terms, there is no law. Under section 3 there is no hope of establishing fair labor standards with respect to the activities involved in areas where such standards have not yet been established, or of maintaining them for long where they now obtain. The activities to which section 3 would apply are not defined, and the language is vague enough and broad enough to include an enormous range of activities. The enactment of section 3 would be disastrous to efforts to establish and maintain fair labor standards.

All of these issues cause me to conclude that the pending legislation, although allegedly aimed only at the so-called portal-to-portal issues, in reality hits at and destroys the very foundation and cornerstone of the minimum wage and other labor standards embodied in the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as well as the Walsh-Healey and Davis-Bacon Acts.

So I emphasize, and repeat, that this bill raises issues far beyond the travel-time problems so sensationally presented in the newspaper headlines. This bill compels us to ask ourselves searching and serious questions as we consider and prepare to vote on its provisions: Are we against a real, honest-to-goodness minimum-wage law with national uniform standards? Do we wish to stop protecting the millions of unorganized wage earners of this country and the thousands of fair-minded, ethical businessmen against the destructive and unfair competition of those few who would pay subminimum wages in order to gain a competitive advantage? Or are we fair-minded and patriotic enough to place the prosperity and national welfare of this country ahead of selfish partisan advantage and narrow class interest? These are serious questions which must be honestly answered when we vote on this bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think we are about 8 years late in passing this legislation, but I am delighted to see that the House has finally gotten around to again considering a bill with the provisions contained in H. R. 2157. This is the second time I have advocated these provisions on the floor of this House—and I hope they will be adopted. The thing that shocked the American people about these portal-to-portal suits was the unfairness involved. To me that is a rather encouraging indication. I am not afraid of the American employer. Most of them I know are good Americans. I am not afraid of the American employee. The overwhelming majority of them are good Americans. I am not afraid to let them deal among themselves. I am afraid we can bring about a serious situation if we continue to promote and encourage strife, differences, confusion, and lawsuits between employees and employers.

There is nothing taken away from the employees in this bill. What so-called rights are taken away from the employees? This Congress passed an act and wrote provisions in it for overtime pay, and so forth, and unwisely left out any statute of limitations or any definition as to what should be compensable work, or any protection to an employer proceeding in good faith to comply with an Administrator's order. Under that law we proceeded in a normal way for several years. Just recently a few folks discovered a technicality whereby they could get something—this does not apply to the rank and file of labor—but where they could get something to which they had never thought of being entitled. Then along came the agitation and along came the suits. I will say right now you had better not give much consideration to a reduction of the budget and a reduction of taxes unless you do something to stop these claims, amounting to several billion dollars, that will eventually have to be paid by the Federal Government. You had better incorporate that in your budget for the coming year if you are going to defeat this bill. That is just plain ordinary horse sense.

I have never been much of a man to try to get something which I did not feel I had earned, and to which I was not justly entitled. I have never felt I was justified in pressing a claim against one of my neighbors just because some loose clause in the law would give me the right to proceed against him. I would rather have a little more sound basis for action. The average worker feels that way. This was a statute. What rights they have were conveyed under that statute by this Congress. If the Congress feels it has made a mistake, then the same Congress which wrote that law should have and does have the right, the duty, and the obligation to correct it and make it fit into our American plan of economy.

I have been sitting on the Labor Committee for several weeks, and I say to you that I am not an alarmist when I say that some agitators are rapidly trying to spread dissension, confusion, and disturbance between the employers and the employees. Pitting one against the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN. Somewhere, somehow the other 140,000,000 people in this country are going to demand some consideration. No sensible man would want to injure, harm, or retard the financial, social, or economical progress of a worker, certainly not; and no fair-minded, honest man would want to encourage any worker to step in the face of anybody else who might also be a worker. On yesterday while the president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen was before our committee—and I have always regarded the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen as one of the model employee organizations of this country—I think in the main they are sound and composed of very fine men—but we were discussing the question of strikes, and he said, "Our only weapon is to strike and if need be to shut down the railroads."

I asked him how many million workers were employed in the railroads, and he said about 1,000,000. I asked how many million electrical utility workers there were, and I think we agreed on something like 4,000,000. I said, "There are 5,000,000 men, and these 5,000,000 men can stagnate our national economy, throw our society out of joint, do billions of dollars of damage, and impair the health, convenience, and happiness of every citizen in America."

Then I said to Mr. Whitney: "I want to ask you the $64 question which we as legislators must answer, and that is, If the strike is your weapon, what kind of weapon have the other 145,000,000 got to defend themselves with?" He did not have the answer.

The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is the answer the people of the United States are expecting us to bring forth. I hope we can work it out. I refuse to accept the theory that in order to make five or ten million secure we must make 140,000,000 insecure. There should be, and I believe there is, a way to provide equal security to all, employees and employers alike. Unfair laws, unfair treatment of the strong or the weak, rich or poor, majority or minority, organized or unorganized, has always been frowned upon by the American people; and if such a law is passed, its life will be of short duration, so long as we remain a democracy committed to the principle of equal justice to all.

It has been brought forcibly to our attention that the National Labor Relations Act contains some one-sided and unfair provisions. I hope we will hasten to correct them. No good can come from their continuation as statute law. Let us pass H. R. 2157 now, then turn to other corrective legislation which trial and error has proven to be necessary.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, at the very outset of what I have to say on this subject I wish to compliment the subcommittee which has handled this particular piece of legislation. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], chairman of the subcommittee, has worked for a long period of time on this subject. He has reviewed many of the cases. He has a fine background for this service, I may say, in the Seventy-ninth Congress when he prepared and introduced H. R. 2788, a portion of which measure is embraced in this particular bill now under consideration. H. R. 2788 passed the House of Representatives and also it passed in the Senate in the last Congress, but there was some slight disagreement between the House version and the version of the other body. Before the conference committee could act upon it and report the measure back to the House and to the other body, the Congress adjourned and that particular measure was not adopted.

May I say that the very first portion of the present pending bill, H. R. 2157, embraces practically everything embraced in H. R. 2788 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. It refers to the collection of penalties which grow out of the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the Bacon-Davis Act. I may say that I happened to have served as a member of the Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which held hearings on H. R. 2788 in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Mr. Chairman, there is one particular matter to which I wish to direct attention, and this has been emphasized by some of those who have spoken on the measure—that is, the statute of limitations which has been fixed in the pending measure with respect to the time actions should be commenced to collect penalties and so forth under this measure. All of us know that there has been no Federal law upon this subject. When these various acts were passed there was no provision contained with respect to limitation of time within which such an action may be filed. The result was, and the result has been, that under the conformity law those actions have been forced to resort to the statute in the particular State in which such action was pending. That has been true throughout, and that is true up to the present moment.

This measure, in the initial portion, seeks to fix the statute of limitations in this measure and provides 1 year as that limitation for commencement of the action. May I say to the membership that this limitation does not mean the action must be brought, the case tried and disposed of before the expiration of 1 year. It merely means that the action shall be filed and commenced within that period of 1 year. Then it is thereafter tried and disposed of in the regular course, which may be 2 years, it may be even longer before the action is finally disposed of in the court in which the action is pending.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I may say to the gentleman all of us are deeply interested in this bill. We realize that something should be done in regard to certain of these unjustified suits. How does the gentleman reconcile the fact that in practically all other cases in law more than a 1-year limitation is allowed, while you enforce the 1-year limitation here?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman's question and it is a good one. May I say that where you recover a penalty, as is provided in this particular measure, where you recover double damages, where you recover attorney's fees, it becomes a penalty statute. In my own State of Indiana we have a provision by which there are mechanics and materialmen's liens, where the lien may be asserted if filed within 60 days and it becomes a lien on the property. That lien may be foreclosed. It gives the person who asserts the lien a priority and the property may be sold for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to pay the lienholder. That is a penalty measure. In my State of Indiana, those actions must be commenced within 1 year. They do not fall in the same category as other classes of cases, for instance a tort case for damages, or a case on account, or matters of that kind, in which a longer period of time is granted. But those actions which provide a penalty measure, such as this one here, and such as the mechanics or materialmen's liens to which I have just referred, are in a different and separate category, and the action must be brought in a much shorter period of time, so that all persons may know what the situation is and what has developed.

Long delay in the institution of suits in such class of cases as those to which I have referred, under H. R. 2157, is disadvantageous to both the employer and the employee. As a matter of fact, the employee wants to know whether or not he is going to get that additional money. On the other hand, the employer should know, and he has a right to know, what his budget should be. If an action of that kind is long delayed, and there is a multiplicity of those actions, those might well operate to put that plant out of business and throw every employee off the pay roll. Witnesses become scattered. Their evidence is unobtainable after a long period of time elapses. Persons who are cognizant of the facts die and their evidence cannot be secured under any circumstances. So to my way of thinking, may I say to my good friend, the gentleman from California, it is to the especial advantage of the employee as well as the employer that actions of this character be commenced within as short a period of time as possible.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. Is there not a further fundamental distinction in addition to those that the gentleman has just mentioned that characterize this kind of action and distinguish it, to wit, the fact that the obligation is continuing and cumulative, and that is what is so important in the building up of this great accumulation of funds, and therefore an additional reason for shortening the period of the statute, and the further fact that the statute of limitations of one year really means that you are allowing the employee to recover for a whole year.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to my friend that he is entirely correct and I wish to thank him for that observation. That is an additional reason and a potent reason for that limitation. In this pending bill we have not sought to cut off or disallow any one whose right of action had accrued and the statute of limitations had run against it, but we grant 6 months' additional time for the bringing of that character of action. Remember, that is just the filing of his suit. His case need not be disposed of within that period of 1 year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. That refers, only, to the filing of the action and not the trial of it; not to the completion of it; not the rendition of judgment in the case, but all the person who has a claim of that character has to do is to file his action in court within that period of 1 year and that, to my mind—and I feel convinced in the minds of all those within the hearing of my voice or a majority of them at least—is ample and sufficient time. I, too, want to protect the employee. On the other hand, I want to protect the employer. I want to be entirely fair as between those two groups in matters of this kind. But since we have granted the additional time where a cause of action has expired under this particular statute, where the 1 year has passed, we have granted 6 months additional time in which to file the action, and then those actions which accrue hereafter, those should be filed within 1 year from the date of their accrual, it would appear to be ample time in which to act. I hope, after having considered this measure, having gone through it step by step, having taken up the various provisions in it, that the Members of this body will see fit to approve this measure as they approved H. R. 2788 in the Seventh-ninth Congress, and that we will have adopted a yardstick upon which the people of this country can stand and rely respecting actions of this particular character. With the present large number of pending suits, this is a very important subject—the American people are looking to Congress for relief—and our Government seeks relief from the huge liability it may incur unless the pending measure is adopted by the House. Let us assume our responsibility in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, this bill finds many of us, I am sure, in somewhat of a dilemma as to the action we should take and the way we should vote on it. I say very sincerely that as far as I am concerned I have no sympathy with the great majority, 90 percent, of the portal-to-portal lawsuits and claims that have been filed. I do not think employees generally or anyone else, for that matter, are going to win any benefit that will be very lasting, substantial, or wholesome, by a windfall resulting from some technical provision that they might run across which enables them to bring a suit. I realize also that for the good of the employees as well as the employers, industry is entitled to know how they stand. An employer is entitled to know what his liability is and not have to worry about a possible contingent liability that may arise years later. Also the employer would not be in a very good position to bargain with his employees for higher wages if he thought he might be presented later with portal-to-portal suits in large amounts. I am sure most Members of the House feel the same way. But the question presents itself as to whether in trying to remedy the situation about portal-to-portal suits we are doing just that or are going into an entirely different matter and emasculating the Bacon-Davis Act, the Wage-Hour Act, and the Walsh-Healey Act.

I hope that before the final vote comes on this bill the committee or the sponsor, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], who is a very capable lawyer and for whom I have the highest respect—I think he wants to be fair about the matter—will consider and will agree to some amendments that will allay our fears that we are going way beyond what we are setting out to do, namely, to make impossible the large majority of portal-to-portal suits we have had recently.

I want to address my remarks particularly to two provisions of the pending bill. I think these need some amending and some further consideration before we enact them into law. First, section 2 (f). Some method should be found for the purpose of enabling a compromise of existing portal-to-portal suits under safeguards, but the thing I am fearful about in connection with section 2 (f) is that it not only applies to pending claims, but sanctions the compromise of future claims. You will notice the language, "any claim," which of course means all claims. It permits the settlement of all future claims that may arise under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the Bacon-Davis Act. In this respect I think it goes far beyond what is necessary to meet the present portal-to-portal situation. It opens the door to flagrant violations of the wage-and-hour laws by those employers who wish to take unfair advantage of their employees and competitors.

In enacting the wage-and-hour laws, Congress intended to insure decent wages and hours to those workers in American industry whose economic bargaining position is too weak to enable them to secure those standards for themselves. By the same legislation, Congress intended to protect fair-minded employers who are willing to establish decent wages and hours against the unscrupulous competition of chiselers. To permit the compromising of any claim arising under these laws is to invite these chiselers to pressure their employees into settlements which may once again subject those employees to the same sweatshop conditions they were forced to endure before these laws were enacted. Note, if you will, that this bill not only sanctions compromises where there exists a bona fide dispute of fact as to the number of hours worked or as to the rate of pay, but, if I read this bill correctly, it sanctions all compromise settlements, whether or not such dispute of fact exists, and regardless of the extent to which an employer has failed to comply with the act. An employer is free to pay less than the statutory wages, waits until an injunction or employees' suit seems imminent, and then makes every effort to compromise his way out of the violation. Having settled that claim he is free to repeat the process ad infinitum. And the act would no longer be uniform in its application, for this provision would give a distinct competitive advantage to an employer whose employees are more willing to accept a compromise of their claims than the employees of his competitors.

Let us consider human nature in these matters. If an employer is paying less than the minimum wage, and he takes a petition or a release or settlement blank around to his employees, the employees are usually going to sign it, particularly if they are not members of a bargaining unit. Frankly, I am very much afraid that this is going to give the unscrupulous, chiseling employer a distinct advantage over the one who wants to follow the real intent of the wage and hour law.

Another provision which I hope will be amended is section 3, which reads:

> No action or proceeding of any kind whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, shall be maintained to the extent that such action is based upon failure of an employer to pay an employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee other than those activities which at the time of such failure were required to be paid for either by custom or practice of such employer at the plant or other place of employment of such employee.

Let us see what that does. In the committee, incidentally, I offered an amendment to include the word "lawful" before the words "custom or practice." The amendment was voted down. The provision as it stands would enable two plants side by side manufacturing the same product to have different practices to the extent where one could have a custom of having its employees work four extra hours and the other would not have that advantage and nothing could be done about it. Therefore, it would do away completely with uniformity in the various industries of the Nation even though they may be manufacturing the same products and also be in the same locality.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] offered an amendment providing that this custom or practice should be that practiced by the industry in a particular locality. That would help to a certain degree, but that amendment unfortunately was not adopted.

Suppose there were a custom or practice in a particular industry over a long period of years for the employees to work eight extra hours a week. As long as that employer could get employees who were willing to work in compliance with that custom, there is nothing that could be done about it. Competitors starting in a new business could probably only get employees to work 40 hours a week, whereas the custom would enable the competing industry to work 48 hours a week.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Is it not true that the old sweatshop conditons that existed, for instance, in the needle trades, were the result of competitors trying to compete on a full-labor market or a surplus-labor market where the competitors would hire employees at a lower price in order to make a competitive article cheaper? Thereby the whole industry would be in chaos because of the competitive practice.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Such language is certainly new language.

Mr. KEFAUVER. But mere "custom or practice" might mean anything in any industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, how do you establish a custom or practice? Suppose a new industry is starting and it proclaims "Our custom here is to work 10 hours overtime per week, that is the practice."

I do not know whether it must have been a long-existing custom or practice or whether it can be one that is newly started. There certainly should be some protection to the employer who wants to be fair, who really wants to carry out the intent of the act.

But even more dangerous than the custom or practice provision is the next clause of section 3:

> Or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee or his collective-bargaining representative.

In other words, suppose the employer and the employee sign an express agreement that he would work 10 hours above the maximum week, or 60 hours a week; no suit could be brought about it. They would have a perfect right to make that agreement I assume for it does not say that it is prohibited. It would be a lawful agreement. It does not say it must be an agreement in compliance with existing statutes, with the wage-and-hour law, but it can be any kind of agreement and the employee would be unable to do anything about it.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further on that point?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Is it not true that an employer could, for instance, make an agreement with a minority group of 10, 15, or 20 employees, get them to sign an agreement and then use that as a means of enforcing those contract terms upon the majority of his employees?

Mr. KEFAUVER. That could well be one of the results. Here would be plant A making hosiery, complying with the Wages and Hours Act, but right across the street would be plant B which entered into a written agreement with its employees to let them work 10 additional hours a week for the same wage. Under this provision nobody could do anything to prevent it, to prohibit it by injunction, or to collect any wages because of the 10 hours' overwork. That is not fair to plant A that wants to comply in good faith with the provisions of the wage-hour law.

In the committee I had understood that the sponsor of this bill was going to give some consideration to a suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] relative to an amendment to make the practice in any one locality uniform. I wonder if I could inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee or of the committee whether such amendment is going to be accepted?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee stepped out, but I believe the policy of the majority of the committee will be to vote for the bill. All amendments, however, will be considered. I regret that the gentleman now addressing the House—a member of the committee—was not present when this matter was discussed in the committee, because if he had been he would not ask the question he now asks on the floor of the House.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I was present at the time the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] offered his amendment to have the practice or custom uniform in any given locality. He was finally persuaded to withdraw his amendment on the understanding that the subcommittee or the sponsor of the bill was going to consider some language to take care of the situation.

I see the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] here. I might inquire if that was not his understanding at that time.

Mr. KEATING. I prefer to have the chairman of the subcommittee to speak for himself. I do not think I should be called upon to answer a question of that kind.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will permit, I can answer that question. After that discussion to which the gentleman refers, this matter was discussed in the committee, and, as I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] knows, it was the opinion of the committee that the language in the bill should be carried in the bill. So that the bill represents the views of a majority of the committee, as it is written. Of course, the gentleman has the privilege of offering his amendment.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The gentleman will remember I offered an amendment to insert the word "lawful" before the words "custom and practice." At the same time, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], or before that time, had made objection that this would give advantage to one industry, or might not provide uniform practice among industries in the same locality. So he offered his amendment to make it the customary practice of the industries in that locality.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but both amendments were voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Permit me to say the amendment was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], as well as the amendment by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], but they were not accepted by the committee. The committee should not be criticized by the gentleman who happened to offer an amendment which the committee did not think was wise. The committee should not be criticized if it did not accept his particular amendment.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I am not criticizing the committee, but I think I am stating the facts correctly in saying that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] offered his amendment. Then, because objection was raised to that amendment on the ground that it should be worked out very carefully as to phraseology, it was stated at the time the bill was reported out that the sponsor of the bill would give further consideration to the matter and he was hopeful that something could be devised that would take care of the objection of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING]. I am not asking the gentleman from New York whether that is correct or not, but that is my impression.

Mr. KEATING. May I say to the gentleman that my understanding of what went on in committee was that I offered the amendment and it was rejected, and that is all there was to it. The majority of the committee felt that the amendment should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has again expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this bill. I will vote against it despite the fact that I am convinced, as the gentleman who has just spoken was convinced, that a majority of the suits now before the courts are unjustified.

I shall vote against the bill because I think it goes far beyond what a simple portal-to-portal bill should encompass. I agree with the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] that it strikes at the wage-hour law. I think that has been proven conclusively this afternoon. I am not going to burden you with a repetition of the facts about the statute of limitations or the part of the bill that deals with custom or practice as a definition of "work."

I shall talk about what really is worrying us. Why has this bill been introduced? As one of the Members said, "This bill was introduced because it was felt that portal-to-portal suits now before the courts are in such great number, amounting to $5,000,000,000, that they are a threat to the financial and economic stability of the country."

We are all agreed that we want a sound and stable economy. That is right. But we are not going to insure soundness or stability with this bill. What we do insure is the destruction of effective enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act. If it is portal-to-portal pay which we are trying to regulate, why do not we have a simple portal-to-portal bill before us.

One of the Members referred to the author of the bill as having done a monumental work in the writing of this bill. I wish this afternoon that a monumental job had been done or was being done by Congress on housing. I wish that a monumental job had been done or was being done to keep down the cost of living. I wish today that a monumental job was being done to deal with the facts of living as they are at the grass roots. If there had been any real understanding of the working and living problems confronting one-third of the men and women of America, we would not have a great number of unwarranted suits before the courts today. Neither passing this bill nor any other restrictive labor legislation, legislation for instance which would prohibit men and women in this country from striking, will solve the problem of living costs that is growing day by day and becoming more explosive throughout the country.

How do we get a sound economy? We get a sound economy only if we have three factors in operation—full production, full employment, and sound consuming buying power.

We came out of the war with a sound, healthy economy. Today there are grave danger signals which we must recognize.

What are these danger signals? Let's look at what happened in the twenties.

Between 1924 and 1929 profits for all corporations after taxes increased from $4,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000, or 72 percent.

The output per man-hour in manufacturing increased 35 percent. Wages increased only one-half cent per hour per year. As a result, consumer purchasing power did not keep up with production. The result of this combination of facts was the crash in 1929—and the tears of 1931.

The same danger signals which lead up to vanishing markets, closed factories, bread lines are present today.

From 1942 to 1945, the average corporation profit was $9,500,000,000 and the peak wartime profit was $9,900,000,000.

For 1946, corporation profits, after taxes, will run to $11,800,000,000.

Estimated 1947 profits, before taxes, for manufacturing corporations, are estimated at fifteen billion five hundred million and would allow seven billion seven hundred million for wage increases and leave sufficient profits, after taxes, to equal those of the war years and twice those of prewar years.

But wages are not keeping up to a point where a sound consumer market can be maintained to sustain these profits.

I would like to insert in the RECORD, at this point, some interesting figures from Business Week for February 15, 1947, which show that buying power in this country is decreasing:

HOW REAL INCOME OF EMPLOYEES HAS CHANGED

The war and its aftermath have revolutionized the United States standard of living. But rising prices and higher taxes obscure both the extent of the change and the degree to which various groups have shared its benefits.

The economics staff of Business Week has attempted to remove these obscurities and to show below how the real income of those at work in various parts of the economy has shifted. To this end income and employment taxes have been deducted from estimates of weekly pay envelopes for certain key dates. The amount remaining has then been converted into dollars of fixed purchasing power, with prices paid by consumers in 1939 as the basic yardstick. The results are startling.

GAINS CUT

With few exceptions, higher wages and more stable employment have lifted workers to a new plateau of real income since 1939. But rising prices and decreased overtime during 1946 cut their gains. Moreover, wide disparity exists in the way different groups fared.

The bituminous-coal worker leads the manufacturing and mining group; his average weekly real income is 62 percent over 1939, partly because of a longer workweek.

And at the opposite end of the scale, the public school teacher and others working in public education suffered a decline in real income that averaged almost one-fifth.

SIGNIFICANT STORY

In one sense the data presented are misleading—the same people did not always stay in the same jobs. And a man usually moved to better-paying work.

But in spite of this shortcoming of the data, and the fact that the statistics in each instance are an average of varying rates of pay within the industry, Business Week believes this table tells a significant story of relative change in the economic well-being of the Nation's working population.

Data are estimates by Business Week based on information published by the Department of Labor and the Department of Commerce. Because statistical adjustments of the character applied to the basic data leave results that are only approximations of the true averages, the statistics for weekly income available for spending have been rounded out to the nearest 10 cents and in some cases to the nearest 50 cents. Thus, the figures for mid-1945 and autumn 1946 are of use chiefly as an indication of the general magnitude of the change in real income.

The income of the wage earner has gone down in 1946 from 1945. True, the income of the wage earner in the country in 1946 is higher than it was in 1939 but we had millions of unemployed in 1939, too.

Goodness knows, we do not want to go back to that.

The average weekly earnings by production workers today cannot sustain sufficient buying power to continue full production and full employment. Today 97 percent of the working population is employed and that is the way we want to keep it.

The average weekly earnings by production workers today cannot provide a decent standard of living, however, with prices what they are.

The Heller budget from the University of California for a family of four in October 1946 was $70.52 a week. The average weekly earnings by production workers was $45.83. These average weekly earnings have dropped from January 1945 when they were $47.50 and the buying power in terms of 1945 dollars was down to $39.27 as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics Price Index.

The minimum character of the Heller budget is evident in that it provides one overcoat for the wage earner every 6 or 7 years; a new suit once every 3 years; one winter coat for the wife every 4 years, and two regular dresses and two house dresses each year.

In the food line, it provides such items as one-fourth pound of bacon, 2 dozen eggs, 1 pound each of butter and margarine a week. No choice cuts of meat allowed.

We can expect if we allow the wages in the country to continue to take a downward spiral there will again be unemployment, because the great mass purchasing power of this country does not come from the small group at top where excessive profits have been made and are being made. It comes from the great mass of American people about whom, incidentally, we are talking today. The relative change in the economic well-being of the Nation's working population is significant.

We cannot ease our conscience in this attack upon the Fair Labor Standards Act as one gentleman did by suggesting that this bill seeks to protect 140,000,000 people against a small handful of willful, unreasonable citizens.

There are 15,000,000 organized working people in the country. This figure does not include their families. You can fix the figure any place you want to—some place around forty-five to fifty million people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman two additional minutes.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, we are not talking about a few people here, as has been suggested. We are talking about forty-five or fifty million people. That is quite a handful.

When we contemplate voting out a bill which will undermine the Wages and Hours Act we are jeopardizing the earning power of millions of American people. As a matter of fact we are also jeopardizing the earning capacity of unorganized labor.

When the buying power of one-third of the people goes down, what happens? Production goes down. When production goes down, what happens? Employment goes down. That is what this Congress should be concerned with.

Full production, full employment, sound consumer buying power alone will keep our economy sound and healthy.

If the economy is sound and healthy, that is what will keep "isms" out of this country. People who have roofs over their heads and some security do not go down sidetracks. You can scream your head off, you may wrap the flag around yourself and talk about democracy until you are deaf, dumb, and blind, but if we allow a great segment of our people to be put into a strait-jacket where they cannot strike, where they cannot protest, where they are virtually slave labor and are required to live on less than they can live on, we are going to have trouble.

There is the beginning of trouble in this bill. I question no one's motives at all, but I think there is a lack of vision here today; lack of vision, just as there was when the Price Control Act was wrecked, so that prices have gotten out of line. And what was that but an open invitation to strikes in this country? If people cannot live on what they make, they have to protest; that is simple, and everybody knows that prices are still rising, and anybody that knows anything about conditions back home knows that the people do not have enough roofs over their heads today, and I say that that is what we should be concerning ourselves about.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the purposes of and the necessity for this bill are set out in a finding of facts which the committee made upon evidence heard in support of the provisions of the bill. These findings are set forth in section 1 of the bill.

Now, ordinarily $5,000,000,000 worth of lawsuits are not held in abeyance for months and years if the persons bringing such suits have a genuine cause of action. A man is prone to forget his obligations to others, but he rarely forgets the obligations of others that are due him. Overnight out of the blue this unexpected avalanche of suits confronted the employers of this country.

Now, let us look at these suits in the light of our common sense, our experience, and what we know about human nature. We all know that if these men who are bringing these suits had had a valid cause of action, they would have brought them when their causes of action accrued. The percussion cap that set these suits off was the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case, in which the Supreme Court held that the workers were entitled to, well—portal-to-portal, or, as Judge Picard finally put it, pillow-to-pillow pay. In holding that the employees of this company were entitled to pay for walking on the company's premises and for the performance of certain activities preliminary to the beginning of their day's work, the Supreme Court held:

> It follows that the time spent in walking to work on the employer's premises, after the time clocks were punched, involved "physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business" (Tennessee Coal Co. v. Muscoda Local (321 U. S. 590, 598); Jewell Ridge Co. v. Local No. 6167 (325 U. S. 161, 164–166)). Work of that character must be included in the statutory workweek and compensated accordingly, regardless of contrary custom or contract.

I approach this subject on the theory and on the assumption, and I believe I am warranted in assuming, that the average employer in this country and the average employee are friends and not enemies. From what I get from many employers and employees in talking to them and in the letters that they write me, the men and women who work are very much of the frame of mind of the patriarch Job, who when his supposed friends stood around his bedside of affliction and advised, "Job, curse God and die," and Job said in reply, "O God, deliver me from my friends."

The laboring people may well pray to be delivered from their professed friends, those who live by the sweat of their tongues, and not by the sweat of their brows.

Now, let us see what this bill proposes to do. It provides that a laborer who thinks he has a claim against his employer can settle; he can compromise. Why should not anybody 21 years of age, of sound mind, be permitted to settle a controversy or a claim that he has? He does not need an agitator as his guardian. He is not asking for that. This bill makes it lawful for an employer and his employee to fairly settle and compromise their differences. Then it gives the employer the right, when he is confronted with one of these suits, to rely upon the fact—

That the action or omission complained of was done or omitted in good faith consistent with, required by, or in reliance on any decision of a court of record in connection with which such employer was a party in interest, or any administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice.

There was a time when an employer or anybody in business might rely upon the law of the land as it had existed and had been repeatedly declared by the courts for 150 years, but under administrative law and practices and under the day-to-day shift in judicial interpretations of the law, and under these multitudinous rules, regulations, orders, interpretations, and explanations and other decrees that are handed down by bureaucrats with which nobody on earth could keep up, no man knows when he is acting in violation of the law. It is provided in this bill that if anybody relies in good faith upon any of these regulations, orders, rulings, interpretations, approvals, enforcement policies or practices that have been promulgated by these Federal administrative authorities, that is a complete defense, to these suits mentioned in this bill and such reliance and compliance ought to be a complete defense.

Let us see what else this bill does. It permits the court to have some latitude in assessing damages or penalties.

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DEVITT. I should like to get the viewpoint of the distinguished gentleman with reference to subsection (e) of section 2. The gentleman spoke with derogation of the rulings and the findings and the practices of the bureaucrats. Then he pointed to the second paragraph of subsection (e) and said that it provides that those rulings and practices are impregnable.

Mr. JENNINGS. No; I say that if anybody relies on them in good faith—and there is no answer to that—if somebody clothed with the power so to do issues an edict or an order having the force and effect of law, and the citizen acts in reliance upon such edict or order in good faith, such action and reliance ought to clothe him with absolute immunity from liability in either a civil or a criminal suit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Right along that line, I think it might be of interest to Congress to know that on the 22d of February this news item came out of London, England:

Two thousand British Communists shouted today when William Z. Foster, head of the Red party in the United States, opened the Communist Congress here by telling them the news they all wanted to hear, that America is nearing a bust.

Mr. JENNINGS. If he will just stay over there we can all shout with joy.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; but that is what they have been praying for, and I am not sure that it is not in the motive behind these suits.

Mr. JENNINGS. Let me make this further observation: As I said a moment ago, I approach this subject upon the assumption that employers and employees are usually friends. Most of the employers of this country are men who at one time worked for wages. Not long ago in my town a man passed away who came there 50 years ago as a young man from Alabama, without a dollar in his pocket, but he was filled with energy and industry, and God Almighty had planted inventive genius in his mind. He became an inventor. He founded a great plant that bears his name. During this war the Fulton-Sylphon plant in my city made instruments without which airplanes and submarines could not have been effectively operated. Mr. Fulton died wealthy, but he made scores of others rich and thousands prosperous.

I am never worried about what a man like that has. He shares it with others. If anybody asks me what a man leaves when he dies, I do not have to go to the office of the probate clerk to learn. He leaves all he has. There are no pockets in a shroud.

I do not want to see my country and your country, this country of the employers and employees, duplicate the performance of Great Britain in wrecking and nationalizing our system of free enterprise, based on collective bargaining. You cannot go halfway over Niagara. This bill enacted into law will end the uncertainty and financial ruin now hanging over the business of this country like the sword of Damocles. The 6 months' and 12 months' limitations within which such suits may be brought will put an end to the threat to our industry, and to the jobs of millions of our working people. Realizing the threat these suits are to the solvency of business and to the welfare of the working people, William Green, and other leaders of the American Federation of Labor, have denounced them as unwise and without merit.

This bill should be enacted as reported by the committee.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us this afternoon is typical of most omnibus legislation, a carry-all that embodies many things created and conceived out of hysteria and sired by hatred of labor. The thinking people of this country seek industrial peace so that the Nation may go forward to take its proper place in the world scene. But we are not going to achieve that goal by introducing legislation in this Congress which is strictly class legislation—legislation that is punitive in its nature with the penalties to be exacted but from one group—the workers.

Perhaps there have been mistakes in the past in some of our labor legislation, but we are not going to rectify this condition with hysterical legislation of this type which is morally unsound and philosophically dishonest.

We are attempting here to go beyond our own sphere and we are ceasing to be a legislative body and attempting to become the judicial process of our Government. We are attempting to dictate the policies that the courts of the country must follow, and we are endeavoring to interpret the laws before they have an opportunity to do so. We must be calm and we must be reasonable if we are to work out the difficulties that exist in the present labor program. We cannot do it by introducing bills of an omnibus nature which affect four or five acts of a highly controversial sort.

I certainly believe that the best thing this House can do is to defeat this measure and turn it back to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House with a proposal that both the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Education and Labor make a prolonged study of the entire labor situation and also of all existing labor legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, before I speak regarding this bill, I want to express my deep gratitude to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for the opportunity he gave me of serving on this subcommittee. Although perhaps not young in years, I am at least new in this House. I sincerely wish that every man and woman in this country could have been present during the deliberations of this subcommittee because they would have been gratified and heartened to learn there was not for one instant at any time injected into those deliberations any degree of partisan politics. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Iowa, has done, and I repeat what was said before, a monumental job. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN] and, likewise, the minority members, Messrs. WALTER, of Pennsylvania, and BRYSON, of South Carolina, worked long and hard to try to bring out a bill which is fair and just to every one. Each one of these able gentlemen labored with diligence and devoted dedication to the task in hand.

I favor the passage of this legislation, although there are two respects in which I feel amendments would improve the bill and accomplish greater fairness to all concerned which I am sure is the ultimate aim of all of us.

We are faced today with the prospect of stagnation in production and bankruptcy for industry particularly small businesses and possibly economic chaos leading to small and large businesses going to the wall and leading to men walking the streets for want of a job. On top of that we are told by the witnesses from the Government who have appeared before us that a very large amount of these staggering claims will, in the final analysis, fall on the Government itself through contract renegotiation and claims for tax refunds.

Such a situation as that, in my opinion, challenges this Congress to act. In doing so, we must be careful to be fair to everyone. I believe that this act does not deprive the laboring man of any of his legitimate rights nor emasculate the Fair Labor Standards Act or any other statute enacted for his benefit. If I felt otherwise, I would be against it.

On the other hand and along that line, although I differ with him, I have the greatest respect for my colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], who, with admirable frankness, tells us he thinks that the Fair Labor Standards Act ought to go out of the window. If I agreed with his objective, I would favor such a direct approach. But I do not agree, and I believe that is not the intention of any of the subcommittee members who worked so hard on this bill and who, with the exception of the statute of limitations amendment with which I shall deal in a minute, reported the bill unanimously to the Committee on the Judiciary. Nor will that, in my opinion, be the effect of the bill if it is passed.

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. DEVITT. The gentleman was a member of the subcommittee which conducted hearings, was he not?

Mr. KEATING. I was. That is right.

Mr. DEVITT. Do you recall the testimony that was presented there by certain agents of employees of the Northwest Airlines?

Mr. KEATING. I do remember that; yes.

Mr. DEVITT. Does the gentleman feel that those employees would be denied coverage by virtue of the enactment of this bill?

Mr. KEATING. I was much impressed with the testimony given by those employees. I will say to the gentleman, who I know has labored long and hard in their behalf, that I do not believe the passage of this bill would injure their rights. I think the gentleman has reference to the good faith provision of the bill. In section (e) on page 4 you will note that the employer only has protection if he has acted in good faith, in reliance upon that administrative ruling. In the situation to which the gentleman refers, the employer acted in reliance on one governmental agency and then another one came along and gave a different ruling. But the employer in the first instance, knowing there was doubt about his position, appealed to the United States Government and got indemnification. I would certainly vigorously urge in that case, if I were appearing for those people, that this action was evidence of the fact that this employer did not act in good faith and could not avail himself of the defense afforded under this subsection (e).

This bill in the first part states the findings which gave rise to it, and the declaration of policy of this Congress.

Then section 3 strikes out what I like to call the illegitimate portal claims. I agree there are probably some legitimate lawsuits pending. I feel most of them are without foundation, after hearing some 500 pages of testimony, but those which are retained in good standing by this bill are those which are based on agreements between employer and employee or his collective bargaining agent, and those which are represented by custom and practice in that industry.

At the proper time I have the feeling and shall urge that there is one class of legitimate claims to which we have not yet given the immunity to which they are entitled. That is the case of the claim based upon the custom or practice in the industry generally. We were given an instance of a case where some men moved from New York City into northern Pennsylvania and started making shirts. The girls they employed to make the shirts were required to put in little piles the various cut out parts of the shirt, the left arm, the front of the shirt, and the back, and the right arm, and the collar before they started sewing. The employer established the practice in a time of depression that he would not pay those girls for the time they were putting those items in separate piles but would start their pay only when they actually started their needles. That was contrary to the general custom and practice in the industry and it was contrary, it seems to me, to fundamental fairness and right. Such a situation, it seems to me, should not give an employer immunity. If this language were broadened to say also an action could be maintained in the case of a custom or practice in the industry, then we would give protection to an employee who was being overreached and at the same time would give protection to the vast bulk of honest, honorable employers who do not try that kind of abuse and are subjected to unfair competition from those who do.

The other amendment which I feel would help make this bill fairer is one to increase the period of the statute of limitations. In my State—New York—an employee now has 6 years within which to maintain an action such as this. I do not for one moment—and I want this most clearly understood—charge any unfairness upon the part of anyone who feels that a 1-year statute is right. The gentleman from Iowa has a 2-year statute in his State and the gentleman from Indiana has a 1-year statute in his State. I can well understand why they with the utmost sincerity favor a 1-year statute.

But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] said earlier in the day that when we were elected to Congress we told labor we were going to be fair. With that I agree, although I cannot go along with his rationalization wherein he contends that all the Republicans who support this bill are venal and the many Democrats who share the same view are uninformed. But I want my conscience in voting on this bill to be absolutely clear. I want to be entirely and unquestionably fair, as I see the problem, and in my case, coming from a State which now has a 6-year statute, I cannot convince myself that I will have been fair in this matter if I go too much below the Nation-wide average, which is now 3.8 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. It is true—and this should in all candor be said—that there are some 13 States which have dealt with this precise problem and have passed statutes of limitation applicable only to this type of action. Those statutes run from 6 months to 2 years.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. That was the question arising in my mind, whether the 6-year statute of limitations in New York State would be applicable in a case where an employee alleged he had not been paid in the regular sort of routine as distinguished from this special statutory provision.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. May I answer the gentleman from Indiana first?

In New York, an employee would have 6 years within which to bring an action under the Fair Labor Standards Act as well as to bring an action at common law for unpaid wages. Since there is no special statute applicable, as is true, I understand, in some 35 States, the general statute applicable to action ex contractu would govern.

What I started to indicate was that many States, of which mine is not one, have legislated specifically for actions under this law and those statutes of limitations run from 6 months to 2 years.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. In just a moment.

But, as I indicated a moment ago, the Nation-wide average is 3.8 years. In using that figure I refer to all of the applicable statutes, Nation-wide, which include the 13 which have specifically dealt with this law and others where a common law right of action would govern their recovery.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. This 1-year limitation applies to actions brought under this or some other Federal act. The 6-year statute of limitations in the gentleman's State applies to common-law actions, it applies to suits involving unpaid wages, for instance.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is partially correct. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that at the present moment the 6-year statute would apply to both a common-law action for unpaid wages and an action under the Fair Labor Standards Act in my State. But there is a distinction between the two types of actions, I recognize that. What I say is that if we favor the Fair Labor Standards Act as such then we must admit that there are legitimate claims under that act and, it is important to bear in mind, all illegitimate claims have presumably been eliminated by the good-faith provisions of this bill. Therefore, it seems to me we should not reduce the statute of limitations on legitimate claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act to such an extent as this bill contemplates.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I am very happy the gentleman has taken the position he has taken. It might be well to say right here that in the State of South Carolina there was a bill passed providing for a 1-year limitation, 1 year in which an action for wages would have to be brought under the Fair Labor Standards Act. I am informed this statute, which was enacted in 1945, was declared unconstitutional by the Appellate Court at Richmond on the ground 1 year was insufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. KEATING. I may say to the gentleman from New York in the interest of clarity, it is not my understanding that the basis of unconstitutionality in that case was the short period of time involved but was the fact it was discriminatory to allow a different and shorter length of time in an action under such a Federal statute as against other types of actions of similar character under State statutes.

In conclusion, I respectfully refer my colleagues to the arguments advanced in the additional views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself in the committee report for supporting a statute of limitations in excess of 1 year, and I favor the passage of this bill, as I said in the beginning, feeling only that these suggested amendments will help to make it fairer, both to the workingman who has a legitimate cause of action and to the ethical employer who should be protected from the unfair competition of the minority who would seek to exploit their employees.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, in 1938, I participated in a legislative battle to secure a minimum wage for underpaid American workers. We fought for a bare minimum necessary to safeguard the worker and his family from privation and want. As the ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, I was among those standing steadfast until our cause carried through to victory. I sensed a feeling of tremendous and lasting accomplishment when, finally, after 2 years of legislative investigation and discussion, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was forced to the floor by a petition on the Speaker's desk and was passed by a substantial majority.

The reason for the Fair Labor Standards Act was stated in the act itself. Congress found that in interstate industries there were labor conditions detrimental to minimum standards of living. Production and sale of goods throughout the country spread and perpetuated these conditions among the workers of the country. Fair wages paid by fair employers were undercut by the unscrupulous; the cutthroat competition of chiselers forced prices and wages downward. The result was sweatshop labor, particularly for women and children.

These findings were not merely pulled out of the air. They were based on harsh and sometimes cruel pathetic facts presented on page after page of committee reports of lengthy committee hearings on this measure.

To correct these conditions without hardship, Congress established a minimum wage of 40 cents for each hour an employee was permitted to work. Prior to the establishment of the minimum-wage law, it was brought out in the testimony that women were working under sweatshop conditions almost within the shadows of the Capitol itself for $6 a week; they worked 10 hours a day 6 days a week to earn this pittance.

Congress decreed that this modest rate would go into effect only after 7 years of lower rates. Then, in order to correct the disastrous effects of constant toil for long working hours, the act provided for payment of one and one-half times the regular rate of pay for work in excess of 40 hours a week.

Now let us take a look at the pay envelope of the worker who receives the bare minimum guaranteed by the act. At the end of a 40-hour week it would contain the princely sum of $16, before taxes. At the end of a 48-hour week it would contain $20.80, before taxes. That would not go very far toward supporting one person, much less a family, under present-day living conditions.

Today this House is asked to consider new legislation amending that act and designed to correct certain injustices which its provisions have inflicted upon the American employer. These amendments have had the initial objective of protecting from employee wage suits brought under the act to recover for the time spent in walking from the gate of a plant to the work bench within the plant. If this were the sole result, I do not believe that any fair-minded man would take issue. But they go much further. H. R. 2157 would, in a few sweeping words, destroy utterly the basic guaranties so solemnly enacted into law in 1938. Millions of defenseless workers would again be left to the mercies of the unfair employers—powerless to defeat a vicious cycle which caused Congress to act in their protection.

I refer to section 3 of H. R. 2157. This section defines work, not only for the purpose of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, but also for the purpose of the Davis-Bacon Act regarding prevailing wages on public works. The latter was passed during the time I was chairman of the Committee on Labor and it was an administration measure. It gives similar definition to the Walsh-Healey Act of 1936 covering minimum wage rates under certain Government supply contracts. Thus this bill affects virtually every existing Federal minimum wage control.

This, ladies and gentlemen, is what will happen under amendments now before you seemingly designed solely to solve the limited issue of portal-to-portal pay. Standards, by now long accepted in industries as a whole, would meet renewed challenge from the cut-throat competitor. Goods produced at unjustly low wages would again flow unimpeded through the channels of commerce, with disastrous effects upon every market they touch. The floor under wages for which we fought in 1938 will have disappeared by 1948 thereby endangering the American standards of living.

May I remind you that you are not only dealing with the pay of the organized worker, you are dealing with the lives and health and the fortunes of over 50,000,000 of law abiding, home loving, American wage earners, organized and unorganized.

Neither these people nor the American public have given us license to impair or destroy the laws of this country which protect a living wage under the rally cry of portal-to-portal pay.

If our object is to protect employers from the possible disastrous effects of wage suits under the Fair Labor Standards Act for pay which, until a few months, neither workers nor employers nor the enforcement agencies of Government conceived as due under the act, let us direct our energies to this problem alone. I am convinced that a reasonable solution can be reached, and that solution does not entail the destruction of every protecting minimum wage standard which the American people have after a long uphill fight succeeded in writing into law.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain amendments to this bill which I will offer tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, the following are the amendments to be offered to H. R. 2157 by me:

[Matter proposed to be stricken in black brackets; new matter in italics]

On page 4, line 15:

"(e) In any action, whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of Labor under this act, the employer may plead and prove that the act or omission complained of was done or omitted in good faith consistent with, required by, or in reliance on any decision of a court of [record] final appeal in connection with which such employer was a party in interest, or any administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice.

"Such a defense, if established, shall be a bar to the action, notwithstanding that after such act or omission, such decision, administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice is modified, rescinded, or determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect.

"The Secretary of Labor shall have power to make, issue, amend, and rescind such regulations and orders as are necessary or appropriate to carry out any of the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. The regulations and orders of the Secretary of Labor shall be published in the Federal Register and shall be effective upon publication or at such later date as the Secretary of Labor shall direct. No provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in conformity with any regulation or order of the Secretary of Labor notwithstanding that such regulation may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial authority to be invalid for any reason.

"SEC. 3. No action or proceeding of any kind whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, shall be maintained to the extent that such action is based upon failure of an employer to pay an employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee, covered by a collective bargaining agreement then in effect, other than those activities which at the time of such failure were required to be paid for either by custom or practice of such employer at the plant or other place of employment of such employee or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee or his collective-bargaining representative, or upon the failure of an employer to pay any other employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee, other than those activities which at the time of such failure were specifically required to be paid for either by custom or practice of the particular industry most nearly applicable to such activities, or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, collective bargaining received a paralyzing blow when our courts decided to force employers to pay wages they had never bargained for. To me, that is the nub of the portal-to-portal question. The staggering sums represented in the portal-to-portal cases that have been filed are not the results of past collective bargaining, the payments to be forced from employers by these suits are to be for time which neither the worker nor his employer considered pay time, according to the Supreme Court, which described this type of time and said it must be paid for at double the value of agreed working time, "regardless of contrary custom or contract." This decision is the most outrageous and unconscionable instance of judicial usurpation of the law-making power that I have ever seen. It is an attempt to write into the law something that Congress never intended, so as to create a liability for pay that neither workers nor employers ever intended. The result of this decision, if Congress does not act to right this judicial wrong, will be not only to enrich thousands of workers by payments they do not deserve, not only to impoverish industry by losses they could not foresee, not only to burden all taxpayers by an additional tax load caused by the decrease in tax payments by industry, but to impoverish workers in the future who will be unable to secure increases from businesses that have been disorganized and impoverished by the results of this decision.

The Gwynne bill, in my judgment, will correct the evils caused by this decision. I want to pay my tribute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] and the Judiciary Committee which has worked out this bill. The legislative problem involved in correcting this decision was complex and difficult, but the committee, as shown in its excellent report, has found judicial decisions and precedents for each provision of the bill. If this bill is interpreted by the courts according to recognized principles of American jurisprudence, the threat of portal-to-portal suits to our economy will be over; businessmen can face their future problems knowing that no unforeseen liability will be created for past wages; unions can proceed with collective bargaining, knowing that they are dealing with businesses not made insolvent by unexpected, court-created payments for work already done.

One danger remains. Will the courts that created this situation through invasion of the legislative field, construe this law as courts should, or will our Supreme Court once more attempt to usurp the powers of Congress by rewriting the new law? At this time we can only hope that the courts will return once more to the judicial processes that won them the respect of our people. If the courts once more throw this situation into turmoil, we will be facing a threat not only to our economy but to constitutional government. If such a threat should arise, we still have machinery under our Constitution to protect the independence of the three branches of government in our Republic. I have faith, however, that the Gwynne bill will be interpreted in such a way that it will mark the end of the assault on our economy and the lawmaking power of Congress which is involved in the portal-to-portal cases.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCGARVEY].

Mr. MCGARVEY. Mr. Chairman, in voting to outlaw the portal-to-portal pay suits, I would like it emphasized that I am doing so in the interests of the people whom I represent. My district is a section of Philadelphia thickly populated by the workers employed in the industrial plants of the city. I have had personal contact with these men, who supported me in the recent election.

They have convinced me that they are vitally concerned regarding the future of their unions. They realize that if the unions continue to instigate such action as the portal-to-portal pay suits it will prove detrimental to the workingman whom the union is supposed to shield.

I would like it understood that I am highly in favor of unions and any measures which have for their aim the protection of the honest, decent American worker. That is why I uphold Congressman GWYNNE's bill.

Seeking damages for portal-to-portal pay could mean bankruptcy and utter ruin to the industries sued and a resultant loss of jobs to the very workers for whom the suits were instigated.

Small businesses, such as the many which are located in my district, would be unable to pay their bills or meet their pay rolls if the suits were successful. After paying heavy damages, they would have no capital left for expansion or the creation of new jobs, a vital need in these times when we have so many veterans of World War II on the unemployment lists.

The total result, as I see it, is chaos and a downhill slide toward another depression. The people of my district put me in office to protect them and their interests. I feel that I am doing that today. They realize, as I do, that the preservation of American enterprise means a bright future for them and their families.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DEVITT], a member of the committee.

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman has just said, I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and one of the Republican members thereof. I rise today, however, in opposition to this bill, and I intend tomorrow, at the appropriate time, to introduce an amendment to make it conform to what in my judgment would be a fair and just settlement of the problem.

I am new as a legislator, but I personally have grave doubts as to the expediency of attempting to cure all the evils associated with the administration of these labor laws in one bill. I, too, am vigorously opposed to these CIO inspired racketeering, ill-founded portal-to-portal pay suits, and I am satisfied that Mr. GWYNNE's subcommittee, in certain provisions in this bill, has amply taken care of those suits.

There is one provision in this bill to which I object very strenuously. It is section (e) of section 2 of the bill. I hope that before any Member of the House votes on this bill he will take time to read that provision not once or twice, but three or four times. I think that is one of the most dangerous provisions that has been presented during the present Republican-controlled Congress. When you read that provision this becomes apparent: What the Congress of the United States does is to say that any kind of a ruling or administrative order or regulation that was made by any kind of an administrator or bureaucrat in any of the hundreds of administrative agencies of the Government takes precedence over any judicial decision handed down by a court of the United States. That is just what we are saying in that provision. We are elevating offhand opinions of bureaucrats above the dignity of judicial decision. I am against that kind of legislation. I am satisfied that the people of the State of Minnesota whom I represent did not send me down here for the purpose of elevating the opinions of bureaucrats above the dignity of judicial proceedings.

May I tell you a little story? About 2,500 workers who live in my district were employed by the Northwest Airlines, with headquarters in St. Paul, Minn.

During the arduous days of the war, the War Department asked Northwest Airlines to operate a bomber-modification plant in St. Paul. With patriotic zeal the Northwest Airlines hired several thousand employees, and for four or five years they very efficiently operated such a bomber-modification plant.

As they started to enlarge their operations, the air-lines officials went to the regional director of the Wage and Hour Administration and said "Are we governed by the Wages and Hours Act?" The regional director said, "Yes." So they came to Washington and asked the National Director, "Are we governed by the Wages and Hours Act?" He said, "Yes." So the Northwest Airlines published notices throughout its plant which stated that employees who worked more than 40 hours a week would collect time and a half for the overtime in accordance with the act.

Then, lo and behold, another bureaucrat came along who headed the wartime railway labor panel and he said: "Why, you people are not governed by the Fair Labor Standards Act; you are governed by the Railway Labor Act. You have to pay time and a half only for all time over 48 hours a week." So the Northwest Airlines said, "Well, we will follow your opinion then."

However, so insecure did they feel at that offhanded opinion contained in a letter that they asked the War Department for legal assurance that they would be reimbursed in case the courts later held that they were governed by the Fair Labor Standards Act. The War Department gave legal assurance that they would pay judgments, attorneys' fees, and costs which might be recovered.

Well, the war is over. These employees instituted a suit about 2½ years ago to determine whether they were governed by the Fair Labor Standards Act or the Railway Labor Act. On January 18 of this year the Federal District Court in the State of Minnesota, through one of the ablest jurists in the United States, held that these employees were entitled to the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVITT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman mean to indicate that this act will affect that judgment?

Mr. DEVITT. Yes; may I advise my colleague from New York that it will. If the gentleman will examine section 4 of this act he will find in line 14 on page 6 that this bill prohibits the courts of the United States from entertaining any suits under this act except such suits in connection with which judgment has been entered and in connection with which the time for appeal has expired. I expect that soon a judgment will be entered in this case, but the time for appealing will not have expired by the time this bill will probably be passed.

This is what happens to the 2,500 people who live in Minnesota if this bill is passed. It means that this offhanded opinion of a Federal administrator 3 or 4 years ago takes precedence over the well-reasoned opinion of a court of the United States. It is not my intention as a Member of this great legislative body to give any kind of encouragement to the raising up in this country of the principle of man-made government. I think this last election evidenced the fact, if it did not evidence anything else, that we want in this country a government of laws rather than a government of men, and we cannot have a government of laws unless we have respect for the dignity and the decisions of courts of the United States.

I intend tomorrow to offer at the appropriate time an amendment to this bill, which in other respects I think is a laudable measure, by the terms of which all of subsection (e) of section 2 will be abolished; or, in the alternative, I will seek to amend section 4 so as to give some kind of validity to the present judgments of United States courts.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVITT. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am wondering in the gentleman has taken into consideration the language which appears in subsection (e) of section 2, which states that the employer may plead and prove that the act or omission complained of was done or omitted in good faith consistent with, required by, or in reliance on any decision of a court of record. In other words, subsection (e) itself, it seems to me, places first the possibility of reliance upon a decision of a court of record.

Mr. DEVITT. May I say that that is not the case. This decision was just handed down on January 18 of this year, so the employer did not rely on the judgment of a court when he failed to pay the overtime in question.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was directing my question to the gentleman's general objection to subsection (e), and saying that subsection (e) itself, it seems to me, places in there the possibility of reliance upon a decision of a court of record.

Mr. DEVITT. If he is a party to the suit, but it does not apply to any other cases to which he is not a party.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman feel that this employer, getting this second ruling, and then immediately going to the Government and getting from the Government an indemnification agreement, could be said to have acted in good faith in reliance on that ruling? It seems to me that when a person is acting in good faith in reliance upon something he does not, shortly thereafter, go out and get someone else to indemnify him. What does the gentleman have to say about that?

Mr. DEVITT. All employers in recent years have been in a quandary with many rulings emanating from hundreds of boards and agencies. I would not offer to presume to judge the motives of an employer because I do not think that would be proper. I am interested in seeing to it that the judgments of courts are not set aside as against the opinions of some bureaucratic agencies.

Mr. KEATING. I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I want to express a word of appreciation for the words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING]. I find myself in much the same quandary with regard to the statute of limitations. I happen to be an employer of labor at the present time and have been for the last 25 years in business enterprises outside of my congressional duties.

Under the present bill, an employee of mine would have 1 year to file suit against me for underpayment of wages. However, in the State of California, I would have 3 years to enter suit against that employee for over-paid wages or for money advanced to him which he, in the way of a loan, would not have had the proper time to pay back to me. It seems to me that if we want to do the fair thing about this, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] said, we will extend the statute of limitations. I say that, in view of the fact that I realize a businessman should know his liabilities for wage payments, but at the same time the sums involved are comparatively small in relation to the total wages paid and total business transactions of most businesses.

It seems to me that in all fairness we should give the worker a little more time, where he is not aware of his rights, and give him the same privilege that the employer has to recover moneys due him from the other party.

Another part of this bill which concerns me deeply is this definition of custom or practice. I understand the Supreme Court has defined work as "physical or mental exertion controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer." Now, I do not think that particular definition is complete. I wish there were an attempt in this bill to give us a little better definition than that. I submit to you that to substitute the words "custom or practice" for this Supreme Court definition is certainly taking a step backward.

I hope an amendment is offered to eliminate that language contained in the section which uses the words "custom or practice." It in effect substitutes it for the present interpretation of "work" by the Supreme Court. If it were the custom or practice for an employer to pay for only a part of the week's work, this practice would be acceptable under this law. A new employer would be free to rewrite the law to suit himself. A competitor of mine, for instance, could start in employing people at 20 percent less than I am paying, and, of necessity, I would have to meet that competition, if it was in manufacturing or in retailing. I could not substantiate my business on a 20-percent higher wage payment. Therefore, the first thing I would do would be to cut my own workers 20 percent. In a surplus labor market it puts labor at the mercy of the lowest chiseling employer. We have tried to get away from chiseling and sweatshop practices for many years. We know it brings no good to the employer and it brings no good to the employees. We have seen the case in the great needlework industry in New York and other populous centers, where the bundle practice of letting out work at very cheap wages, according to contract, if you please—contracts which are permitted under this bill—in violation of certain standards that are set up, such as the minimum-wage law. I think possibly it opens up the field for the old "yellow dog" contract to a certain extent. Certainly we do not want to be a party to any such practice as that.

I agree with many of the progressive Members of the House that many of these portal-to-portal pay suits are not justified. I think a law should be passed to bring justice into this condition which has arisen, but I say to you that this bill as presented certainly needs some correcting in a few instances. I hope amendments are offered tomorrow that I can vote for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, the case which precipitated the bringing of this legislation to the floor of the House originated within a very few miles of my home in Michigan. The court that tried the case is still nearer to my home, in fact, in Detroit, and a part of Detroit is in my congressional district. It is somewhat because of a letter I received a few days ago from a person who was present in the court when this now famous pottery case from Mount Clemens, Mich., was tried, that compels me to express my views regarding it.

We have prided ourselves in this country on our judicial system. We have said to the world that here in the United States of America the poorest and humblest citizen shall have a fair trial in a court of justice, either to have his issues determined by a jury of his peers or to have his case decided by a fair and impartial judge. In fact, on the front entrance of the Supreme Court of the United States in this Capital City are inscribed four words in marble, "Equal justice under law."

I now come to this case and the trial of it. I must say from the information received, if the incident which occurred in that court had not occurred it is very probable that the chaos and confusion now confronting the United States Government and the business and industrial life of the Nation in these portal-to-portal suits, and the 2,000 cases filed in the courts involving nearly $6,000,000,000 in claims, and the legislation before us would never have been heard from. The case was tried by a jury. The jury returned twice to announce to the court they had found in favor of the employer; that there was no justifiable ground for the suit. It was upon the second occasion that the jury emerged from the jury room that the Federal judge said to the jury, according to the letter received—and I think it had some publicity in the press—"This is a prolabor court." The judge might just as well have said, "This court is prejudiced and biased in favor of labor." It would have been equally vicious on the part of the judge to have said, if he had been of different mind, "This is a proemployer court. This court is biased and prejudiced in favor of employers of industry and of business." Such a statement as the judge directed to the jury is at complete variance with the law of the land and the spirit, intent, and meaning of "equal justice under law." When he made that statement he immediately injected into this case what goes to the very root and foundation upon which our judicial system is founded, that is, a trial of law and the facts by a fair and impartial court. He removed himself from fairness and impartiality. I mention this for the reason that the type and form of government which you, my colleagues and I represent in this Chamber is under attack in this world, and anything which strikes at the integrity of our judicial system, being one of the three separate departments of the Government as founded in 1787, strikes at free representative institutions here and everywhere else in this world and becomes a very dangerous thing. In this legislation before us, therefore, is involved more than merely the passage of a bill to correct the chaos and confusion which confronts the people of the United States. A deep and fundamental principle of justice is also at stake.

I hope this bill, H. R. 2157, will be approved not to injure labor but to aid labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back 19 minutes time on this side. I have no further requests for time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have found the time to read this bill and to read the committee report together with the several minority views.

I propose to support the bill as is, unless it is amended. I shall be very glad to support it. If an amendment is submitted which changes the period of the statute of limitations and that holds the time element down to 18 months I think I shall be in position to support that. I would not quarrel too much on a 1-year period for suits involving this particular question.

When a firm today approaches a bank for a line of credit it is necessary for the credit manager of the bank to have in mind portal-to-portal pay suits and possibilities; and this because of the contingent liability which rests on practically all industry which comes under the Fair Labor Standards Act, and therein is where I find my hitching post with respect to the statute of limitations.

I was very much interested in what the gentleman from New York had to say on this particular phase of the bill when he had the floor, and I certainly would not be willing to extend this time to 3 years, or 5 years, or 6 years, because I believe it would be highly destructive to all American labor and American industry generally. It seems to me that those who operate under collective-bargaining agreements have all the time they need in which to file their claims if they have from 6 to 18 months. I have never had a job with a company whether it was a proprietorship, a partnership, or a corporation where I could not bargain with the management and where I could not make up my mind and take such action as I thought was necessary within the period of 1 year. That is the reason I am as friendly to the 1-year proposition set forth in the bill as I am; but, as I say, I might in order to get something through go along with an 18-month period if that proves to be necessary, otherwise hold it to 1 year.

I will vote against anything which goes beyond 18 months if it is submitted in the form of an amendment. I believe that the Congress is in a position where it should act on this question without any further delay. I hope that the other body will take prompt action and that we can get this legislation through the White House and that the President will see fit to approve whatever bill we send down there so that we can get this benefit out to the people of this country.

When I study and try in my limited manner to understand the involvements of the international agreements to which we have become a party, when I consider our present discussions on the budget, the amount of revenue we must raise, when I receive such information as we all received with respect to Britain and the British Empire checking out of the general picture as they are, when I see the necessity of the United States stepping in as Britain steps out, it makes me more anxious to get amendments through to these various labor laws so that the Congress, insofar as it can, will remove the sanctifications and the blessings which we have placed on organized labor and which gives it monopoly powers. A labor monopoly is highly destructive as are other monopolies. I think the Congress should take fast steps to remove those blessings so we can put our house in better order to carry out the obligations which we have assumed and which we shall have to carry out rather than repudiate.

I have no sympathy, Mr. Chairman, with those who constantly approach me with the thought to the effect that the election in November canceled these international agreements. The elections did not do any such thing. Those agreements are not cancelable in that manner. I have had to tell many of my friends that irrespective of how they interpret the November 5 vote we still have these agreements before us, we have to carry them out and we cannot carry them out unless we have full employment in the United States. According to my calculations if we are to substantially meet our present obligations we must have no less than $175,000,000,000 national income annually on today's price level, with people willing to pay a lot of taxes into the Federal Treasury and buy a lot of Government refunding issues and all on the assumption that we can now permanently arrest the growth of the national debt, and not permit it to go beyond where it stands at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEFEVRE].

Mr. LEFEVRE. Mr. Chairman, I very much favor the passage of the Gwynne bill which we are now discussing. This avalanche of portal-to-portal suits brought on by the unions against their employers would wipe out hundreds of industries in our country. A friend of mine very actively interested in what I would consider a very sound business, with a surplus of over $2,000,000, informs me that the union members working for them filed suits for portal-to-portal pay amounting to over $4,000,000. This is money the employers never expected they would be called upon to pay and money the employees never expected to get. In the meantime, just imagine what such a suit, hanging over the head of the company, could do to the credit standing of the company. This bill outlaws portal-to-portal suits unless they relate to activities for which employers are required to pay by custom or contract and provides a 1-year limitation on all future suits for back wages. All back claims are barred unless brought up within 6 months of the passage of the act. It seems to me the provisions in this act are wholly justified. How could any business operate today feeling that at any time they could be sued for more than they are worth by their employees for back pay at the instigation of greedy labor leaders.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Congress hereby finds that serious inequities and hardships have resulted and are resulting from the administration and enforcement of the statutes of the United States mentioned in section 5 of this act, thereby creating a serious national emergency, endangering the public welfare, and giving rise to certain evils hereinafter described; that the statutes above referred to, regulating wages, hours of work, and other conditions of employment, have been and are being administered and interpreted in disregard of long-established customs, practices, and agreements between employers and employees with the result that (1) the retrospective effect of frequent changes and innovations arising in the interpretation and application of such statutes has been and is creating great uncertainty, with new and unexpected financial liabilities upon employers and windfalls of unearned compensation to employees; (2) voluntary collective bargaining is being interfered with and industrial disputes are being created; (3) these new and wholly unexpected liabilities, immense in amount and retroactive in operation, threaten many employers with financial ruin and seriously impair the capital resources of many other employers, thereby resulting in reducing industrial operations, curtailing employment, and the earning power of employees and burdening and obstructing interstate commerce; (4) the Public Treasury will be deprived of large sums of revenue and the public finances seriously deranged by claims against the Public Treasury for refunds of taxes already paid; (5) the cost to the Government of goods and services heretofore and hereafter purchased will be unnecessarily increased, thereby causing serious interference with the development of sound fiscal policies, the stabilization of the currency, and the maintenance of the national credit; and (6) the courts of the country are being burdened with excessive and needless litigation.

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress in order to meet the existing emergency and to correct the existing evils (1) to regulate the jurisdiction of the courts; (2) to relieve and protect interstate commerce from practices which burden and obstruct it; (3) to protect the right of collective bargaining; (4) to recognize bona fide agreements, customs, and practices where not inconsistent with assuring payment of applicable statutory minimum wages or one and one-half basic hourly rate for overtime, by the provisions hereinafter set forth.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM] at the annual session of the American Highway Association.

Mrs. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks she made in Committee and include certain articles.

Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Teaching Is No Longer a Profession—It Is a Procession From the Class Room."

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

ELECTION CONTEST

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was referred to the Committee on House Administration and ordered printed:

FEBRUARY 26, 1947.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: That there is in progress, under the provisions of the statutes, a contest growing out of the election held November 5, 1946, for the seat in the House of Representatives from the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Illinois in the Eightieth Congress is made apparent by the filing in the Clerk's office of the following communications, viz:

1. On December 23, 1946, for information only, by Hon. Harold C. Woodward, of a copy of notice of his intention to contest the election of Hon. THOMAS J. O'BRIEN as the returned Member from the Sixth Congressional District of Illinois.

2. On February 26, 1947, of a letter dated February 25, 1947, from the contestant, Hon. Harold C. Woodward, together with affidavit of personal service of notice of intention to contest and a further copy of said notice.

Since the letter of the contestant (item 2) requests the Clerk to refer this matter to the House of Representatives for appropriate action, and, further, since the question raised by the contestant in this communication will have to be decided by the House itself, the Clerk is transmitting these communications herewith for consideration by the appropriate committee.

Very truly yours,

JOHN ANDREWS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS of Georgia, for 3 days, on account of attendance at funeral of a friend.

To Mr. MACKINNON, for March 3 and 4, on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, instead of taking the time now, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 28, 1947, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 19, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Give to us open minds, O God, minds ready to receive and to welcome such new light of knowledge as it is Thy will to reveal. Let not the past ever be so dear to us as to set a limit to the future. Give us the courage to change our minds, when that is needed. Let us be tolerant of the thoughts of others, for we never know in what voice Thou wilt speak.

Wilt Thou keep our ears open to Thy voice, and make us a little more deaf to whispers of men who would persuade us from our duty, for we know in our hearts that only in Thy will is our peace and the prosperity of our land. We pray in the lovely name of Jesus. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, February 26, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent; the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business; the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness; and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HATCH. My colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained from the Senate and will not be able to attend the session today. I ask that he be excused, and that the announcement stand for the remainder of the week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

REFERENCE OF NOMINATION OF EUGENE R. BLACK TO BE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate the nomination of Eugene R. Black, of New Jersey, to be Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

There is some possibility of controversy, under the language of the Reorganization Act, as to the appropriate committee reference of this nomination. In the opinion of the Chair, however, inasmuch as the legislation establishing the bank originated in the Committee on Banking and Currency, the nomination should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that order will be made, without objection. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and withdrawing two nominations, which nominations were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

TREATIES OF PEACE WITH ITALY, RUMANIA, BULGARIA, AND HUNGARY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith copies of the treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

I transmit also for the information of the Senate the report made to me by the Secretary of State regarding these treaties of peace, and the summary of each treaty which accompanied that report.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1947.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying summaries; 2. Copies of the treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These treaties will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations wishes to announce that a public hearing will be held next Tuesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, at which Secretary Marshall and former Secretary of State Byrnes will appear to present the treaties.

Without objection, the injunction of secrecy is removed from the treaties which have just been reported.

The Chair hears no objection.

PROTOCOL EXTENDING INTERNATIONAL SUGAR AGREEMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification I transmit herewith a certified copy of a protocol dated in London August 30, 1946, prolonging for 1 year after August 31, 1946, the international agreement regarding the regulation of production and marketing of sugar, signed at London on May 6, 1937.

I transmit also for the information of the Senate the report made to me by the Secretary of State with respect to this matter.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1947.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State; 2. Certified copy of the protocol of August 30, 1946.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the protocol and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on February 26, 1947, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 568) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to empower the Civil Aeronautics Board to prescribe rates and practices and to suspend rates of air carriers in foreign air transportation, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN AIRPORTS

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a request of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics Authority to undertake during the fiscal year 1948 certain projects for the development of class 4 and larger airports (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES, INC.

A letter from the secretary of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Board of Directors of that organization for the fiscal year 1946 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNITED STATES TERRITORIAL EXPANSION MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under authority of Public Resolution 32, approved June 15, 1934, the Chair appoints the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] as the members on the part of the Senate of the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission, to fill the vacancies thereon caused by the death of the late Senator Van Nuys, of Indiana, and the expiration of the term of service of Hon. James J. Davis as Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, relating to the cure and control of cancer; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, February 26, 1947, page 1416, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Joint Memorial 1

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do respectfully represent; that—

"Whereas the present emergency farm labor-supply program expires on June 30, 1947; and

"Whereas it appears that farm labor will remain inadequate for at least another crop season; and

"Whereas in view of the continued prospects for an inadequate supply of farm labor it appears most feasible to extend the farm labor-supply program in the same form in which it has operated since 1943; and

"Whereas Idaho farmers need assurance of an adequate supply of labor in order to produce to their fullest capacity such high labor requirement crops as sugar beets and other important Idaho crops needed to maintain ample food resources: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Idaho (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact legislation providing for the continuance of the emergency farm labor-supply program for the 1947 crop season; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of Idaho be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to send copies of this joint memorial to the President of the United States; to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America; to the Senators and Representatives of Idaho in the two Houses of Congress; and to the chairman of the House Agricultural Committee of the Eightieth Congress of the United States."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Memorial 1

"To the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, the United States Maritime Commission, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Delegate from Alaska:

"Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in eighteenth session assembled, respectfully submits that:

"Whereas the legislature has studied Delegate BARTLETT'S telegraphic report relating to the Alaska shipping situation; and

"Whereas the Alaska Steampship Co. and the Northland Transportation Co. have challenged Alaska by threatening to discontinue operation of ships from Seattle on March 1, 1947, if the Territory opposes their recent proposal, by taking same to the Maritime Commission for hearing; and

"Whereas the proposed over-all 35 percent increase would cover passenger fares as well as freight rates, and in practice constitutes an average increase in freight rates of about 45 percent over present levels, which levels already include a 16 percent wartime surcharge, which would be ruinous to the Territory's economy; and

"Whereas previous stoppages of service of said carriers have resulted in groundwork having been laid for establishing other means of transportation, such as an operation by Briggs Steamship Co. from Prince Rupert to southeastern Alaska at 20 percent below present freight rates, and service by Portland interests to westward Alaska; and

"Whereas emergency transportation could be obtained during the threatened shutdown, including possible amendment of section 27 of the Jones Act to permanently remove discrimination against Alaska, or temporary suspension thereof, making Canadian service available; and

"Whereas it is not believed that Seattle distributors and attendant interests would permit any sustained discontinuance of service by carriers headquartered in their city; and

"Whereas the development of Alaska into a strong buffer State is of paramount importance to the national security, which should be safeguarded by unstinting relief with insistence on efficiency measures, to solve this transportation problem, with the view that added development would soon increase freight business to the point where operators could reduce their rates below the present high level, rendering adequate Federal assistance but a temporary burden, in the nature of a sound investment.

"Therefore your memorialist accepts the challenge laid down by the carriers and directs its administrative officers to fight any increase in water-borne freight rates with every means at their disposal, and hereby urges Federal authorities to lend support to the Territory in this matter of national concern.

"And your memorialist will ever pray.

"Passed by the senate February 4, 1947.

"Approved by the governor February 10, 1947.

"ERNEST GRUENING,
"Governor of Alaska."

A resolution adopted by Post No. 1, of the Federal Employees Veterans Association, Philadelphia, Pa., favoring an investigation of the operation and administration of the Veterans Preference Act of 1944; to the Committee on Civil Service.

The petition of the annual provisional conference of the Methodist Church of Puerto Rico, praying for the enactment of legislation to determine the political status of the people of Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MURRAY:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Memorial 1

"Joint memorial of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the State of Montana to the President and the Congress of the United States relative to the postwar construction of an adequate tuberculosis sanitarium for Indians at a suitable location within the State of Montana

"To the President of the United States and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"Whereas there is within Montana a large Indian population on numerous Indian reservations; and

"Whereas the people of Montana are deeply concerned with the extremely high death rate of Montana Indians from tuberculosis; and

"Whereas there are no existing special facilities within the State for their treatment and hospitalization: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Montana, and the House of Representatives concurring, strongly urge that the Congress of the United States include in the Federal postwar building program an appropriation for the construction and equipment of an adequate tuberculosis sanitarium for Indians at some suitable location within the State of Montana; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the Secretary of State to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

"Senate Joint Memorial 2

"Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States petitioning Congress to strengthen present sanitary requirements governing the importation of livestock and livestock products and to appropriate additional funds to the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in order that border inspection may be strengthened and a system of patrol established along the northern boundary of Mexico to guard against the importation of people, animals, and materials carrying the infection of foot-and-mouth disease, and also petitioning Congress to offer to the Government of the Republic of Mexico such facilities as may be available from the Bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and appropriating money to provide for such facilities and to extend financial aid to the Republic of Mexico in order that foot-and-mouth disease may be eradicated.

"To the President of the United States and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"Whereas foot-and-mouth disease now exists in livestock in the Republic of Mexico; and

"Whereas, the disease has spread from the six original states involved in the vicinity of Mexico City as far west and north as the State of Zacatocas; and

"Whereas, it is extremely doubtful if the Government of the Republic of Mexico can eradicate this disease from their livestock without additional assistance; and

"Whereas, the presence of foot-and-mouth disease in the Republic of Mexico presents a very definite threat to the prosperity of the livestock industry and the entire economic welfare of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate and House of Representatives concurring), That we earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to strengthen the present sanitary requirements governing the importation of livestock and livestock products from Mexico and from other countries in which foot-and-mouth disease exists; be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly petition Congress to appropriate additional funds to the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture in order that border inspection may be strengthened and a system of patrol be established along the northern boundary of Mexico to guard against the importation of people, animals, and materials carrying the infection of foot-and-mouth disease; be it further

"Joint memorial to the President and Congress of the United States requesting the introduction and enactment of appropriate legislation authorizing the immediate redemption of bonds issued to the enlisted members of the armed forces for accumulated leave pay under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946

"To the President of the United States and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled and to the Honorable James E. Murray, the Honorable Zales N. Ecton, the Honorable Mike Mansfield, and the Honorable Wesley A. D'Ewart:

"Whereas the avowed purpose of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 is to grant equal treatment in the matter of leave to all personnel of the armed forces; and

"Whereas under the terms of that act commissioned officers continue to receive compensation for accumulated leave in cash while enlisted personnel receive only a fraction of their accumulated leave pay in cash and the balance in bonds which are nonnegotiable and payable only after 5 years from the date of issuance; and

"Whereas the need of former enlisted members of the armed forces for immediate compensation for accumulated leave in cash is, in most cases, greater than that of commissioned officers in order to assist such members in the trying period of readjustment to civilian life, therefore justice and fairness require that such enlisted members should have the benefit of immediate payments under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946; and

"Whereas a consideration of the equities and a balancing of alleged inflationary effects of such payments against the very urgent need of enlisted personnel for such compensation immediately demonstrates that enlisted personnel are entitled to prompt cash payment for all accumulated leave: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact proper legislation providing for the immediate redemption of all bonds issued under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 in cash, and that all future payments under the terms of such act be made in cash; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the chief clerk of the house of representatives to the President of the United States, to the President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from Montana, and to the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD and WESLEY D'EWART, Representatives in Congress from Montana."

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of American to enact legislation relating to the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming

"Whereas the business councils of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming desire and are entitled to the abolishment of the Federal Indian Bureau and the vesting in members of such tribes, of their proper tribal heritages; and

"Whereas there is now pending in the Eightieth Congress of the United States of America, H. R. 1098, proposing authorized division of designated trust funds for joint credit of such tribes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (its House of Representatives concurring), That it is the will of such legislature that said Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes be promptly granted such tribal heritages and that said Indian Bureau be promptly and finally abolished in order that all members of said tribes may fully assume their appropriately independent status and responsibilities as citizens of said United States of America; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of said Congress, to Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, Hon. E. V. ROBERTSON, and Hon. FRANK A. BARRETT, Senators and Representatives respectively in the United States Congress, from Wyoming, and to the following members of said United States Senate's new Civil Service Committee: Senator LANGER, of North Dakota; Senator CHAVEZ, of New Mexico; Senator THYE, of Minnesota; Senator UMSTEAD, of North Carolina; Senator O'CONOR, of Maryland; Senator BALDWIN, of Connecticut, and Senator ECTON, of Montana.

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution related to unfair policies of the Forest Service of the United States with respect to the livestock industry in Wyoming

"Whereas establishment of national forest areas in Wyoming has greatly reduced the total of taxable lands in said State, the related load upon real and personal property of Wyoming livestock growers is greater than that upon property of any other industry in such State and they have always been rightfully dependent upon and entitled to continuity of fair and stabilized Forest Service management programs concerning summer grazing of livestock on such areas, present impairment of which is opposed to the national interest; and

"Whereas greatly too many officials employed by the Federal Government in its administration of affected forestry programs in their bureaucratic disregard of said affected industry's equities, the national interest and related advice from experience-seasoned, capable, and patriotic advisory board members, have adopted policies so vacillating, unreasonable, and dangerously restrictive, that enforced disposition or reduction by such industry of commensurate property and its liquidation of its tax-revenue producing livestock, is assuming alarming, resultant proportions: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (its House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to correct the criticized situation in Wyoming by appropriate legislation after prompt and full investigation by congressional public-lands committees, of all affecting policies and action of and appropriations for, the Forest Service; be it further

"Resolved, That copies hereof be sent to the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, the Honorable E. V. ROBERTSON, and the Honorable FRANK A. BARRETT, Senators and Representative, respectively, in the United States Congress, from Wyoming.

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Resolution 2

"Joint resolution relating to public lands in, and funds and other relief due, the State of Wyoming from the United States of America

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming (two-thirds of all members of each of its two houses, voting separately, concurring therein):

"Whereas lands now constituting the State of Wyoming were acquired largely under treaties with France and Mexico, having provided that the territory embraced under such acquisition 'shall be formed into free, sovereign, and independent States and incorporated into the Union of the United States of America as soon as possible, and the citizens thereof shall be accorded the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities as the citizens of the original States,' and said Louisiana Purchase Treaty with France having contained almost identical requirements; and

"Whereas in the early days of the public domain none questioned but that it should and soon would pass to the several States within which it was situate, the then excuse for withholding such action having been that it was pledged to secure a national debt created by the Revolutionary War but after said debt was paid, such lands having been retained by the Federal Government and funds rapidly accumulated from disposal thereof, with a relatively minor exception, having been loaned to and among the then 26 States of the Union, most of which had never contributed toward such fund, and which fund with accumulated interest is now reported to be in excess of $2,000,000,000, distribution thereof being equitably due to said public-land States; and

"Whereas although the act admitting Wyoming into the Union, approved by the Federal Congress on July 10, 1890, included the express provision that 'the State of Wyoming is hereby declared to be a State of the United States of America and is hereby declared admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever,' and although the United States never asserted ownership of the lands, minerals, or waters of the original States and by paragraph 17 of section 8 of article I of its Constitution, the Federal Congress was authorized to exercise authority over, in addition to the District of Columbia, only such places as the Nation might purchase, by and with the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same are located, for specified purposes not including forests, minerals, monuments, or waters; and

"Whereas instead of vesting in the State of Wyoming full title to all public land within its borders, as legally and equitably due said State under the treaty and constitutional provisions aforesaid, the Federal Government has followed a program of Executive withdrawals under which there have been additional lands eliminated from the tax rolls and control of this State which program included administrative set-up of the so-called Jackson Hole Monument, covering several hundred thousands acres of Wyoming land, portions thereof being privately or State owned, and the will of Congress in setting aside such autocratic Executive action having been defeated by Presidential veto: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (its House of Representatives concurring), That the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, the Honorable EDWARD V. ROBERTSON, and the Honorable FRANK A. BARRETT, Senators and Representative, respectively from Wyoming in the Congress, and the Honorable Lester C. Hunt, Governor of this State, be and they are hereby requested, first, to continue their efficient past action in opposing establishment of said so-called monument; second, to have initiated and diligently prosecuted appropriate legislation by the Congress looking to early restoration to this State or to its citizens of full title to all public-grazing lands inside its boundaries; and, third, to initiate and prosecute in like manner, action looking to recovery by this State of all moneys properly payable to it on account of lands and minerals previously and improperly withdrawn from it or from private ownership, including but not by way of limitation, the proportionate amount due said State on account of the one specific fund previously mentioned, and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies hereof be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Federal Congress, the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, the Honorable EDWARD V. ROBERTSON, and the Honorable FRANK A. BARRETT, Senators and Representative, respectively, in said Congress from Wyoming, and to Hon. Lester C. Hunt, Governor of Wyoming.

RESOLUTION OF NEBRASKA LEGISLATURE RELATING TO FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution adopted by the Nebraska Unicameral Legislature with reference to the foot-and-mouth disease, a subject which has already been acted upon by the Congress, but I think the resolution, with the signatures of the members, should be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with the signatures attached, as follows:

To the President of the United States, the Senate, and the House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas foot-and-mouth disease now exists in livestock in the Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas the disease has spread from the six original states involved in the vicinity of Mexico City as far west and north as the state of Zacatecas; and

Whereas it is extremely doubtful if the government of the Republic of Mexico can eradicate this disease from their livestock without additional assistance; and

Whereas the presence of foot-and-mouth disease in the Republic of Mexico presents a very definite threat to the prosperity of the livestock industry and the entire economic welfare of the United States:

Now, therefore, we the undersigned members of the Sixtieth Session of the Legislature of Nebraska, 1947, petition the Congress of the United States:

1. To strengthen the present sanitary requirements governing the importation of livestock and livestock products from Mexico and from other countries in which foot-and-mouth disease exists.

2. To appropriate additional funds to the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in order that border inspection may be strengthened and a system of patrol be established along the northern boundary of Mexico to guard against the importation of people, animals, and materials carrying the infection of foot-and-mouth disease.

3. To offer to the government of the Republic of Mexico such facilities and assistance as may be available from the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and to appropriate funds to provide for this assistance and to provide direct financial aid to the government of the Republic of Mexico in order that foot-and-mouth disease be eradicated from their livestock.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF SOUTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE RELATING TO SUGAR

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a concurrent resolution adopted by the House and Senate of the State of South Carolina memorializing and petitioning the Congress of the United States and other agencies of the Federal Government to take whatever steps are needful and necessary to make a greater amount of sugar available to the American people.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution memorializing and petitioning the Congress of the United States and other agencies of the Federal Government to take whatever steps needful and necessary to make a greater amount of sugar available to the American people

Whereas sugar has always been the most indispensable and the best loved essential in the diet of the American people; and

Whereas for years this element of saccharin bliss has been only enough to tease and never enough to satisfy the palate of 140,000,000 Americans; and

Whereas to the appetite that cries out for jams, jellies, preserves, frosted cakes, pies, and candies even as the ancient Hebrews sighed for the fleshpots of Egypt the mere canning of fruits and the gnawing of sweet-potato candy can never bring to the sweet tooth of the American people that feeling of deep content and satisfaction which long has been its solace and heritage; and

Whereas soon every household in the land will have access to another crop of berries, fruits, and produce which, without adequate sugar become as tasteless and unsatisfying as the apples of Sodom; and

Whereas in order to secure again a reasonable indulgence of appetites long sensitive to the sweet and the delectable the American people are willing to part with a little more money, which satisfieth not, in exchange for more sugar, which satisfieth much: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully and prayerfully implored, memorialized and petitioned to take whatever steps needful and necessary, along with any and all other agencies of the Federal Government, to make available at whatever cost more of this delightful and tantalizing element of nutritional enjoyment commonly known as sugar to the end that once again meal time may become the sweet and pleasurable hour for which millions of American homes have long sighed and pined in vain; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Presiding Officer of each House of the Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Representative in the two Houses of Congress from the State of South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FREE SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter addressed to me by Jesse T. Anderson, State superintendent of education of my State, showing the necessity for additional appropriations for the free hot-lunch program for the children of South Carolina.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
Columbia, S. C., February 21, 1947.

Senator BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MAYBANK: We are now facing a situation that will be most detrimental to the program unless some additional Federal funds are made available through a deficiency appropriation. We find that South Carolina will need $320,965 more to continue the program until the end of the school term. Without this, our money will run out between the 15th of March and the 1st of April.

As you know, the hot-lunch program in South Carolina has met with marked success and our State legislature has probably gone further than most of the States in providing for the services. You will recall that the State pays the salary of a supervisor for each county and appropriates an additional $150,000 that is given to the county boards of education in promoting the program, and it would be a calamity upon our program should we be forced to close our lunchrooms. It is practically impossible for the school-lunch program to continue without Federal funds and I am herewith urging you to use your influence in seeing that the deficiency appropriation is made and that South Carolina's needs will be met.

With best wishes to you, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

JESSE T. ANDERSON,
State Superintendent of Education.

PROTESTS AGAINST DISCONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN SERVICES BY WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD five telegrams which I have received from my State of North Dakota; one from the Rudolf Hotel, another from the Anderson Furniture Co., a third from the Valley City Times-Record, one from Duffy Motors, and one from Valley City Junior Chamber of Commerce, all of Valley City, N. Dak.

I might call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at the time the vote was taken on the measure providing for the consolidation of the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Cos. 11 Senators voted against the consolidation. We said at that time that it would create a monopoly. The telegrams ask that the Western Union Telegraph Co. be prohibited from shortening the hours of service at certain of its offices and closing certain of its offices.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

VALLEY CITY, N. DAK., February 21, 1947.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Western Union imperative to our business as well as others in community. Please try to discontinue shortening of office hours and closing office.

ALLOWANCES GRANTED CHILDREN OF VETERANS

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD excerpts from a letter written to me by the widow of a veteran of the last war, a man who gave his life in the battle of the North Atlantic, commenting upon the monthly allowance to a growing child under the present law and commenting on a proposed law which would increase the allowances for the support and maintenance of widows of veterans who gave their lives for their country, and also providing for their children.

There being no objection the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., February 20, 1947.
The Honorable RAYMOND E. BALDWIN,
Senator from Connecticut,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BALDWIN: * * * Because you have introduced this bill, I know that you are aware that $15 is an inadequate amount for the monthly allowance of a growing child. At the present level of prices the milk requirement alone, for a child, consumes more than 50 percent of the monthly allowance. You may have noticed in the newspapers recently, a case in the Connecticut courts, where the children's aid asked $14 weekly from a father for the board, medical and dental care of a child. They deemed this amount necessary for the care of the child.

I believe the greatest honor we can do these men, who have given their lives, is to see that their children have the security and freedoms for which they fought. I am sure that my husband, a brilliant young physician who lost his life in the North Atlantic in 1943, while serving with the United States Coast Guard, would ask no greater memorial than the welfare and security of his sons.

Believe me,
Yours faithfully,
FRANCES F. CHAMBERLIN
(Mrs. T. L.).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. J. Res. 69. Joint resolution to prepare a revised edition of the Annotated Constitution of the United States of America as published in 1938 as Senate Document 232 of the Seventy-fourth Congress; with an amendment (Rept. No. 41).

By Mr. MAGNUSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 42).

By Mr. BRIDGES, from the Committee on Appropriations:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I ask unanimous consent to report two bills which have been introduced at the request of the Treasury Department. The Banking and Currency Committee has considered them, and I now report the bills from that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received, and the bills will be placed on the calendar.

By Mr. FLANDERS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 565. A bill to amend section 3539 of the Revised Statutes, relating to taking trial pieces of coins; without amendment (Rept. No. 39); and

S. 566. A bill to amend sections 3533 and 3536 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins; without amendment (Rept. No. 40).

ADVERSE REPORT OF A NOMINATION

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Public Works, I ask unanimous consent to submit an adverse report on the nomination of Gordon R. Clapp, of Tennessee, to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the remainder of the term expiring 9 years after May 18, 1945, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

REPORT ON ACTIVITIES OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION CONFERENCE AT MONTREAL, CANADA

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have made a part of my remarks and printed in the body of the RECORD a statement in the nature of a report to the Senate on the activities of the International Labor Organization Conference at Montreal, Canada, September 19 to October 9, 1946, at which conference I had the honor to be one of the national representatives of the United States.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, an important conference of most of the nations of the world has recently been concluded. The twenty-ninth session of the International Labor Conference was held in Montreal, Canada, from September 19 to October 9, 1946. Forty-six member nations sent representatives, and two nonmember nations, the Philippine Republic and El Salvador, sent observers. There were 8 representatives of the United Nations, 5 representatives of other specialized international agencies, and 14 representatives of provincial governments among the 429 persons participating in the conference.

I attended this conference as one of the two Government delegates nominated by the Secretary of Labor and appointed by the President of the United States.

Members of the Senate will recall that the ILO is an association of nations that has been in existence for 27 years. Fifty-two nations are members of the organization. The ILO is unique among international organizations—both management and labor are voting partners in the work of the ILO. At this twenty-ninth session of the conference, Mr. James David Zellerbach represented American employers, Mr. Robert J. Watt represented the workers of the United States, and Assistant Secretary of Labor David A. Morse and I were the Government delegates. Mr. AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, of the House, and Miss Frieda Miller, of the Department of Labor, served as substitute delegates. There were also qualified technical persons present to advise the Government, employer, and worker delegates. It was a well-rounded and cooperative delegation—a good team.

Important action was taken at this conference. First, from the standpoint of international significance was the approval of the draft agreement between the ILO and the United Nations. This was the first agreement negotiated under article 57 of the United Nations Charter. When the agreement was approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations in December 1946, the ILO was thereupon brought into relationship with the United Nations Economic and Social Council as a specialized agency.

The agreement will permit the ILO to continue its unique position as an organization devoted to improving working conditions and raising living standards throughout the world. It will also permit cooperation with the United Nations Economic and Social Council to accomplish their mutual objectives of promoting higher living standards, full employment, and social and economic progress and development. Finally, the agreement provides for coordination in the administration of ILO and United Nations affairs for reasons of efficiency and economy.

Both contracting organizations believe that their association will contribute greatly to the realization of their mutual objectives. As Secretary-General Trygve Lie, of the United Nations, told the conference:

"The United Nations needs the full and active support of the International Labor Organization. On the other hand, the International Labor Organization is bound to be strengthened by its close relationship with the United Nations and other specialized agencies."

The Secretary-General also told the Conference of the effect ILO had already had upon the United Nations. He said:

"The successful experience of the International Labor Organization was the most important single factor in developing the new idea of specialized agencies. That experience proved the value of separate organizations, with a large measure of autonomy, operating as instruments of international cooperation in their specific fields."

The second important achievement of the conference was the amendment of the ILO constitution. The experiences of the ILO during the war, the dissolution of the League of Nations, and the establishment of the United Nations were factors requiring revision of the constitution of the Organization.

The Conference had placed before it for adoption a substantial number of significant amendments to the constitution. These amendments were adopted by the Conference and now must be ratified by member states. Since the United States is one of the eight states of chief industrial importance, five of which must ratify amendments before they take effect, this Government's ratification of these amendments is of real importance to the Organization. Ratification of these amendments is also of importance to this Government because the amendments satisfy in almost every detail the interests of the United States and will, it is believed, greatly strengthen the ILO as the principal international agency for raising labor standards. The Congress will have to take action, and I am informed that proper measures are being taken to present the revised constitution to us for consideration. Since United States membership in the ILO was taken by the President upon the basis of a joint resolution of both Houses, it may be appropriate for the revised constitution to be ratified in the same manner. In connection with ratification of the revised constitution of the ILO, the Senate may be interested to know that the representatives of the governors of 43 States endorsed it at the thirteenth national conference on labor legislation held in December 1946. This is particularly significant in view of the increased State participation in ILO work made possible by the new constitution.

Two of the amendments to the constitution merit brief discussion:

1. PROVISIONS FOR APPLICATION OF CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The present constitution provides that conventions or recommendations adopted by the Conference are to be submitted by member governments to the appropriate national authorities for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the case of a convention, if the member obtains the consent of the competent authorities, it communicates a formal ratification to the ILO and reports annually to the ILO on the measures it has taken to give effect to the convention. If a convention is not ratified, or no action is taken on a recommendation, no further obligation rests upon the member. In the case of federal states, like the United States, the power of which to enter into conventions on labor matters is limited, the governments are permitted to treat conventions as recommendations.

The Conference delegation considering revision of the constitution took the view that the work of the organization to raise labor standards might be made more effective by providing for a system of reporting on the extent to which effect is given to any of the provisions of an unratified convention and stating the difficulties which prevent or delay the ratification of the convention.

At the Conference itself, the government representatives of Australia, Canada, and the United States recommended a joint amendment, which clarified further the obligations to be assumed by Federal States. This joint amendment was presented to the constitutional questions committee by the United States Government representative and was adopted without objection. It provides that for conventions covering subjects that lie within the power of the Federal Governments, the obligations of Federal Governments are the same as governments of nonfederal states. In the case of conventions the subject matter of which, in whole or in part, is appropriate for action by constituent States, the Federal Government will refer the convention to the States for the enactment of legislation or other action, and will report to the ILO the extent to which effect is given to any of the provisions of the conventions through Federal or State action.

In recommending this amendment, Mr. David Morse stated:

"In undertaking this obligation, my Government is fully aware of and willing to assume the enormous administrative burden entailed in dealing with 48 State jurisdictions and reporting on their actions. In this connection it is worthy of note that in many instances our States have already surpassed the standards set by ILO recommendations and conventions. Never before, however, were we in a position to obtain formal reports on these matters. Consequently, the proposed amendment will make possible more accurate reflection of the United States' real position with respect to the application of conventions."

2. PROVISIONS CONCERNING NONMETROPOLITAN TERRITORIES

The Conference delegation proposed and the Conference adopted changes designed to increase the participation of nonmetropolitan territories in the works of the ILO. Article 3 was amended to authorize each member nation responsible for the international relations of nonmetropolitan territories to appoint representatives of the territories as additional advisers to its delegates with regard to matters concerning the non-self-governing territories or within their self-governing powers.

Conference delegation proposals dealing with nonmetropolitan territories were clarified by a joint amendment to article 35 proposed by the United States, Great Britain, and the Netherlands. Under this amendment the procedure for application of conventions to nonmetropolitan territories has been clarified and strengthened.

The third important accomplishment of the Conference was the adoption of three conventions and two recommendations for the protection of children and young workers. The interest of the ILO in development of international regulations for the protection of working children dates back to the very beginning of the Organization's work. At the first ILO Conference, held in 1919, two conventions dealing with minimum age and regulation of night work for children in industry were adopted. Action was taken with respect to standards for children in nonindustrial occupations in 1932 when a minimum-age convention was adopted.

At the Montreal Conference further action was taken for the protection of children and young people. The Conference adopted conventions concerning (1) medical examination for fitness for employment in industry of children and young persons, (2) medical examination of children and young persons for fitness for employment in nonindustrial occupations, (3) restriction of night work of children and young persons in nonindustrial occupations and recommendations concerning these subjects. All except the convention concerning medical examination for employment in nonindustrial occupations were adopted unanimously. The recommendations define more explicitly the scope of the conventions and set up more detailed administrative principles and procedures for carrying out the conventions. These conventions and recommendations represent a great step forward in the protection of children and young workers.

The fourth important achievement of the Conference was action preparing for the adoption at the Geneva Conference this June of conventions dealing with non-self-governing territories. At the twenty-sixth session of the International Labor Conference in Philadelphia in 1944 and at the twenty-seventh session in Paris the following year attention was given to the question of social problems and labor standards in non-self-governing territories. Recommendations concerning them were adopted at both Philadelphia and Paris. Certain provisions of these recommendations were deemed appropriate for conventions and were put on the agenda for first discussion at the Montreal Conference.

In accordance with regular ILO procedure, the office prepared a detailed set of draft conclusions which constituted the basis of discussion in the committee on social policy in dependent territories at this Conference. I had the honor to serve as chairman of this committee. We agreed upon the texts of three "conclusions" for approval by the Conference relating to proposed conventions concerning (1) social policy in nonmetropolitan territories, (2) application to such territories of international labor standards contained in 12 existing conventions, and (3) maximum length of contracts. The Conference adopted the report of the committee.

The Conference also adopted resolutions submitted to it by the committee drawing attention of member countries to the need of ratification and application of previously adopted conventions on forced labor, and on recruitment, contracts, and penal sanctions in the employment of indigenous workers; placing the three conclusions on the agenda of the next conference for final decision on conventions covering their provisions; inviting the governing body to take action regarding technical assistance by the office to governments requesting it, regular meetings to implement the proposed convention on social policy, and an ILO branch office in Africa.

Action was taken with respect to a number of other matters coming before the conference, but consideration of these is beyond the scope of this report.

The ILO's association with the United Nations will provide an opportunity for increased service in the cause of peace and improved living standards throughout the world. As a specialized international agency of proved efficiency, the ILO will be in a strategic position to assist materially in the realization of the objectives of the United Nations.

The ILO has outlined for itself an ambitious program. In addition to the regular sessions of the governing body and the conference, the Organization will attempt to hold annual meetings of its eight industrial committees. There will also be regional conferences from time to time, such as the Asiatic Regional Conferences scheduled for 1947 and 1948.

The twenty-ninth session of the International Labor Conference accomplished much. Its achievements afford clear and convincing evidence of the vitality of the ILO and the effectiveness of international cooperation in improving working standards and living conditions throughout the world.

An invaluable concomitant of such international cooperation to establish social justice is world peace. Establishment of the United Nations carried us one step ahead on the road to world peace. Bringing other international agencies like the ILO into relationship with the United Nations has strengthened our facilities for international cooperation and taken us another step forward on this road to peace. To take two steps in the same direction is to walk. We are now walking toward peace. Walking may be a discouragingly slow means of locomotion. International cooperation for peace is, however, still in its infancy, and children must learn to walk before they can run. I have faith in the natural course of human development.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 729. A bill to provide for the payment in a lump sum to Montana State College of national service life insurance granted the late Ralph Coldwater; and

S. 730. A bill to provide pensions for disabled veterans of the World War under similar conditions, and in the same amounts, as now provided for disabled veterans of the Spanish-American War; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 731. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, so as to exempt from the requirements of sections 6 and 7 of such act employees engaged in the capacity of outside buyers; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(Mr. BUTLER also introduced Senate bill 732, to provide for the granting of honorable discharges to certain persons who served in the armed forces during World War I, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. CAIN:

S. 733. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the property and facilities of the Rainier National Park Co. within the Mount Rainier National Park, Wash., to repair and reconstruct same, and to construct such new facilities as may be necessary to assure adequate summer and winter accommodations for the public visiting said park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MOORE (for himself and Mr. FERGUSON):

S. 734. A bill to amend the Natural Gas Act approved June 21, 1938, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. REED:

S. 735. A bill to amend paragraph 15 (a), section 1, of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McGRATH:

S. 736. A bill authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight saving time in the District of Columbia during 1947; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MYERS:

S. 737. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Wadlow; and

S. 738. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal," approved May 29, 1944; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. 739. A bill authorizing the transfer to the United States Section, International Boundary and Water Commission, by the War Assets Administration of a portion of Fort McIntosh at Laredo, Tex., and certain personal property in connection therewith, without exchange of funds or reimbursement; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. LUCAS:

S. 740. A bill to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Naka Matsukata Rawsthorne; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEWART:

S. 741. A bill providing for immediate cash redemption of bonds issued pursuant to the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 and for future payment of terminal leave compensable under such act in cash; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 742. A bill for the relief of R. C. Owen; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 743. A bill to provide for an increase of 20 percent in the monthly rates of pension payable to veterans of the Spanish-American War and their dependents; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. EASTLAND:

S. 744. A bill to prohibit the Government from furnishing stamped envelopes containing any lithographing, engraving, or printing; and

S. 745. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cottonseed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes," approved August 7, 1916; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 746. A bill for the relief of Robert E. Graham; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPEHART:

S. 747. A bill for the relief of J. H. Westfield; and

S. 748. A bill for the relief of Margaret Dunn; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRICKER (for himself, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia):

S. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution to provide for the temporary continuation of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with respect to the importing, purchase, production, allocation, and disposition of rubber; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HONORABLE DISCHARGES TO CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for the granting of honorable discharges to certain persons who served in the armed forces during World War I. I request that a statement prepared by me in explanation of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection the statement presented by the Senator from Nebraska will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 732) to provide for the granting of honorable discharges to certain persons who served in the armed forces during World War I, introduced by Mr. BUTLER, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The statement presented by Mr. BUTLER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUGH BUTLER

Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today is designed to do justice to a large class of men who received discharges other than honorable from the United States Army during World War I.

During 1917 and 1918, a large number of enemy aliens became members of the United States armed forces. In the case I have particularly in mind, Fred F. Koslowski, a respected citizen of my State, Polish by origin, but classed as a German national because his part of Poland was at that time under German rule, was a sergeant in the Army. He had already taken out his first naturalization papers. The Army, however, decided to force the discharge of as many enemy aliens as possible, but to refuse to grant them honorable discharges. Mr. Koslowski was told bluntly that he would have no chance to become an officer or to serve overseas and that he might as well resign. His discharge was "other than honorable." Since that time, he has acquired American citizenship and has maintained the same fine record of citizenship and service that his record shows he rendered in the Nebraska National Guard and later in Federal service.

His case has been taken up with the War Department on several occasions, but the War Department has persistently refused to grant an honorable discharge. The last letter I have received from the War Department indicates clearly to me that the Department did not even trouble to give the case careful consideration.

Mr. President, last summer in the Congressional Reorganization Act, we decided to stop the practice of introducing individual bills for correction of military records. In that act, we granted full authority to the War Department to correct injustices. In this case, the injustice is apparent. This honorable discharge is being denied for no reason except that the man in question was at that time a German national. It happens that, being a Pole, he was probably much more bitterly anxious to fight against the Germans than were many of our own citizens. Nevertheless, he was denied promotion and virtually forced to accept a discharge without honor. If this is not injustice, I have never seen it. If the War Department does not intend to use its authority to correct injustice to better effect than this, it occurs to me that we may have to return to the practice of handling these cases by private bills, much as I would regret such a step.

My bill would simply direct that honorable discharges be granted to those men in the position of Mr. Koslowski, who were forced out of the service without honor by reason of their nationality and who later became United States citizens.

HELEN A. GRICKIS

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, and request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 88) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Helen A. Grickis, the sum of $297.82, as compensation for services performed by her in distributing the Final Report of the Special Committee Investigating Petroleum Resources, in answering the accumulated correspondence, and in performing other duties incident to the termination of the work of said committee during the period of February 1 to 25, 1947, said sum to be paid from the balance remaining to the credit of said committee.

INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. BREWSTER, from the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 89), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, agreed to March 1, 1941, and resolutions supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, including Senate Resolution 46, Eightieth Congress, first session, agreed to January 22, 1947 (relating to the investigation of the national defense program) is hereby increased by $150,000.

COMPENSATION OF DEPUTY CLERKS AND COMMISSIONERS OF DISTRICT COURTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. EASTLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 157) to amend the act entitled "An act defining the compensation of persons holding positions as deputy clerks and commissioners of United States district courts, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1938, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

EXEMPTION OF EMPLOYERS FROM LIABILITY FOR PORTAL-TO-PORTAL WAGES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McGRATH submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 70) to exempt employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, and for other purposes, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 70) to exempt employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE PACKING OF SAUERKRAUT IN NO. 2 CANS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, today I addressed to Hon. Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture, and Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Administrator, Office of Temporary Controls, a letter inviting their attention to what I think is a very serious case of bureaucratic bungling. I called attention to the fact that certain officials in the Office of Temporary Controls who are administering Order M–81 to grant application for the packing of sauerkraut in No. 2 cans are "missing the boat." Former President Hoover in a statement printed in this morning's newspapers says that the food situation in Germany is very critical, and calls for the appropriation of nearly one-half billion dollars to be used in an effort to keep starvation and the ensuing deterioration and disorder from that country. Yet, here at home a policy is being followed under which certain foods are permitted to perish. This letter goes into details on the subject, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 28, 1947.

Hon. CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

Gen. PHILIP B. FLEMING,
Administrator, Office of Temporary Controls, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I am addressing this letter to you to invite your attention to what I regard as a most serious case of bureaucratic bungling and blockheadedness; namely, the refusal of certain officials in the Office of Temporary Controls, who administer Order M–81, to grant applications for the packing of sauerkraut in No. 2 cans.

While this may seem at first glance a purely isolated and minor case, nevertheless it affects so many cabbage growers and canners in my own and other States and it so symbolizes the type of work of bureaucratic square pegs in round holes that I am addressing this urgent letter to you and to other officials who I hope will take immediate corrective action on it.

The headlines tell us this very morning of former President Hoover's appeal for food for the stricken German population, and of the grim want and hunger throughout the world. Why, then, should not urgent action be taken to put to good use the supply of vitamin-rich sauerkraut instead of allowing it to spoil as much of it now seems, unfortunately, destined to do?

The sauerkraut packing industry has addressed repeated appeals for No. 2 cans and sufficient tin for the packing of kraut which is now filling the industry's tanks. I should like to cite the various facts which it seems to me irrefutably reenforce these appeals:

1. Urgency of need: We may note first that the industry's tanks are filled at the present time to 70-percent capacity, whereas the normal percentage at this time of year is 20 to 25 percent. The normal kraut-consuming season will be past its peak in another 30 days. With the use of No. 2 cans, the industry would be able to move between 20 and 25 percent of the kraut in its tanks in the next 30 days.

The kraut industry cannot plan for the next season with its tanks 70 percent full of bulk kraut at the present time. If uncorrected, this condition will result in upsetting of the economic structure of the portion of the food industry that pertains to cabbage growing and kraut packing. The cabbage growers cannot possibly move their cabbage crop, since the kraut industry will not be able to take care of same unless it has immediate relief. The result will be that the Department of Agriculture will be faced with a tremendous crop of cabbage for which it will have to find a home.

In the normal years before the war 25 percent of the entire industry's pack was put in No. 2 tins and the percentage was increasing every year. In the Middle West, as high as 70 percent of individual packs were put in No. 2 tins; therefore, the industry is losing a considerable distribution.

2. Potential loss to Government: The United States Government will face a loss of revenue from taxes on an industry valued at from seven to nine million dollars, plus possible retroactive tax claims against the Government on losses for the year 1947.

3. Reasons for need of No. 2 can: Since the end of World War II, hundreds of thousands of GI's and their families (consisting of a wife and possibly one child) have been forced to live in trailers and one-room shacks due to the housing shortage. They have no refrigeration equipment and will not buy a No. 2½ can of kraut, which contains approximately 30 ounces of kraut, because they cannot use this amount in one meal. The average small family, even if it has refrigeration facilities, will not buy a 30-ounce can of kraut which it cannot use in one meal, as it will not put the remainder of the kraut in the refrigerator because the aroma might permeate the other foods. The majority of the kraut packers have received countless numbers of requests for a No. 2 can size of sauerkraut, the reasons being that the No. 2½ can, which is the smallest size permitted under M–81, results in the spoilage of the unused portion of the product after the meal, for the reasons stated above.

4. Discrimination against kraut-packing industry: The movement of the kraut has been held up since last fall due to the fact that the industry was not permitted the use of No. 2 tins, while some 45 other vegetable items were permitted the use of No. 2 tins and smaller sizes. During the war, dog foods, oil, kraut, and other items were not permitted the use of tin for civilian sale. While dog foods and the other industries were again given tin even before they had purchased the necessary raw materials, their can sizes were not restricted. Yet kraut was not permitted to use No. 2 cans even after the packers had already purchased their raw material. The kraut industry is one of the oldest canning industries, while many other enterprises like dog food in tin are relatively new.

5. Saving of materials through No. 2 can: The permitted use of No. 2 cans for the packing of kraut would only increase the use of tin 10.3 percent on that portion of the kraut put into No. 2 cans. However, the use of No. 2 cans would save materially on the steel requirements, because the No. 2 can is made up of a body of 90 gage and ends of 95 gage, while the No. 2½ can is made up of both body and ends of 95 gage.

6. Splendid record of kraut industry: May I remind you, gentlemen, that the kraut industry has always done more than its share in cooperating with the Government. During the war, for instance, the industry often took care of surplus cabbage crops from Wisconsin to Texas and from California to New York.

These facts, it seems to me, justify immediate action for relief of the kraut industry from order M–81 in order to allow it No. 2 cans for packing.

Looking forward to hearing from you on this matter and with every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER WILEY.

BROADCAST BY STATION WFIL, PHILADELPHIA, OF TRIAL OF THE COINS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on February 12, 1947, WFIL, Philadelphia, made the first broadcast in the history of one of the country's oldest ceremonial functions. As ordered by Federal statute in 1792, the United States Mint at Philadelphia held the annual Trial of the Coins. This year's Assay Commission is the one hundred and fifty-fifth in our country's history, 154 having been held in Philadelphia, while one, in the year 1801, was held in Washington. Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Director of the United States Mint, conducted the broadcast.

Because of its educational importance, particularly to Philadelphia school children, WFIL considered this event a "must" in the interest of public service. This station is one of the most influential forces in the community and I congratulate it upon the fine service which it is rendering to the people of Pennsylvania.

GRAZING LANDS—ARTICLE BY FREDERICK P. CHAMP

HOUSING FOR VETERANS (H. DOC. NO. 151)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1578.)

REPORT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1574.)

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation at the moment is as follows: The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], to strike out in line 4 the numeral "3" and in lieu thereof to insert the numeral "1." Upon the amendment to the amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Senate is proceeding under a 20-minute limitation on debate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is recognized.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on the proposal of the Senator from California to make a compulsory application to the national debt of $3,000,000,000 of any excess. The figures in the resolution, as it has now been amended by the Senate, show that our estimates are $39,100,000,000 for receipts and $33,000,000,000 for expenditures, or a total excess of $6,100,000,000. The application of $3,000,000,000 on the debt would leave approximately $3,000,000,000 available for tax reduction.

My own feeling is very strong that the question of tax reduction is more important at the present time than the question of the reduction of the debt. That is due in part to the fact that we do not have a normal budget. Our expenditures are steadily decreasing. After this year they should be decreased by four or five billion dollars more. There is still a substantial amount of expenditures as a result of the aftermath of the war, which expenditures will disappear in the next year or 2 years.

I think the Senator from California is correct in stating that in the Reorganization Act itself there is a reference to the application of funds to reduce the debt, although it is somewhat indefinite. The La Follette-Monroney Act provides that if the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, the report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. It does not specify the amount, but probably the spirit of the act is that some amount should be named; and I have no objection to naming an amount, although I really prefer to determine at a later date what disposition is to be made of the $6,000,000,000 of excess. It seems to me that the less we tie our hands beyond what is actually required by law, the better off we shall be.

I believe that a reduction of $3,000,000,000 in the public debt at the present time would not be a good thing for the economy of the country during the next year. I think it should be pointed out that that would mean taking from the people of the United States $3,000,000,000 more than we are paying out. That is to say, we would be reducing the purchasing power of the people by $3,000,000,000.

Furthermore, we are also taxing, and properly charging to the budget, all the receipts for the old-age pension fund, for the unemployment trust fund, for veterans' life insurance, for the Federal employees' retirement fund, and for the railroad retirement account, and we are paying out of those funds very much less than we are taking in. In other words, we are taxing the people through those funds approximately $2,700,000,000 more than we are actually paying out of the funds. So the net result, if the amendment of the Senator from California should be adopted, would be to take away from the people of the United States during the next fiscal year approximately $5,780,000,000 more than the Government would pay out. We should be reducing the purchasing power of the people by that much.

I doubt whether that is a wise thing to do. The President's Economic Report calls attention to the fact that there is danger of a steady decrease in purchasing power during the next year. He says:

> Maximum production and employment this year would yield a substantial increase in the available supply of consumer goods and services, especially in the area of durable goods. This requires higher real purchasing power to take the goods off the market. If price and wage adjustments are not made, and made soon enough, there is danger that consumer buying will falter, orders to manufacturers will decline, production will drop, and unemployment will occur.

I do not know how great that danger is, but it seems to me that as a matter of degree we should be making a mistake now if we were to commit ourselves to take out of the people's purchasing power $5,700,000,000 more than the Government is spending or giving back to the people. I believe that an annual reduction in the debt of between one billion and two billion dollars is desirable. I point out that the actual existence of the debt is not at the time a danger. The danger was in the increase of the debt when we inflated purchasing power by tremendous figures, beyond anything that we were taking away from the people, and created a steadily rising price and wage level. Of course the debt should be reduced, but I think the reduction should be gradual, and not so fast as to have a deflationary influence, or result in a reduction of the proper standards of activity in the United States. Of course that is a question of degree. I should like to reduce the debt to a sufficient extent every year so that the credit of the Government would remain good, and its bonds would be strong, and so that gradually we could get down to a figure from which we could start with greater safety if we should have another war or another extraordinary emergency in the United States.

Furthermore, apart from the question of the effect of taking this money away from the purchasing power of the people, it seems to me that tax reduction in itself is an end. Everyone must admit, I believe, that the very purpose of cutting the budget and trying to accomplish the results which we are now trying to accomplish is to reduce the tax burden on the people of the United States. The only question involved is a question of timing. Should we do it this year, or wait until 12 months from now?

I think we should make such a tax reduction today. I think it is desirable and necessary if we are to encourage the people to start new businesses, to reorganize their old businesses, and to put money into new enterprises which will furnish new jobs and maintain the present high level of employment, which is high because of many rather extraordinary circumstances. Wartime activities must be replaced by more permanent and normal peacetime activities.

I believe that it is worth while to call attention to the taxes now imposed by the Government, merely from the standpoint of the tremendous burden which they place on most of the people of the United States. In this discussion I shall deal only with those who are today receiving incomes of $5,000 a year or less. It is rather interesting to note that the group receiving $5,000 a year or less is by far the overwhelming majority of those who pay taxes.

Today returns are filed by 44,817,360 persons who receive $5,000 a year or less, as compared with 1,866,000 returns from those receiving more than $5,000 a year. The question of tax reduction and its effect on economy is primarily a question of the tax on those with incomes of $5,000 and less.

A single man or woman—a schoolteacher, for example, who receives $1,000 a year must pay $95 in taxes. I do not know how a person can live on $1,000 a year.

A married couple with an income of $1,500 must pay $95 in taxes.

A married couple with one child and an income of $2,000 must pay $95 in taxes.

A single woman with an income of $1,500 must pay $190 in taxes.

A married couple with an income of $2,000 must pay $190 in taxes, or practically 10 percent of what they receive. I do not know of any married couples who find it easy to live on $2,000.

A married couple with one child and a total income of $2,500 must pay $190 in taxes.

A married couple with an income of $3,000 must pay $380 in taxes.

A married couple with an income of $4,000 must pay $589 in taxes.

A married couple with a gross income of $5,000 must pay $800 in taxes.

That is a perfectly terrific burden on the people of the United States. Forty-five million taxpayers fall in that class. Whatever the burden may be on those who receive from $12,500 to $15,000, as do Senators, the burden is nothing like that falling on those with incomes of $5,000 and less.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this point. If I have to take time on the resolution itself, I shall yield.

Mr. President, I believe very strongly that taxes themselves are a tremendous burden. In the upper brackets they are a deterrent. Many corporation executives, for example, feel that it is useless to work any harder. They would rather go to Florida and earn less, because the Government takes practically all the additional money they can earn.

I find the same tendency among writers. When they find the Government taking 75 percent of their earnings they do not care to work. Taxes are a general deterrent in that respect.

In the upper brackets, with a tremendous tax, people are deterred from putting money into risk enterprises. They would rather put it into Government bonds and receive 1 percent than to take a chance on losing it in projects that would put people to work and develop industry. It is far better from their standpoint, under present tax rates, simply to take a safe return and not go into a game in which, if they lose, they lose their own money, or if they win, the Government takes it all away from them.

The total burden of Federal taxation is $39,100,000,000. If there be added ten or eleven billion dollars of State and local taxes it amounts to approximately $51,000,000,000 out of a national income of $160,000,000,000, which is approximately 30 percent of the total, or approximately one-third. On the average people are working 1 day in 3 for the Government. I do not see how free enterprise can survive under such conditions. The reduction of taxes is an end in itself, and I do not believe we ought to tie our hands so that we cannot give whatever tax reduction we may wish to give.

It has been said that in the conference the question will probably be resolved, and that in the adjustment of the figures with the House there will result a substantial tax reduction. It seems to me that as a question of policy the Senate should declare that it does not want to make a compulsory application on the debt now without having considered the question of how much tax reduction we ought to give. I think we ought to say that we will apply $1,000,000,000 on the debt, providing a definite cushion against the possibility of not balancing the budget. Later, when we come to the question of tax reduction, in the interest of the economic welfare, in the interest of prosperity, and in the actual interest of the welfare of the taxpayers of the United States, we can make such reduction as we think best.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it is quite certain that we are to arrive at a certain figure. I believe it would be a very fortunate thing, and reassuring to the country, if our debate did not involve figures having within themselves too wide a disparity. During the course of the Senator's very able remarks he said that he thought the figure should be somewhere between one and two billion dollars. I wonder if, after further developments of the debate, he might be willing to change his own amendment to make the figure 2 instead of 1?

Mr. TAFT. It is a question of degree. I think $3,000,000,000 is certainly too much. If the chairman of the Committee on Finance feels that $2,000,000,000 is sufficient protection, and we have sufficient opportunity to consider what tax reductions might possibly be made this year, I am perfectly willing to modify my amendment to $2,000,000,000 if that is what the chairman of the Committee on Finance thinks should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered. It will require unanimous consent for the Senator to change his amendment. Does he ask unanimous consent?

Mr. TAFT. No; I have not yet done so, because I do not know what the Senator is asking me to do.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am somewhat conscious of the fact that I shall be one of the conferees on this subject, and I should like very earnestly to suggest that at an appropriate time, possibly under the development of debate, the Senator modify his amendment so as to make the figure $2,000,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am somewhat concerned as to the figure which shall be finally settled. Whether it be $5,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000, does the Senator from Ohio suggest that $1,000,000,000 of the $5,000,000,000 should be applied to the debt and that three or four billion dollars should be applied to tax reduction?

Mr. TAFT. Not necessarily. One billion dollars would be definitely applied to the debt. Of course, the debt is in this situation, that when we have decided on what tax reduction should be made, whatever is left is automatically applied to the debt. A specific resolution in that regard would not be required in determining how much tax reduction is desirable. It may be in excess of $1,000,000,000; it may be $2,000,000,000. I think probably it could be $2,000,000,000. But I think it is too much to say definitely now that $3,000,000,000 should be applied on the debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may pursue the inquiry further, we are about to adopt a ceiling for cuts in expenditures which in my judgment will finally be either five billion or six billion dollars. If we are to have that ceiling as our objective, then we should have a similar objective as to the amount of payment on the debt. If we are to save $6,000,000,000, we can readily apply $3,000,000,000 on the debt. If it is conceded that we cannot save that much, then I think the amendment of the Senator from Ohio might come with more force. But so far no Senator has advocated a saving of less than $4,500,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. There is a saving of $4,500,000,000. The budget, which we are cutting, has a surplus of a billion and a half dollars; that gives a total of about $6,000,000,000. So before we can consider tax cuts at all we must give priority to the application of $3,000,000,000 on the debt. My only point is that we ought not to tie our hands in relation to tax reduction. We should determine what is necessary for tax reduction and then whatever is left over should go on the debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the position of the Senator from Ohio, but it seems to me that if we set our sights for a payment of only $1,000,000,000 on the national debt we are saying in effect that there is not going to be a $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 cut in the budget, because if we knew for certain that there was to be a $6,000,000,000 saving in the budget, I do not believe the Senator from Ohio would object to paying $3,000,000,000 on the national debt. But the very fact that he offers an amendment providing for a payment of only $1,000,000,000 on the national debt leads me to believe that the possibility of reaching a figure of either $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 in savings is pretty nebulous.

Mr. TAFT. No; that does not follow at all. The figure I have had in my mind is that we should cut the over-all tax burden which I have tried to describe by approximately 20 percent, or $3,500,000,000. I should hate to tie our hands so that we cannot make at least a 20-percent cut. If it is decided that it is not safe to reduce taxes to that extent, and that the figure should be $2,500,000,000 or $3,000,000,000, well and good; but I do not think we ought to tie our hands now and say that under no circumstances can we cut taxes by more than $3,000,000,000. I do not see why we should do that. Why should we now determine that question? Why not determine it when we come to the question of tax reduction?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me recall to the Senator that a moment ago he said that a billion and a half dollars——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I shall be glad to yield in the Senator's time.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was impressed with the figures the Senator gave in his argument as to the amount by which the unfunded indebtedness will be increased. As I recall, he stated the figure as $2,700,000,000, due to the collections this year on such items as social-security taxes and the like. In the event the Senator's amendment is adopted and we are obligated to make a reduction of $1,000,000,000 on only the funded obligations, it seems to me that would leave the Members of the Congress in the position of committing ourselves to bringing about a situation under which the total obligations of the Nation, both funded and unfunded, would be increased, instead of diminished. I wonder whether the Senator has a comment to make on that point.

Mr. TAFT. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Florida is not correct. The question of the money collected in taxes and put into trust funds does not affect the budget, nor does it affect the debt. I have not used it in any way as bearing on the question of balancing the budget or reducing or increasing the debt. I use it only to show that we are actually taking out of the hands of the people approximately $2,700,000,000, and are putting it away in a closet, and are decreasing their purchasing power by that much; even before we get to the question of reducing the debt we are actually drawing that much more than we are spending. If we then reduce the debt $3,000,000,000, we are taking away in all $5,700,000,000 of the purchasing power of the people, which they cannot spend.

What happens is that with that money, which comes in as taxes under the old-age-pension fund, we buy bonds, either in the open market or from the Treasury; and if they are purchased from the Treasury, then the Treasury has that much cash with which it retires bonds in the open market. So there is no effect on the total debt. When we conclude that process, the total outstanding debt is just what it was when we started, except the Government owes some of it to itself, instead of to the public. That process does not create that much more debt, simply because the unfunded note is put into the old-age-pension fund.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then, is it the understanding of the Senator from Ohio that collections of the type he has mentioned, such as social-security taxes, are actually being invested in bonds which constitute a trust fund in the form of that investment?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. That has not been my understanding.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; that is what is being done. As I understand, the Government issues a kind of informal bond of so much money—let us say, $1,000,000,000—in return for which it gets cash from the old-age-pension fund, which has collected the cash in taxes, and then it takes that $1,000,000,000 and reduces the outside debt by that amount. I think that is the actual process.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, during the past 2 weeks I have listened intently to the debates on the legislative budget. I have hesitated to think that at this late date I could add anything to what has been said, but it seems to me there are several points which thus far have only been touched upon. These points I should now like to emphasize.

The junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] made an appealing argument concerning the importance of reducing the national debt. With that argument, I entirely agree, but I respectfully differ with him as to what should be done with debt reduction in connection with the resolution which is now before the Senate.

Section 138 of the Congressional Reorganization Act requires us to include in our legislative-budget resolution a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt if the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures.

I have on my desk, Mr. President, an amendment which I may offer in due course. It would cover the budget resolution and at the same time would be a little less definitive, a little less compulsory, and a little less of a moral commitment than the amendment of the Senator from California.

Most of the debate on the resolution has concerned itself with the amount of expenditures to be made in the fiscal year 1948—whether the recommendations of the President should be cut $6,000,000,000, $4,500,000,000, or more or less. There have been broad differences of opinion as to how much the cut should be and what expenditures for the Army and Navy should be. That point has just been brought out by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] in his questions addressed to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. When we discuss current appropriations, we are debating something that is completely within our power to control. We do not have to vote appropriations unless we decide that they are wise appropriations to make.

On the other hand, the reduction of debt involves several factors, some of which are beyond our control. Reduction of debt cannot be accomplished unless the money is in the pocket of the debtor at the time when the debt is to be paid. We can make estimates now of the revenues we expect the Government to receive from the taxes we establish, but whether the taxes so levied will produce revenue that in the next fiscal year will exceed the expenditures, and, if so, by how much, is a matter that is not presently in our control. Whether the estimates will be met is a matter that time, and time alone, can tell. Let us remember that Uncle Sam must have the cash in his pockets at the time when he pays off and retires an outstanding debt. He cannot pay it off on guesses or estimates. We all agree that in this first year of the legislative budget our statements are to a great extent guesses or estimates. They cannot be based on accurate calculations. Those can come only after the proposals for expenditures are examined in detail. What the excess of revenues over expenditures in the next fiscal year will be cannot be definitely known, in my opinion, before at least a year elapses. Whether our Government will have in its pockets at that time sufficient excess revenues to warrant reducing the debt by $3,000,000,000 or a greater amount depends on the flow of revenue derived from the taxes finally provided for by the Eightieth Congress. I approve, as do we all, of making the maximum reduction of our debt consistent with national security and the Nation's needs. I am in hearty sympathy with the thought of the junior Senator from California. On the other hand, I feel the same way about the reduction of the debt as I did about the reduction of expenditures. It becomes at best a guess or an estimate; and that estimate, I consider, becomes to a large degree a moral commitment on our part. I want to see expenditures reduced to the greatest possible degree consistent with our national security and our national needs; but, concurring in the view so ably stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] I would prefer at this time to a cut of a smaller amount, with the sincere hope that we can make it a greater amount when the matters are examined in detail, rather than to recommend a larger cut which at the moment is more than we are able to sustain when the recommendations are minutely examined. Likewise, I believe it is much wiser for us to agree to a debt reduction of something less than $3,000,000,000. My amendment proposes that the reduction be not less than $1,000,000,000 or more than $3,000,000,000. This gives a leeway of $2,000,000,000 against future contingencies. It leaves a greater flexibility of commitment by us; and at the same time, in my opinion, it fulfills the requirements of the Reorganization Act. It is more a realistic approach to the problem of cutting down the national debt. It involves a moral commitment that is more likely of fulfillment, considering all the known and unknown factors.

Throughout this debate we have heard somewhat of the problem of tax reduction. The senior Senator from Ohio has just emphasized them. Many Members are giving serious thought to some form of tax reduction at this session. But some of our most distinguished Members have stated that they prefer to reduce the debt before reducing taxes. Many people throughout our country hope and expect to receive the benefit of some tax reduction. Perhaps we have given them false hopes. Perhaps our statements as to the amount of possible cuts in expenditures may give them exaggerated ideas, but I, personally, feel that if we can give some tax reduction this year, it will enormously increase the confidence of our citizens, and provide an incentive to greater production. I, personally, feel that some tax reduction this year is justified even if it results in a smaller amount of debt reduction. I hope that greater production will bring greater tax revenues, and thus permit us to reduce our national debt in greater amounts in 1949. The question before us at this moment, therefore, on the very little information we have at hand—and with the hopes engendered in the minds of many people—is as to how much debt reduction to make, how much tax reduction to consider.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], in his able address on Wednesday, February 19, stated—and I quote the figures from page 1170 of the RECORD—that the present estimate of $38,800,000,000 in tax revenues for the fiscal year 1948 was based on an anticipated national income of $167,000,000,000. This, I believe, is the largest anticipated income in the peacetime history of our country. We cannot be certain that in the fiscal year of 1948 this estimate will be fulfilled. If, as the distinguished Senator says, this anticipated income falls from $167,000,000,000 to $160,000,000,000, our revenue will shrink by $4,300,000,000. "If our income," he states, "falls to $150,000,000,000, then the revenue will shrink by $6,000,000,000." In other words, it takes but a comparatively small shrinkage of the country's income to reduce our revenue to a point where no debt reduction can be made, and where our revenues may not even equal our reduced estimate of expenditures.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Can the Senator inform us what the highest wartime national income was?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have not that figure and am not certain of it, but, as I recall, it was around $200,000,000,000.

In the recent colloquy between the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Maryland spoke of the reduction of expenditures and the reduction of the debt, but at no time in the discussion was any consideration given to the fact that the revenues of the country, on which such reductions must be made, would be maintained at $39,100,000,000, the figure in the estimate which is before the Senate today.

Mr. President, I hope that this statement is not unduly pessimistic about our future. I hope that our revenues will not fall off. I hope that we may reduce our taxes, and that greater production will bring an increase of revenue rather than reduced revenues; but these are all uncertainties. They make our estimates at this time even more hazardous. I, personally, am sorry that we had to reach such vital conclusions on so little information as it was possible for us to receive at this particular session. But in voting on the pending resolution we fulfill one of the responsibilities imposed by the Reorganization Act. I feel that, having acted, we are morally bound to do our utmost to fulfill the estimates set forth in this legislative budget. If we feel that they are moral commitments, we must be careful not to create the feeling in the minds of our people that the estimates of our expenditures are greater than the expenditures actually will be and that the national debt is to be reduced by a greater amount than it can be. The revenues of our Government, as I have already stated, are not entirely in our hands to control. We create the tax laws, but the revenues such laws produce depend upon our country's productive ability. Our debt can be paid only when Uncle Sam has the funds with which to pay it.

As I have said, Mr. President, I may or may not submit the amendment which is on the desk in relation to the subject of debt retirement, but the main point of my amendment is to give greater flexibility to the pending resolution, considering all known and unknown factors. I hope we may ultimately have some debt reduction in the next fiscal year. I hope that ultimately we may have some tax reduction in the next fiscal year, I hope our expenditures in the next fiscal year will be kept lower than we now estimate them; but in all these matters I would rather now make commitments we can safely promise to keep than commitments which will be beyond our power to keep.

For the reasons I have given, Mr. President, I hope we may proceed carefully in acting on the subject of debt reduction.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. I understood the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to ask what was the highest national income of the Nation, and I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say he thought it was somewhere around $200,000,000,000.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from New Jersey is correct; but that was a guess.

Mr. HAWKES. I may not be correct, but my best information is that the income on which we are basing our proposed action, namely $167,000,000,000, I think it is——

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. Is almost as high as it has ever been in the history of the Nation, even during the period of the war, or a fraction higher. I do not think we have ever had a higher national income, even during the war, than the figure we are using now.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I would not dispute the Senator from New Jersey in that regard. I have seen the figures in the past, and according to my memory, they do not agree with the Senator's statement; but I am not sure as to that.

Mr. HAWKES. I may be wrong, but I think the Senator will find I am correct.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that he has touched on one matter which seems to me to be vital. If the impression is created in the mind of the American people, that we have agreed to make a definite payment of $3,000,000,000 against the debt, when in reality we have no way in the world of knowing whether we will have the money with which to do it, we are fooling the people, which of course is something which should never be done. I am inclined to like the thought underlying the Senator's amendment, that Congress has an intent to pay off the Nation's debts, that it proposes to fix a minimum and then leave a latitude so that our action can fit in with the conditions which may subsequently exist.

If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him further, I should like to say that in talking this morning with one of the most distinguished citizens of our country, I said "It is fine to pay our debts and I want to pay mine, but let us remember that the only way to pay one's debts is to have profits, and in the case of the Government it is necessary that its citizens have profits from which can be collected tax revenue with which the Government's debts can be paid. I believe these things should be meshed into one another and synchronized so that we may do something for the people in the way of sound tax reduction in order that they may have profits, and that we continue the policy of paying safely against our national debt, not for 2 or 3 years, but year after year, and have some consistency and continuity in our actions."

I asked this gentleman, "What would you think if we paid $3,000,000,000 against the debt this year and $3,000,000,000 next year, and then found we had wrecked the great machine, that we had not put any gasoline into it to keep it running, and could not continue the payments?" What would be the effect if we made two or three payments of substantial sums and then found we could not continue our payments? Let us not overreach ourselves, but keep within the limits which experience tells us we can safely observe.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FERGUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to place in the RECORD, following the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, certain figures I have previously referred to. I have asked for and obtained from the Bureau of the Budget figures of the national income during the war years to ascertain what the highest national income was during those years. Suggestion was made that the figure might be as high as $200,000,000,000. I have obtained from the Bureau of the Budget the figures of the national income for the years 1932 to 1947, inclusive, as follows:

In 1939 the national income was $70,800,000,000. In 1940 the national income was $77,500,000,000. In 1941 it was $96,800,000,000. In 1942 it was $122,000,000,000. In 1943 it was $149,000,000,000. In 1944 it was $158,000,000,000. In 1945 it was $161,000,000,000. For 1946 the Bureau gave me two figures, $164,000,000,000 or $165,000,000,000. The anticipated amount of national income for 1947 is $166,000,000,000.

I understand that it was indicated earlier today that the national income for next year is anticipated to be $167,000,000,000. So then national income would be higher in 1948 than it has been during any war year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, we have heard much discussion of the Federal public debt, and whether or not the Congress of the United States has a responsibility, a prime responsibility, toward its retirement.

At the last session of the Senate I recited the fact that our debt had grown from $16,000,000,000, in 1930, to $42,000,000,000, in 1940, and to $259,000,000,000, as it is today, representing a per capita obligation upon every American individual higher than it has ever been before, and an average of about $7,009 for every family in the United States. If we accept the figure of the Senator from Ohio of $1,000,000,000 a year, it would mean that we would be paying on the Federal debt for the next 259 years.

Considering the enormous debt we now have, I believe that we have a moral obligation to make a commitment that would certainly enable us to retire it within one century. The present debt of $259,000,000,000 is 10 times more than it was at the height of World War I. I pointed out at the last session of the Senate, and I now reiterate, that during the decade from 1920 to 1930 we made substantial payments on the Federal public debt in each of the 10 years; and in three of those years, with a debt just one-tenth as much as it is today, we retired more than a billion dollars, in each of 3 years.

If we were to operate now on the debt that we have on the same basis, we would be retiring $10,000,000,000 a year. Obviously we cannot do that.

I recognize that Congress in its judgment may determine that certain tax adjustments should be made. The amendment which I have offered will not prevent such adjustments.

Another thing I wish to call to the attention of the Senate is that this amendment of course must go to conference, as will the concurrent resolution as amended by the so-called Millikin amendment, and I am not so sanguine as to believe that the Senate conferees will necessarily be able to maintain the Senate's position completely, though I hope the conferees will make a very earnest effort to obtain a satisfactory adjustment of the differences.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I believe that I shall be one of the conferees. Our hands as conferees would be immensely strengthened if we could go into conference with a figure which had the rather unanimous support of the Senate.

There seems to be a rather wide difference, as of the moment, between the figure suggested by the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio and the figure of the distinguished Senator from California. First, I want to compliment the distinguished Senator from California on his insistence that we accept responsibility for getting at the job of reducing the national debt. As to that, I believe there is entire unanimity in the Senate.

During the course of his remarks the senior Senator from Ohio indicated that he might be willing to change his own amendment and to make the figure $2,000,000,000. I wonder whether, in the interest of fixing a figure which almost all of us could support, the distinguished Senator from California would be willing to split the difference between two and three, so that we could go into conference with a figure, as I said before, which would have behind it a large vote and thereby strengthen our position in conference.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that in the interest of the parliamentary situation which he mentions, I should be willing to accept the figure $2,600,000,000, which would be a 1 percent reduction on the Federal debt, and which would at least provide a goal of being able to retire it in not less than 100 years and permit us to hope that either this year or in future years it may be possible to exceed the figure of not less than $2,600,000,000.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I had of course hoped that the Senator would go a little deeper than that, but he has made a very gracious and generous gesture in the direction of the result toward which I have been trying to lead.

I wonder if the Senator would yield so I may ask a question of the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. In view of the concession the Senator from California is willing to make, and so that we may get this matter to conference with a good strong vote behind it, I wonder if the Senator from Ohio would cooperate by accepting the modification which the Senator from California is willing to make?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield, before the Senator from Ohio answers?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I appreciate the effort by the able Senator from Colorado to bring about an agreement upon figures. However, I feel that I ought to express my own views upon it, and I hope that the Senator from Ohio will not recede from the figure $1,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I thoroughly admire and commend the view taken by the able Senator from California on the question of reducing the national debt. I want more than $3,000,000,000 paid upon the debt, if possible, and I think it is a great mistake to fix such a sum as we enter upon the course of determining taxes for the coming year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator from West Virginia, and I have yielded to him but I should like to remind him that we are under a 20-minute limitation of debate.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may I ask unanimous consent at this time that the time not be charged to the Senator from California, but that it be charged against me?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as we are operating under a 20-minute rule, and inasmuch as the Senator from West Virginia can obtain 20 minutes in his own time, I should hesitate to agree that there be an extension of the 20 minutes to any Senator.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I did not ask for an extension; I asked that it be charged against the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BARKLEY. It could only be charged against the Senator from West Virginia in the event he took the floor in his own right and subtracted from the 20 minutes whatever time he occupies now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Was there objection to my request?

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that he take the matter up in his own time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio to answer the question asked by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in the first place, the Senator from California suggests 1 percent of the national debt. As a permanent sinking fund, that might be all right. My question is whether it would be wise to do it this year. Furthermore, the ordinary sinking fund of 1 percent will retire the bonds in 50, not 100 years, because the interest is reduced and applied on the sinking fund.

However, while I should rather there would be no binding provision, I am willing to agree to the figure $2,600,000,000, which leaves, I calculate, $3,500,000,000 of unallocated funds that might be applied to tax reduction, if the Senate so desires. So that I am willing, I think, Mr. President, in the interest of accomplishing the purpose suggested, if the chairman of the Finance Committee desires me to do so, to withdraw my amendment, if the Senator from California will modify his amendment first.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment be modified to read "$2,600,000,000." As the author of the amendment, I believe I have the right to have the amendment modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment, inasmuch as the yeas and nays have not been ordered. The Chair understands that the amendment submitted by the Senator from California is amended to read——

Mr. KNOWLAND. "Not less than $2,600,000,000."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, most respectfully, I object.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to extend the courtesy to the Senator, but my time is limited. I probably do not have more than 3 minutes left, and I should like to complete my remarks if possible.

Mr. President, I believe it is essential to establish a definite basis for the debt reduction, because the country cannot afford either to get into another major depression or to become involved in another war, with a debt standing at $259,000,000,000, or anywhere near it. As a member of the Republican Party, and as a Member of the Senate, I recognize no obligation to support any fixed formula for tax reduction of 20 percent across the board, as has been suggested by some Members of the other House, or of a flat 20-percent figure. I hope that the Congress, in its wisdom, may find it possible to make some tax adjustments.

The able Senator from Ohio has presented some figures to show the tremendous tax burden upon the American people. We all recognize that the burden is heavy and we all want to see it lightened; but I point out to the Senator from Ohio and to the other Members of the Senate that it may be possible to lighten the load upon those in the average-income brackets by increasing the exemptions under the revenue laws, by giving more credit to those who have children, and who are trying to educate their children in schools and colleges. We can furnish a great deal of relief to the taxpayers of the country with that type of adjustment. I certainly have not closed my mind to any particular type of tax adjustment if the Congress of the United States in its wisdom feels that such an adjustment would be wise, but I say to the Senate that such a reduction should not, in my opinion, have priority over the task we must perform of reducing the huge Federal public debt, which, in my opinion, threatens the very solvency of the Government of the United States.

We have discussed the matter of the national income. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] has pointed out, as has also the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], that the national income is now almost at its high point in American history, and I ask, If we are not to begin reducing the vast Federal public debt now when the national income is high, then when, in heaven's name, will we start reducing it?

I pointed out last Friday that during the 150 years we have been in existence as a nation under the Constitution in approximately 90 years the Government has had an excess of receipts over expenditures, while in about 62 years its operations have resulted in a deficiency. Obviously we cannot reduce the Federal public debt when we are operating under a deficiency, because at such a time the Federal public debt is being increased.

Finally, Mr. President, I point out to the Senate that the present huge Federal public debt is definitely an inflationary factor. The Senator from Ohio complains that my proposal may have a deflationary tendency. I point out to the Senate that today wholesale prices are at their peak, and certain other inflationary signs confront our Nation. We have seen what has happened to the currency of China and of Greece and of most of the countries of Europe, and it is certainly advisable that we start to consider and ponder the whole situation which threatens the American people.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio which provides for the application of only $1,000,000,000 toward payment on the public debt will be rejected, and that at least not less than $3,000,000,000 will be applied to reduction of the Federal public debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], as modified.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, in spite of the fact that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, again I wish to express my admiration and commendation of the general view for substantial payment on the national debt and continuous reduction of it. However, it seems to me that there is nothing really worth while to be gained in saying that at least a certain amount must be paid annually, or this year, upon the debt. It is my hope that even an amount in excess of $3,000,000,000 may be paid. It appears to me that the first consideration the Congress faces today with respect to dealing with the income of the Government and its use is the reduction of taxes for the current year and the years to come. We have been given a figure representing the estimated income for this year. It is but an estimate, and if we start at any figure, whether it be $3,000,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, we are at once placing a limitation upon possible tax cuts.

It is unnecessary to fix a minimum amount that must be paid upon the debt when certainly it will be the purpose of any administration that may be in office, as certainly it will be the purpose of the Congress, to see that the great national debt is paid. But of the important question which confronts the Congress with respect to its fiscal affairs of the year, the first, it seems to me, is the fixing of a tax cut to apply to the American people, not only for their immediate relief but in order that they may be ready to face any situation which may confront them in the future.

I was very glad indeed to hear the able Senator from California say that he wanted a tax reduction, and that, in particular, he wanted a tax reduction by way of increasing personal exemptions so that those of lesser incomes and those with large families to support might receive the first benefit of the reduction. I heartily subscribe to that view. But when we come to the question of fixing taxes for the year it seems to me that if we try to fix a minimum amount to apply upon our indebtedness we are at that time putting a wall around the efforts of those who want to reduce the tax burden on the people of the country.

I think that first things should come first, and that no minimum limitation whatsoever should be placed upon the amounts to be paid and if such a limitation is to be placed it should be the lowest figure we can agree upon; and then in fact pay the greatest amount we can regardless of any limitation adopted. No one is more desirous than I that reductions in debt be made quickly. But I feel that such reduction is a secondary question. For my part I would rather the Congress not provide a minimum sum to be paid. I shall therefore support a smaller amount as the lesser of two evils.

In view of the very first question before us, that of a proper adjustment of the taxes of the country, and in view of the fact that we can only surmise and estimate what the income will be, I feel that no amount ought to be fixed as the least amount that we should pay on the public debt. If an amount is to be fixed I hope it will be the least amount, and that the result will be a payment on the debt far in excess of any speculative sum that we may fix.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Overton
Bricker	Holland	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the modified amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken on the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. I will take time on the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized on the concurrent resolution.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have agreed with the Senator from California that I will accept his amendment with the figure $2,600,000,000. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. If consent is not given, I shall ask the Senate to vote against it, and I, myself, shall vote against it.

As I take it, the reduction we now have available under the terms of the concurrent resolution is $6,100,000,000. If the figure stated in the amendment of the Senator from California is reduced to $2,600,000,000, it will leave $3,500,000,000, which I, at least, intend to advocate shall be applied to the reduction of taxes, representing an over-all 20-percent reduction in the personal income tax. I believe that the reduction in that tax should be substantial. Although I should prefer not to go as high as the figure in the Knowland amendment, I feel that it represents an allocation of the surplus in the manner in which I believe it should be finally allocated. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is there any limit on the number of times a Senator may make request to withdraw an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall not object to the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is withdrawn. The order for the yeas and nays also is rescinded by unanimous consent. The question is now upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from California as modified.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by my good friend and colleague the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. I should like to have the clerk state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the concurrent resolution it is proposed to insert the following new sentence:

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that any excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from Rhode Island offering his proposal as a substitute for the modified amendment offered by the Senator from California?

Mr. GREEN. I am.

Mr. President, in the first place, let it be clearly understood that my substitute for the amendment to Senate Concurrent Resolution 7 proposed by the Senator from California in no way indicates any opposition to his attempt to aid in the reduction of the Federal debt. In fact, he and I are in substantial agreement as to the primary necessity of reducing the debt if there is any excess of receipts over expenditures. As a matter of fact, at the meeting of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, of which we are both members, the Senator offered a resolution similar to that which he has now offered, and I offered an amendment similar to that which I now offer. They both came very near being adopted. I am glad to say that mine, on a voice vote, came within one vote of being adopted, and within eight votes when there was a division on the ayes and noes. The only difference is that the Senator from California believes that as a matter of policy the amount recommended should be limited to not less than $3,000,000,000, while I believe there should be no limitation. In other words, his amendment is a restriction on the authority which the Secretary of the Treasury now has, while my substitute continues the existing authority and recommends its exercise.

The existing law, which seems to have been ignored in most of the debate, reads as follows:

Purchase or redemption of bonds: The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of the United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

What I have read may be found in section 741 of title 31 of the United States Code. This section, known as the bond-purchase clause was a part of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1882. In other words, it has been on the Federal statute books for 65 years. This unlimited power of the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to apply to the reduction of the national debt surplus money not otherwise appropriated has not only been on the statute books for 65 years, but from time to time it has been exercised and the debt thereby reduced. This has been notably the case during the past year. In every month of the past year the Secretary of the Treasury has exercised this power and paid off marketable securities. From March 1, 1946, through February 1, 1947, the reductions amounted to over $24,446,000,000. However, the last figure is offset somewhat by increase in the public debt of other issues, such as savings bonds, special issues to trust funds, and so forth. One year ago today the direct public debt outstanding amounted to $279,214,000,000. I have not, of course, the figure for today, but one week ago, February 21, 1947, the public debt was $259,236,000,000, a reduction of approximately $20,000,000,000.

I ask leave to have printed at the end of my remarks a table showing by dates, March 1 and March 15, and so forth, the amounts by which the debt was reduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, both of our proposals recommended action by the Secretary of the Treasury which, under existing law, is only permissive. If the amendment proposed by my good friend and colleague from California had been in effect, only $3,000,000,000 of that $20,000,000,000 would have been paid off. If my substitute, however, had been in effect the entire $20,000,000,000 would have been paid off.

It seems to me unwise to mention a limit of three billion dollars in connection with this power of the Secretary of the Treasury which has been his for the last 65 years. It is especially undesirable at this time when the public debt is so enormous. Its reduction is most desirable to make firmer the credit of our government, and to stabilize the value of the Government bonds in the hands of our fellow citizens and to encourage reduction in the expenses of government.

In discussing this matter with Members of Congress and with private citizens I have met with no effective criticism. However, it is urged that favorable action on my proposal would amount to a recommendation that the taxes be not reduced. My proposal has nothing to do with taxes and nothing to do with receipts. It leaves those matters to be settled separately. The present law has nothing to do with taxes or with receipts. Attention is directed simply to any surplus of receipts over expenditures. It remains with Congress as before to determine both receipts and expenditures. But critics say it will be difficult to make the people generally understand this. They say to me, "Senator, you may be right; we believe you are right; but we do not want to vote in such a way that we will be misunderstood as opposing either reduction in expenditures or reduction in taxes."

I have greater confidence in the common sense and understanding of the masses of our fellow citizens than have these critics. I believe that the people can be brought to understand exactly what this proposal means. At any rate I believe it is my duty to analyze a situation such as this and to act for what I believe to be the best interests of the people who sent me to the Senate and of the people generally throughout the great American Republic.

I certainly believe it is desirable not to take away, even morally, the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the surplus of receipts over expenditures to the reduction of the Federal debt, but to recommend to him that he exercise it fully.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the substitute amendment. I offer it, and I hope it will be adopted, without regard to any misconstructions which may be placed upon it or any misunderstandings of its effect.

EXHIBIT A

Retirements of marketable securities beginning with Mar. 1, 1946

	Amount paid off
Mar. 1, 1946	$1,014,000,000
Mar. 15	1,291,000,000
Mar. 15	439,000,000
Apr. 1	1,991,000,000
May 1	1,579,000,000
June 1	2,025,000,000
June 15	819,000,000
June 15	1,036,000,000
July 1	1,994,000,000
Aug. 1	1,246,000,000
Sept. 1	1,995,000,000
Oct. 1	2,000,000,000
Nov. 1	2,003,000,000
Dec. 1	487,000,000
Dec. 15	3,261,000,000
Jan. 1, 1947	13,000,000
Jan. 1	196,000,000
Feb. 1	1,007,000,000
Total	24,446,000,000

The above figure is offset somewhat by increase in the public debt by other issues, such as savings bonds, special issues to trust funds, etc.

On February 28, 1946, direct public debt oustanding—$279,214,000,000. On February 21, 1947, public debt was $259,236,000,000—a reduction of approximately $20,000,000,000 compared with February a year ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to the modified amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. MILLIKIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the able Senator from Rhode Island regarding his amendment. If his amendment were adopted, would it mean that there would not be any tax reduction this year?

Mr. GREEN. It has nothing to do with tax reduction. The Congress would be just as free to make tax reductions wherever it chose to do so, and would be just as free to make appropriations. The amendment simply is a recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury that if there is any excess of receipts over expenditures, he shall apply such excess to reduce the Federal debt. That is all the amendment provides.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Of course, that would include any deficiency appropriations which may be made between now and the end of the year; would it not?

Mr. GREEN. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to the modified amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. On this vote, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. I am, therefore, at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay." If the Senator from Virginia were present, he would vote "nay." If the Senator from New York were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness. If present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, both Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are absent on public business. If present, all of them would vote "yea" on this question.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—33

Aiken	Johnston, S. C.	Myers

So Mr. GREEN's amendment in the nature of a substitute for Mr. KNOWLAND's amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the perfected amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I am informed that on this vote he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LANGER (when Mr. YOUNG's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business. I am authorized to state that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness. If present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HATCH. Repeating the announcement I have heretofore made relative to the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], I announce, with his authority, that if present and voting, he would vote "yea" on the pending amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are absent on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Florida, and the Senator from Alabama would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 82, nays none, as follows:

So Mr. KNOWLAND's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the concurrent resolution as amended.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the concurrent resolution it is proposed to add a new sentence, as follows:

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that all proceeds from the transfer or disposition of property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts should be applied to the reduction of the public debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, this amendment in no way conflicts with the amendment just adopted by the Senate. The Senate has already adopted an amendment to the resolution providing that in the ensuing fiscal year $2,600,000,000 shall be paid on the national debt. For the information of the Senators, let me say that if they will turn to page A–18 of the budget, they will find that the amount of money covered into the Treasury from the sale of surplus property for the fiscal year 1946 was $549,000,000, a little less than one-fourth of the amount which the Senate has just voted should be paid upon the debt this year. But this amendment provides that in the ensuing years, ending 1947 and 1948, the money received from the sale of surplus property shall be paid on the debt.

Again, for the information of Senators, if they will turn to page A–18, they will find that the budget reveals that for the fiscal year 1947 the estimate of receipts from surplus property is approximately $1,960,000,000, and, for the fiscal year ending 1948, it is $1,009,000,000; so that in neither case do the expected receipts exceed the sum involved in action already taken by the Senate today, to pay at least $2,600,000,000 on the debt this year. The amendment merely declares it to be the judgment of the Senate that the proceeds from the sale of surplus property, regardless of whether or not there is a cushion left in the budget, shall be applied on the national debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator if it is the intention of his amendment that the proceeds from the sales of surplus war property, which it is contemplated are to be applied to the national debt shall be in addition to the $2,600,000,000 or a part of the $2,600,000,000?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, perhaps I failed to make that plain. If my amendment should be adopted, at least the money derived from the sale of the surplus property would be applied to the debt, regardless of the cushion that might be left.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the purpose of the Senator's amendment to apply all receipts from the sale of surplus property to the debt, or only such receipts as are covered into the Treasury during the fiscal year 1948?

Mr. WHERRY. It is my intention, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, to apply what may be covered into the Treasury as budget receipts; in other words, the net amount of the proceeds from the sale of surplus property, after deduction of selling expense, which totals the figure I gave.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know; but that covers a period of years?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The way the Senator's amendment is drafted, it would not be limited to sales during the fiscal year 1948, which is the period covered by the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. If there is any doubt about that, let me say to the distinguished Senator that I do not want to limit it to years; I want to limit it only by the total amount of whatever is covered into the Treasury, or in special accounts, as the net sales from surplus property.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the year?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the Senator's amendment does what I understood a moment ago from what he said he meant it to do in that it is limited to the current year 1948.

Mr. WHERRY. On, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not do that.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the Senator's calling the attention of the Senate to that point. My intention is to apply to the debt all the receipts derived from net sales of surplus property regardless of the year in which the receipts come. I merel, gave the estimates of the budget to enable Senators to realize the amount that was expected to accrue.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that if the resolution should be amended as the Senator wishes, then all receipts from the sales of surplus property during this fiscal year would be applied on the debt.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. And then such additional amount as would bring the total payment on the debt to $2,600,000,000 would also be applied?

Mr. WHERRY. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. TAFT. That is the intention of the Senator from Nebraska, is it not?

Mr. WHERRY. It is.

Mr. TAFT. In addition to that, it declares it to be the policy that the proceeds from sales of surplus property in the fiscal years 1949 and 1950, if there are proceeds then, shall be applied on the debt in those years?

Mr. WHERRY. That is all.

Mr. TAFT. That is the total effect of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. WHERRY. It goes a little further than that. It constitutes a commitment based upon our judgment that at least the amount derived from the sale of surplus property shall be applied on the war debt, in the event no cushion is left under the action the Senate has just taken.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. From what the Senator has said I draw the conclusion that he considers everything falling in the designation "war assets to be disposed of" was in part responsible for creating the national debt?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. Therefore, the Senator wants to make certain that when a sale is made of these assets and surplus property that came from the war and helped to create the national debt, then the proceeds shall be applied to reducing the debt and used for no other purpose?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. And the Senator's amendment does not in any way increase the total debt payment of $2,600,000,000?

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator wants to make it certain that the money derived from surplus property sales, when received, is not diverted to other uses?

Mr. WHERRY. That is absolutely correct. The Senator has stated it better than I could have. It is not my purpose to interfere in any way with the payment of $2,600,000,000 on the debt this year, but, after hearing all the debate, I am apprehensive whether or not there will be sufficient to apply on the debt and also to do what everybody expects to be done under the budget. I am for a balanced budget, but I feel, regardless of whether or not there is left a cushion in sufficient amount to apply $2,600,000,000 on the debt, that, as it has done once in the past, Congress should at least go on record once again, by adopting my amendment, as favoring the idea that money derived from the sale of surplus property shall be applied upon the national debt and be accounted for in that way.

I hope there will be a cushion, and if the figures concerning it are correct, as the debate would seem to indicate, then the money derived from the sale of so-called war assets will be only a part of the $2,600,000,000; in no way will there be a conflict with the amendment offered by the Senator from California, which has been agreed to.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question I desire to ask is this: Under the present procedure, the War Assets Administration turns into the Treasury a part of its receipts only; part is turned into the RFC and various other agencies.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would this in any way compel the War Assets Administration to turn their receipts into the Treasury, or would it compel the other agencies, when they receive the money, to turn it into the Treasury to be applied on the debt, or could they use it in any way they saw fit?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Surplus Property Act provides that 20 percent of the money received shall be returned to the disposal agencies. It is not my purpose to interfere with that. All I am asking is that the net amount that is recovered and deposited either in a special fund or in the United States Treasury, after the selling expense has been deducted, and after the 20 percent is paid back to the disposal agencies, as is already provided by the Surplus Property Act, shall be applied upon the debt. The net amount is estimated in the Budget to be the figure I gave. If the Government can recover any more money than the amount estimated, of course it should endeavor to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator repeat the amount that was realized in 1946 from the sale of surplus property?

Mr. WHERRY. In the fiscal year ending 1946 the amount, as shown on page A–18 of the budget report, was $549,000,000. The amount expected to be recovered for the next year, 1947, from the disposition of surplus property, is $1,960,000,000. And for the fiscal year ending 1948 it is estimated to be about $1,009,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. If the $1,960,000,000 estimate should prove to be correct and that amount should be saved, it would be deducted, as I understand, from the $2,600,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to correct the Senator. The amendment offered by the Senator from California would apply only to the present fiscal year. The figure $1,960,000,000 referred to by the Senator from Illinois is the estimate of surplus property recoveries for the year 1947, with respect to which the Congress has taken no action.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the $549,000,000 the Senator has mentioned was actually recovered in the fiscal year 1946.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. So if the Senate should adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, the $2,600,000,000 figure would really be cut to approximately $2,000,000,000?

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator from Illinois misunderstood me. The $549,000,000 covered by my amendment would become a part of the $2,600,000,000 provided for in the amendment of the Senator from California. All I am asking is that at least the amount of $549,000,000 realized from the sale of surplus property be paid upon the national debt. The amount above $549,000,000, running up to $2,600,000,000, would be the difference that would be applied on the debt this year. The reason I am offering the amendment, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, is that if the cushion fails and no other money is left to apply on the national debt, I still want $549,000,000, the amount of money recovered from the sale of surplus property, to be applied on the national debt.

Mr. LUCAS. Then, under any circumstances, by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, $549,000,000 would be applied on the debt?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Under the Knowland amendment, the amount applied on the national debt could not be more than $2,600,000,000?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. That would include the $549,000,000 provided by the Senator's amendment?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. So, in reality, adoption of the Wherry amendment would mean cutting the Knowland amendment figure down to about $2,000,000,000?

Mr. WHERRY. No. If the Senator will study the budget figures, he will see that the amount received from the sale of surplus property is considered and becomes a part of the current budget. The Senate has adopted an amendment providing a payment of $2,600,000,000 on the debt. That amount is all that will be paid in this fiscal year, because that will include the $549,000,000 I am talking about. What we are doing in acting on the resolution is simply expressing a judgment. I think the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] called the proposal a New Year's resolution. If we do not cut the debt by $2,600,000,000, then it is the judgment of the Senate, if my amendment is adopted, that $549,000,000 should be paid on the national debt, regardless of what may happen with respect to the $2,600,000,000 already earmarked for payment on the debt. I think that is plain. But I think it goes further than that. It also is the judgment of the Senate that the same thing should be done in the years 1947 and 1948.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I am relying on memory only, but is it not true that there is already a law on the statute books providing that the proceeds from the sale of surplus property shall be applied on the national debt? I recall that such a law has already been passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. I think that is what the Senator's amendment covers.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Then does not the fact that such a law is on the statute books render the Senator's amendment unnecessary?

Mr. WHERRY. No. If the Senator will reflect, an amendment similar to mine was once heretofore adopted by the Senate by a voice vote. There was no opposition to it in the preceding Congress.

Mr. STEWART. The law the Senator from Nebraska has in mind was enacted shortly before Congress adjourned.

Mr. WHERRY. A provision similar to that contained in my amendment was also adopted by the House. It went to conference and the conferees deleted it. I am coming to that point if I may be permitted to conclude my remarks.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is not in order under section 138 of the Reorganization Act, the so-called La Follette-Monroney Act, which is now a rule of the Senate. That act provides:

> (b) The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year.

The whole nature of the concurrent resolution is one relating solely to the present fiscal year, and it seems to me that it is not in order to include in it a general declaration of legislative policy or general legislation dealing with the disposition of the proceeds of surplus property in future years.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thought such a point of order would probably be made. It is my opinion that my amendment is germane. It deals with a part of the appropriations to be made this year. The amount in question would be treated as governmental receipts. The concurrent resolution points to the present fiscal year. But certainly Congress is not foreclosed in the same concurrent resolution from adopting a policy relating to two succeeding years. Such a policy represents only the judgment of the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the language in the La Follette-Monroney Act, while directing certain affirmative action, does not preclude any further action which the Senate may in its wisdom care to take. Therefore, in the Chair's judgment, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago during a colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], my amendment or an amendment similar thereto was, in the preceding Congress, adopted by the Senate, as well as by the House by a nearly unanimous voice vote, but as I stated, it was deleted by the conferees. The conferees brought back a report which did not contain the amendment and the report was adopted because at that time Mr. Bell, in whom we all have confidence, who was then Acting Secretary of the Treasury, was opposed to it until the budget had been balanced. I think some Senators will remember the meeting we had with him at which we discussed that subject. Mr. Bell stated:

> Giving that provision its most extravagant application, then during the present period of deficit financing it would have to be fulfilled by the futile mechanical measure of applying the special fund to retire a given amount of outstanding public debt while simultaneously offering additional public-debt obligations to recoup the same funds in order to meet Government expenditures required by congressional appropriations not covered by the proceeds of revenue measures enacted by Congress.

That was Mr. Bell's explanation, and that was all the explanation he gave. In spite of the action taken by the Senate as well as by the House in adopting the amendment, the conferees rejected it, and both Houses adopted the conference report without the amendment in it. The reasons advanced by the conferees as well as the administration for not including the amendment in the Seventy-ninth Congress have now been eliminated.

We are now to have a balanced budget. There are Members of the Senate asking for debt reduction. The Senate a few moments ago adopted an amendment by which $2,600,000,000 is to be applied to reducing the national debt. So we should at least apply to the national debt the nominal amount of money recaptured from the sale of surplus property, as provided by my amendment for the present year, and for the fiscal year 1947 $1,950,000,000, and for the fiscal year 1948 $1,009,000,000. We should do this for the reasons set forth in the Baruch-Hancock report on this very subject. Let me read from that report:

> All of the war surpluses will have been paid for by the American public either through war taxes or the increase in the national debt. Therefore, the proceeds of all sales should go to reduce the debt; lowering the postwar carrying charges will have to be met through taxation. Certainly no agency should be permitted to sell surpluses and use the proceeds for other purposes.

The fact that surplus sales will lower the debt dramatizes an important point which some business groups are inclined to forget. The net result of an effective disposal program will aid all business, which is an important consideration to be balanced against the possible short-term effects of individual sales.

Mr. President, to enlarge upon the point, we say that surplus property has been produced through the sale of bonds, which in reality represent a mortgage upon the individual incomes of the American people. A public debt, I take it, is like a private debt. The proceeds from the sale of surplus property should be applied upon this debt, and no other place. At the present time they are being covered into the Treasury as a part of the budget, and are not being applied on the national debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Nebraska on the amendment has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. I will take time on the concurrent resolution.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am sorry; I have only 20 minutes on the concurrent resolution. I shall be glad to yield in the Senator's time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot do that.

Mr. WHERRY. Furthermore, the surplus which is estimated for the fiscal year 1948, as shown in the President's budget, is made possible only by the inclusion among the receipts of items which are not really current receipts. I have already given those items. They are: $549,000,000 for 1946; $1,960,000,000 for 1947; and $1,090,000,000 for 1948. They are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Almost $2,000,000,000, or about two-thirds of all miscellaneous receipts, is in the class of recoveries of past outlays.

There is another reason why the money recaptured from the sale of surplus property should be applied on the war debt. It will keep the record straight, and those interested in the sale of surplus property can turn to the budget each year and see how much money has been actually derived from the sale of surplus property by noting the actual amount applied on the debt.

Let us examine the record. As I have already stated, the estimate is $549,000,000 for the fiscal year 1946, $1,959,000,000 for the fiscal year 1947, and $1,009,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948, or a total of approximately only $3,517,000,000. That is all we can expect from the sale of surplus property.

These figures, as shown in the present budget, represent the entire amount of money which is to be deposited from the domestic sales of surplus property up to and including June 1943. I shall give the foreign figures later. I was told yesterday that this is about all we can expect from the sale of surplus property. I was told that in the final analysis there might be about $2,000,000,000 wrapped up in what we call war plants, which may be leased or kept for the national defense, but that when these sales are concluded they will represent practically all the money we shall recover from the sale of surplus property.

This is the startling feature of the surplus-property program: The Baruch-Hancock report, which I have just mentioned, estimated that the amount of surplus property we would have for sale would be approximately $103,000,000,000. That figure was used time and again in the report and in the debates in the Senate. Think of it. One hundred and three billion dollars was the amount of surplus property we were supposed to have had. Of this amount, I am told that the total domestic sales will gross approximately $5,500,000,000. I received this information from the War Assets Administration only yesterday. Consider those figures. The amount of surplus property for sale represented a sum of $103,000,000,000. Now, we are expected to gross only $5,500,000,000 when all the property is sold. So our expectations will not run more than $3,700,000,000 of gross deposits in the Treasury as the total amount of money recaptured from the entire amount of $103,000,000,000. We must pay the sales expense, nearly $1,000,000,000, and we must pay back to the disposal agencies 20 percent.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely wished to have it clear on the record whether or not, o page A–18 of the budget, the $1,030,000,000 is included in the income of the Government.

Mr. WHERRY. My understanding is that that item is the estimated amount which will be received in the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it included in the estimated national income for 1948?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. So all the Senator is trying to insure is that, notwithstanding any other legislation, this particular amount, if received from the sale of war assets, shall be applied on the debt, and may not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. The effect of the resolution would be extended for 2 years to come.

Whatever this recovery is, it ought to be made public information and the Congress should be informed. I think it will be an amazing fact to the taxpayers of the country that of $103,000,000,000 worth of property—although some of it cannot be recovered in money—we shall realize less than $4,000,000,000. But what amazes me is that of the $103,000,000,000 original value of property which we have sold—the money for which has been or will be recovered—there will be deposited in the Treasury of the United States less than $4,000,000,000.

In connection with the foreign sales of surplus property, handled by the Foreign Liquidation Commission, the office of the budget director of the State Department states that the total amount of surplus property received for disposal—the total inventory all through the years—is $8,805,000,000 as of December 31, 1946. I am speaking of surplus property overseas. To this figure should be added $2,000,000,000 which has not yet been turned over to them, but which will be turned over to them when the Army and Navy release it. This makes a grand total of approximately $10,805,000,000 of surplus property which will be sold overseas by the State Department. The Foreign Liquidation Commission has already disposed of $7,437,000,000 of that property. Some of it has been involved in the agreements with foreign countries, in the settlement of lend-lease and other indebtedness which they owe the United States. We have all heard about some of those transactions.

So actually we have $3,360,000,000 of property still to be sold in foreign lands. Perhaps this amendment will induce the surplus property disposal agencies to get a little more money from the sale of surplus property. At any rate, we have that much more to sell. However, of the $10,805,000,000 total, according to the estimates we shall receive in cash only $1,046,000 for the fiscal year 1946. We shall receive only $362,000,000 in the fiscal year 1947; and we shall receive only $70,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948.

In addition, however, in the settlement we shall have $1,368,000,000 worth of notes or debentures of several foreign countries, which of course are of questionable value. In other words, all we can reasonably expect from the total sales of surplus property overseas in the amount of $10,805,000,000, is $400,000,000 in cash. So when the settlement is analyzed from an impartial point of view, we can say that if the estimate holds true, out of the $10,805,000,000 worth of surplus property in foreign countries actually we shall receive approximately $400,000,000 in cash, plus whatever we can collect from the foreign countries which have been given long-time credit on the $1,368,000,000. Such collections are very uncertain. This means that we are settling the entire debt of $10,800,000,000 and selling our surplus property at a fraction of 1 percent of the inventory value of the property. I think the public ought to know it when we are talking about balancing the budget.

We have been talking about expenditures. This is a place where we can be optimistic. We should demand more receipts from the sale of surplus property before it is too late. There is no reason in the world why that question should not be investigated. I am certainly glad that a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has been appointed to look into the sales of surplus property. Certainly from the sale of $103,000,000,000 worth of surplus property we ought to realize more than $3,700,000,000 to apply on the debt.

There is another reason why I think we should be apprehensive at this moment. I raised the question on the floor of the Senate day before yesterday. I asked the Committee on Foreign Relations if they knew of any commitment that had been made or might be contemplated with respect to foreign loans, because we are telling the people of this country what our budget is to be. I am one who believes in balancing the budget. I think that is a responsibility. I think the thing to do is to go carefully over every expenditure which we think will be made during this fiscal year. I asked if any member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate could advise us whether any loans to foreign countries are contemplated this year. The Senator to whom I addressed the question stated that he knew nothing about it, and I accepted his statement. A few moments ago I was handed a release from London which states that the British Government is now asking our Government to make a loan to Greece to help stabilize the Grecian Government. I think that if any members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have knowledge of any contemplated loan to a foreign nation, now is the time to consider it, and not after the loan has been made through an agreement with the State Department, when the Senate will be told about it and asked to support what the Department has done.

If we are ever to reduce the debt we should start to reduce it. If we are ever to balance the budget we ought to start now. I think that is a mandate from the people.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that, no matter what happens to the cushion to which I have alluded, whether it be one figure or another, in the final analysis if we do not have sufficient money left after balancing the budget to apply on the debt, the least we can do is to state in the pending resolution that it is our judgment, as we have already voted unanimously, that every dollar which is covered into the Treasury of the United States, either in specific deposits or in the general fund as the result of the sale of surplus property, should be applied on the national debt. It will show good faith on the part of the Senate to reduce it by that much.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator from Nebraska have in mind that under the law the title to all lend-lease property is in the United States?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. When settlements are made and the money is received from that source, does the Senator have in mind that such money should be applied to reduce the debt, under this resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly do, and I hope that that point is brought out in the investigation which the Senator's committee makes, because I understand that this money is not to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, from which it could be appropriated.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The total figure of $39,100,000,000 includes approximately $1,000,000,000 from the sale of surplus property. It is a part of the receipts on which we have been continuously counting.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. I wonder if the Senator, in accord with his statement of intention, would be willing to make it clear that this is a part of the $2,600,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. I have a proposal that at the end of his amendment there should be added:

> But any such reduction in the fiscal year 1948 may be counted as part of the $2,600,000,000 referred to in the preceding sentence.

Would the Senator be willing to accept that modification?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I shall be glad to accept it; but I want the distinguished Senator from Ohio to concur in my statement that if $2,600,000,000 is not available, still the $549,000,000 for 1946 the $1,960,000,000 in 1947, and the $1,090,000,000 in 1948 should be paid regardless of that fact.

Mr. TAFT. I do not quite understand what the Senator means.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not quite understand the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. If it means only that the $549,000,000 is a part of the $2,600,000,000, I am perfectly agreeable to the amendment; but if it means that there is no cushion of $2,600,000,000 to which to apply the $549,000,000, then I am not for the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. This is not legislation. The President will not sign the concurrent resolution. It is an expression of the intention of the Senate. The Senate is expressing its intention as to how these funds should be applied. Therefore if there is no surplus whatever I would say that proceeds from the sale of surplus property are to be applied on the public debt. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I want. Let me repeat that in the year 1946 I want to have $549,000,000, or such amount as may be derived from the sale of surplus materials to be applied on the war debt; and I am not objecting to its being a part of the $2,600,000,000. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Ohio that if $2,600,000,000 is not available to be applied on the debt, we should still apply on the debt $549,000,000, or whatever money accrues from the sale of surplus property. I want the same understanding to apply to the year 1947 and the year 1948. I think the Senator's amendment should be changed if he is having it apply only to the fiscal year 1946.

Mr. TAFT. The resolution applies to the fiscal year 1948, beginning the 1st of next July.

Mr. WHERRY. I stand corrected. So the Senator from Ohio agrees with me that this amendment simply means that the $1,009,000,000, or whatever is collected from the sale of surplus property should be considered a part of the amount referred to in the Knowland amendment, and if no cushion is recovered from the general treasury there should still be applied on the debt whatever is recovered from the sale of surplus property for that year. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; that is correct, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that what the amendment provides?

Mr. TAFT. That is the effect of the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I will accept the amendment on that basis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio send the amendment to the desk if it is written?

Mr. TAFT. I will.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I was called to the telephone just as the Senator from Ohio presented his amendment. I wish to be sure that I understand the situation. I want to see to it, to the extent that I can, that at least the $2,600,000,000 provided for in the Knowland amendment is to be paid on the debt out of tax income. I am perfectly willing to apply on the national debt any additional money which may derive to the Treasury of the United States from the sale of surplus property over and above the $2,600,000,000.

Is that the proposal made by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TAFT. It is just the opposite of the proposal made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORSE. I was afraid of that.

Mr. TAFT. The language of my amendment, to be added to the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska, is as follows:

> But any such reduction in the fiscal year 1948 may be counted as part of the $2,600,000,000 referred to in the preceding sentence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] has modified his amendment as suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, because it is not my intention to add to the amount in the Knowland amendment the $549,000,000 for 1946 or the $1,959,000,000 for 1947. I am afraid that when this proposal is watered down instead of having a surplus which can be used under the Knowland amendment to pay on the debt, we shall not have such surplus. I do not want to be discouraging and I do not want to be pessimistic, but I am insisting that the money recovered from the sale of surplus property be applied on the public debt. That is all my amendment does.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I yield the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, and by which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska has now been modified, it seems to me that the effect would be to apply the $1,079,000,000 which it is estimated will be derived from the sale of surplus property in 1948 to the $2,600,000,000 of debt reduction provided for by the Knowland amendment. I think the Senator from Ohio will agree with me as to that.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator restate the point, Mr. President?

Mr. LUCAS. I say that if I correctly understand the purport of the modification which has been made in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, if the amendment as modified is adopted by the Senate, the amount of money which it is estimated will be received in 1948 from the sale of surplus property, which is believed to be approximately $1,079,000,000, will be applied to the $2,600,000,000 of debt reduction provided for by the Knowland amendment which has been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct; and the other $1,600,000,000 would have to come out of taxes.

Mr. LUCAS. That is as I understood it. In other words, Mr. President, by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, we would be striking a hard blow at what we have done today in our pledge to reduce the national debt.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is the interpretation of the senior Senator from Ohio, certainly it is not the explanation which I understood he made a few minutes ago to the Senate. I said that in the event $1,079,000,000 or some similar amount should be received in 1948 from the sale of surplus property, I would not object to providing that that amount of money be applied to the $2,600,000,000.

I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will restate his position.

Mr. TAFT. Certainly. I think my position is perfectly clear, but I shall be glad to restate it, if the Senator from Illinois will yield to me.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall yield any length of time that is desired, if the two Senators wish to confer to see if they can adjust their differences upon this controversial issue.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from Nebraska whether he intended the money obtained from surplus property sales to be an application on the debt, in addition to the $2,600,000,000. He said, "No." But when I examined his amendment, it seemed to me to be somewhat ambiguous. Therefore, I suggested that he clarify it in accordance with his own statement of intention when he first proposed it.

All I have proposed is that the amount from surplus property be applied to the debt. If it is $3,000,000,000, then the total reduction will be $3,000,000,000. If it is $1,000,000,000, however, then any such reduction may be counted as part of the $2,600,000,000 referred to in the preceding sentence.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, now I think I thoroughly understand what the Senator from Ohio has in mind in connection with the suggestion he has made, which has been adopted by the Senator from Nebraska as a modification of his amendment; and I am sure the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators understand the purpose. The purpose is to definitely cripple and impair what the Senate of the United States unanimously did with respect to the Knowland amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. President, the Senate unanimously adopted the Knowland amendment which provides that at least $2,600,000,000 shall be applied upon the national debt, out of the revenues produced from taxation. Now what the Senator from Ohio seeks to do through his modification of the Wherry amendment is to apply at least $1,000,000,000 received from the sale of surplus property in 1948 to the $2,600,000,000, which in reality would mean that in adopting the Knowland amendment we provided for the payment of $1,600,000,000 on the national debt, assuming that $1,000,000,000 is received from the sale of surplus property in 1948.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield first to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that it would seem advisable to have a quorum call so that the Senator from California may be present and may understand what is being done to his amendment. He originally proposed the application of $3,000,000,000, at least, of the revenues of the United States upon the national debt. The Senator from Ohio offered an amendment to make an application of only $1,000,000,000 to the national debt; and then, upon the floor of the Senate, as I understand the matter, the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from California reached an agreement to the effect that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio would be withdrawn if the Senator from California would reduce the amount provided by his amendment from $3,000,000,000 to $2,600,000,000.

Now the Senator from Ohio proposes to cut from the agreement he has made with the Senator from California whatever may be produced by way of surplus property receipts.

Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield for that purpose?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me, to permit me to make a statement of fact?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. Does he yield for the purpose requested by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LUCAS. I will not yield to anyone for any purpose, for the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield, though, to me, to permit me to answer a statement which is not a statement of fact?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not yield for the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think I have only 10 or 12 minutes remaining on the amendment.

Mr. President, I may be mistaken about the matter, and if I am I want the able Senator from Ohio to explain when I conclude the brief statement I am about to make. But as I sat here and tried to follow the able argument which was being made by the Senator from Nebraska upon his amendment, I thought, after a colloquy with him, that I understood it.

However, after propounding further questions and after listening to the debate, I have received the distinct impression that what he is attempting to do is, irrespective of whether the revenues from taxation are sufficient to reach a total of $2,600,000,000 of receipts over expenditures, the Senator from Nebraska wants the money which will come from the sale of surplus property in 1948 to be definitely applied upon the national debt.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. That is as I understood the Senator.

Then the Senator from Ohio offered his amendment, which the Senator from Nebraska accepted, apparently under a misapprehension of its purport, if I have correctly understood the Senator from Ohio. If I am rightly informed, that amendment simply means that instead of being an addition to the $2,600,000,000 to be applied as a reduction of the national debt, any amount which is received from the sale of surplus property in the year 1948 will be applied upon the $2,600,000,000 debt reduction which has been provided for by the amendment unanimously adopted by the Senate today.

Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio, and I ask him whether the statement I have made is correct.

Mr. TAFT. No; it is not a correct statement.

Mr. LUCAS. Then I respectfully request that the Senator from Ohio had better correct his previous remarks.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it was suggested that the agreement with the Senator from California was that the $2,600,000,000 be paid out of taxes. There was never any such suggestion, and there was no such agreement.

In the list of revenues of the Government which appears in the budget, as the Senator will observe if he will study the budget, there is included, besides receipts from taxes, $2,619,000,000 of miscellaneous receipts. If Senators will refer to that list of miscellaneous receipts, they will find that in it is included an item of $1,079,000,000 from the sale of surplus property. In other words, we have always counted the income from the sale of surplus property as a part of the income of the Government; and when we refer to a total income of $39,100,000,000, we include as a part of the total over $1,000,000,000 of receipts from the sale of surplus property.

Therefore, if this amendment is not adopted and if the ambiguity which I fear occurs, out of the total income of $39,100,000,000 we would be reducing the debt a net amount, not of $2,600,000,000, but of approximately $3,600,000,000, and therefore we would have remaining practically no money with which to make any tax reductions at all.

So, Mr. President, my amendment is entirely innocent and entirely in order and entirely what the Senator from Nebraska intended.

Mr. LUCAS. I regret that I cannot agree with the argument made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, as to the effect of his amendment. I doubt that the Senator from Nebraska agrees.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, in order to clarify the matter, taking the amendment as offered by the Senator from Nebraska I move that the word "should" in the last line thereof be stricken out and that the words "shall be" be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield for the purpose of the submission of the amendment?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not yield for that purpose. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa make his suggestion in his own time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield for the purpose.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire to discuss for a moment the amendment which was adopted by the Senate, which provides:

> It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

That means something. We have unanimously passed it by a record vote. We should not tamper with it by innocent, innocuous amendments, which may not be so innocent after all, when properly applied.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is such an innocent one, I would suggest that he withdraw the amendment and let the amendment go through as originally submitted by the Senator from Nebraska. I think everyone understands that, and I am not sure that anybody understands just what the Senator from Ohio contemplates doing as a result of the language of the amendment, or what the ultimate effect may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois seems to be unable to understand perfectly clear English and perfectly clear figures. The receipts from surplus property have been considered revenue. They have always been treated as such in the budget, and they are now so treated in the budget. They are included in the $39,100,000,000 of revenue in the President's budget, against which he is trying to charge thirty-seven and one-half billion of receipts. He is using them as revenue, and we have always considered them as revenue.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Ohio is correct to the extent of saying that the $39,100,000,000 includes receipts contemplated from surplus property. I had some doubt about it in my own mind, because there is a big difference between revenues and receipts. We usually think of revenues as coming from taxes. Receipts may come from any source. But in order to make sure, I just called the Director of the Budget, who advises me that the thirty-nine billion one hundred million includes all the miscellaneous receipts, including the contemplated $1,079,000,000 from surplus property.

But that does not necessarily clear up the complication involved in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, because if it be true that we must now consider the amendment of the Senator from California, which we have already adopted unanimously, as providing that out of the difference between the $39,100,000,000, made up of taxes and all other receipts, and whatever the expenses may be, $2,600,000,000 must be applied to the public debt, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, which the Senator from Nebraska is on the verge of accepting, provides that that $2,600,000,000 shall be reduced by whatever amount is involved in the sale of surplus property, I am laboring under a constant fear that step by step we are whittling down the amount we are finally going to apply to the public debt.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky for clearing up the misapprehension in the minds of some of the Senators. So far as we are concerned, receipts from surplus property sales are just like receipts from taxes, and that is as we have counted them all along. The original concurrent resolution on the desk reads:

> That revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $31,500,000,000.

So they have been counted already. The surplus left after we amended the concurrent resolution yesterday is about $6,100,000,000. Of that we apply $2,600,000,000 to the debt, if in addition to that we took another billion out of surplus property, we would be applying $3,600,000,000 to the debt, and, as I have said, leave something less than two and a half billion for possible application to reduction of taxes, if we wish to do that.

As I understand, the desire of the Senator from Nebraska is rather to establish a principle, not to change the $2,600,000,000. We are not whittling away the $2,600,000,000. When we get through with his amendment, we still reduce the debt by $2,600,000,000. He wants to establish the principle that if that reduction be taken out of surplus property, and we should sell $3,000,000,000 worth of surplus property, then we would have $3,000,000,000 to apply on the debt, and we would also have a much larger revenue and could afford to do it.

I do not see any reason why the Senator from Nebraska should not accept the amendment. He has accepted, I think, the amendment I suggested, and it makes the whole matter entirely clear, that is, that next year we are to have a reduction in the debt of $2,600,000,000 unless the surplus-property receipts exceed that sum, in which case we will have a reduction in the amount of the surplus-property receipts.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska, as amended, to strike out the Taft amendment, so-called, from the original proposal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland proposes to strike certain words from the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. TYDINGS. In that respect, Mr. President, I should like to say a brief word.

At the beginning of the present session I thought there was an excellent chance for my friends on the other side of the aisle to take over control of at least two of the three branches of the Government, but as this debate proceeds I am beginning to question whether they really want to take them over.

There are some splendid men on the other side of the aisle. There is the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], indeed I could call the roll and include almost every Senator on the other side of the aisle as a Presidential candidate, along with the great Governor of New York. But I think they are going to bring on a shoe shortage, and if we have a shoe shortage in this country, there are going to be millions of votes lost as the people in our large cities go barefooted, because the Republicans are marching up and down the hill so fast, it is going to take all the shoe factories a long while to keep them supplied with shoes.

We started out with a proposal for a $6,000,000,000 cut, publicized in all the newspapers day after day, not a cut because of revenues derived from the sale of surplus property, but that the expenses of the National Government were to be cut $6,000,000,000. Not $5,000,000,000, but $6,000,000,000, were to be cut from the expenditures of the Federal Government. The billion-dollar income we will get from the sale of surplus property was never mentioned in any of the original estimates of the reduction in governmental expenditures. The spending spree was to be cut by $6,000,000,000. That is what the newspapers said, that is what the House of Representatives voted for.

When the proposal came to this body, there was a division as to whether or not the expenditures of the Government were to be cut by six billion or by four and one-half billion. I voted for the four-and-one-half billion cut, thinking that my "Presidential" friends on the other side of the aisle were going to cut four and one-half billion from the expenses of the Government. Now, I have just learned that in the $4,500,000,000 there is included more than a billion dollars which does not represent a cut in expenditures at all but which is derived, and would be derived if we never made any reduction at all, from revenues of the Government. So that cuts the amount down to $3,500,000,000 from the original $6,000,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The reasoning of the Senator is peculiar. We are cutting the expenditures. The Senate has resolved, with the Senator's acceptance, I take it, to cut the expenditures of the Government from $37,500,000,000 to $33,000,000,000. That has no relation whatever to receipts, no relation to the surplus property, and no relation to anything else the Senator is talking about, so far as I can see.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his explanation, which but proves my point—that instead of there being a cut of $6,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000 in Government expenses, we are going to have a cut now of either five billion, if the House provision shall prevail, or three and one-half billion, if the Senate provision shall prevail. So that of the $6,000,000,000 that was the original target, we are up to $4,500,000,00^ already. There has been a retreat down the hill, after we marched up Suribachi, with colors flying, with the shells of economy bursting all around us. We went right down the hill, with the flag lowered, and lost $1,000,000,000 in the first foray against the capture of economy hill.

Then there was the talk of the 20 percent tax cut across the board. That has gone so far away that even Admiral Byrd, in the best plane which could be produced, would never find the thing called a 20-percent tax reduction across the board.

We are now down to the point of questioning whether we are going to get 10 percent. For heaven's sake, gentlemen, get together, or we Democrats will elect another President, even in spite of everything.

It was stated in the headlines week after week—and good headlines—the kind the people want to read—"Six billion-dollar slash in expenses." Lo and behold, there has been an error of 16½ percent in every headline that went forth 3 months ago, 2 months ago, 1 month ago, 1 week ago, 1 day ago. Even great Democratic newspapers like the Chicago Tribune are saying that we Democrats are likely to elect another President if the Republicans do not watch out. I wanted to dispute that with them, but since I came into the Chamber this afternoon and listened to the debate, it looks as if we might have to put up with another Democratic administration for 4 more years.

Even the friend of all of us, that outstanding columnist, Mr. Westbrook Pegler, in today's Times-Herald, writing in his column, Fair Enough, says the President we have—whom he calls "George Spelvin," and whom we call Harry Truman—looks to him like a pretty good bet for the Republican voters of the country.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at the end of my remarks the article to which I refer.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

I am very fond of the Senator from Ohio. He is one of the most industrious and able citizens of this Nation, and as his friend and as the friend of all the Presidential candidates on the other side I say, "Gentlemen, get together, and either go up the hill, or go down it, or stay in the middle, so we Democrats will know what you are trying to do."

[Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The galleries are admonished that any evidences of approval or disapproval are strictly against the rules of the Senate.

FAIR ENOUGH

(By Westbrook Pegler)

Somehow I keep coming back to that fellow. He sort of caught me that first day when they telephoned him that he was it, an ordinary, play-poker, play-piano county commissioner pitched into the most important, the most responsible and the most dangerous job in the world, and he said to the reporters, "pray for me, boys. And I mean it."

We had been having a lot of neck-prayers on dress occasions before then, but never, in many a year, a spontaneous, mother's-knee prayer from the heart of a man who would say "Dear God, help me," and not seem to mean "how am I doin', partner?"

He can be happy without flippancy and I dont recall hearing a sneer out of him since he took over. He can be serious without being morose. He can get tough without nastiness, but if you like it that way, don't go bawling to your maw that he hit you with your own shinny-stick.

I will bet you I know a million Republicans, which is nonsense because nobody knows a million anybodies, but anyway, I know a lot of Republicans who wish he was their fellow so they could be for him.

Why can't they?

Well, you know, the union bosses, the New Deal crowd, the bleeding-hearts, the Communists, the old girl—and all them. To be for him you have to be with them and sort of B squad at that.

But I don't know.

Madam Perkins, she was New Deal, and where is she at now? Ickes. Where is he? Wallace. Morgenthau. Biddle. Frankfurter. You don't hear much about "Old Weenie" any more, do you? Somebody must have taken up his latchkey. Nor the guy with the jaw. Remember Chester Bowles and all that commotion how you couldn't make an even trade of a pound of double-saws for a pound of hamburger if they canceled OPA? Missing: Chester Bowles; no reward.

Leon Henderson. No, thanks for the memory.

John L. Lewis. John had a permanent bead on "Mr. Big" and moved him around and kept him off balance and licked him every time they started. Then along comes Johnny One-Suit, always looking like his old maw just dressed him up and slicked his hair for the strawberry social, and he belts John right through the skylight without even a glare. He just turned his back on the toughest mugg in town and when he came back from Key West, John's lawyers were fanning him with their hats and he was muttering, "He pulled a knife on me." Hexed him, he did. Hexed him bow-legged, and the first guy to lick him since Girdler.

Do you notice how you don't notice his wife? No taffy pulls for the ladies of the press. No popping off about what the British ought to do to Franco. No cigars, cigarettes, souvenirs, and nuts. No graft. Have you noticed how quiet it is? Maybe not, but you don't notice a tooth when it quits aching.

It has been a long time since you heard of old Dan Tobin, of the teamsters in and out of the White House, and the PAC is buried alongside the Anti-Saloon League. Sidney Hillman and Wayne B. Wheeler setting on a cloud bragging what they had done and secretly calling each other the boastfullest old bore that ever lived, like Noah and the hero of the Galveston flood.

It took that fellow a spell to get the feel of the track, to learn timing and pace. He floundered on that proposition of 26 weeks at $25 a week for the laid-off war workers after the UAW had been boasting that it got the highest wages in history and even $80 a week for a sweeper.

I figure it was the old crowd who handed him that one, not so much that they hoped to get it as to show they had him for theirs. He was terrible on OPA when he tried to save it for them, but I figure he was still listening when he should have been thinking.

Then, all of a sudden, the fellow was there.

I remember the night Paavo Nurmi ran his first race in America in the old Garden. Little Al Copeland, the old sprinter and coach, was sitting there and after three or four laps he said, "Yep, this one is a runner."

And that is what I am thinking.

I am thinking that if the Republicans had him, at his present political size and with the class he has shown, not merely since election when he came on so stylish, but along in there when he was quietly passing the old New Dealers on the turns, they would have it all. The Democrats would have nobody then because he is all they have got.

Don't heckle me about his past with Pendergast or the way he stalls and fills in about union legislation or Lilienthal or the budget.

I keep coming back to him in spite of Pendergast. I don't reconcile it. I look him over and hear him in a voice that was made for talking to people and not to excite and make fools of them and I feel that still he is all-American and will belly up to Stalin and step on his toes and say "Listen, you," instead of, "Now, Joe."

I notice that he has ditched them all, Wallace, the widow, and Ickes, and made them tag along and it doesn't matter a damn to him if they don't because if they quit him that will win him two votes for every one they can take away.

I can feel that he hates the Communists and has been a very good ratter driving them out, even up to now.

I keep coming back to him, no wonderman, but George Spelvin, American, trimming a little but doing his best and with his pants a little knee-sprung from kneeling and not to Stalin, either.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to strike certain words from the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia obtained the floor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I ask unanimous consent to be excused from attendance on the Senate for the remainder of the afternoon. One of my friends has become very seriously ill, and I am trying to get him into a hospital.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the consent is granted.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the vote, which all of us want to see cast, to end the discussion of what we shall do with the national debt. I am in thorough accord with the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, that proceeds realized from the sale of surplus war property should be applied to the debt created in its purchase, but I am not at all disturbed over the proposal that we should endeavor to apply at least $2,600,000,000 to the national debt, because if we applied as much as $5,000,000,000 a year to the debt, it would take over half a century to pay it. If in the period of our greatest prosperity, we debate and hesitate to apply as much as $2,600,000,000 to the debt, we know that in periods of adversity we shall apply nothing to it.

Mr. President, I am unwilling that this debate should come to a close without inviting the attention of the Senate to the fact that the real and actual debt is from eight to ten billion dollars more than the technical debt of $259,000,000,000 which we have been discussing. That comes about by reason of the act passed by Congress last year fixing a debt limit of $275,000,000,000. In that act we changed the definition of how the Treasury was to carry the obligations on its books, from a maturity value, which is the actual debt we will ultimately pay, to current redemption value; and in making that technical change many persons were led to believe that we had automatically written off about $8,000,000,000 of debt. That is not the case; that amount is still there, and it will have to be paid. Furthermore, Mr. President, that act, which was passed last year, provided that guaranteed obligations of the Government which were held by the Treasury Department would not be included in the total of the national debt. How many of those obligations the Treasury now holds I do not know; but it is a considerable sum.

It was said in debate earlier today that the estimated receipts of $2,194,000,000 from the social-security tax, when invested in Government bonds, would not increase the national debt. I know of nothing in the Social Security Act, or in any other act, that requires anything more of the Treasury Department than to issue bonds equal to the receipts of the social-security fund.

In the total of $39,000,000,000-plus of expected revenue is included this item of $2,194,000,000. Prior to 1939 the Treasury had to issue 3-percent bonds to be turned over to the trustees of the Social Security Act trust fund. In 1939 Congress changed that and provided that such bonds would bear the current interest rates. We know that at least up until 1946 the Treasury put into the general fund all the receipts from the social-security tax, spent the money, and did not retire any bonds to offset the bonds placed in the hands of the trustees of the Social Security Act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Treasury did that, but when it was done it showed up in the deficit of the Federal Government; so that when there was a deficit of $3,000,000,000 for the year 1937, we will say, that included $1,000,000,000 of the funds to which the Senator referred.

It is true that the cash which the Treasury gets does not necessarily have to be used to reduce other debt, but it does show up in the expenses of the Government, and if the budget is balanced, then necessarily the cash that is received must reduce other debt. The total debt is not increased, provided the budget is balanced. The key is to balance the budget.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I would say to my distinguished colleague from Ohio that we must do two things: We not only must balance the budget but we must require the Treasury Department to retire outstanding bonds, if and when they issue bonds for the social-security trust fund.

Otherwise the debt will of necessity be increased by that amount. So I say, Mr. President, we are actually facing a debt of from $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 more than we have been discussing, and it well behooves us today to vote to make a maximum payment in this period of prosperity to the end that faith and confidence in the fiscal soundness of the Government may be maintained.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I only wish to say that I oppose the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], which I hardly think is offered seriously. It seems obvious to me that we have settled the problem of how much reduction we want to make in the debt. We settled it previously by action taken on the amendment of the Senator from California. We want to make a reduction of $2,600,000,000. I think that amount too much, and I agreed to the amendment reluctantly. But I certainly do not want to change the amount so as to provide for a reduction of $3,600,000,000, which I think would be far too much. Therefore, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Maryland will be rejected.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I missed a part of the earlier debate, but as I understand the Senator has no intention by his amendment to change the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from California, which was unanimously adopted, and which provides that not less than $2,600,000,000 shall be applied toward payment of the Federal public debt.

Mr. TAFT. There would be no change whatever. Some misapprehension arose because the suggestion was that the receipts from the sale of surplus property were not included in the revenues. They are included in revenues. They have been included in revenues all along from the very beginning of the calculation. Without the amendment I suggested to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, the effect, it seemed to me, would be to apply about $3,600,000,000 on the debt.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Let us assume that the Senator from Nebraska had not offered his amendment at all, is it not the case that the amounts received from the sale of surplus property are covered into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury, and are included in the estimates made by the Director of the Budget as to what the revenues or receipts of the Federal Government will be during the coming fiscal year?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is entirely correct. Not only that, but they are included in the word "revenues" in the concurrent resolution we have been considering, which states that revenues for the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000. That figure is reached by including the receipts from the disposition of surplus property.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are also included, as I understand, the receipts from the social-security tax, which are invested in an equivalent amount of Government securities. So that if by any chance the requirements of the social-security fund should take all the fund which is collected in any one year, it would be necessary in order to arrive at the real net income of the Government, its revenue, to take the social-security tax from the total amount because it is not revenue in the real sense of the word. It is calculated as revenues just as are surplus property proceeds and a great many miscellaneous taxes.

Mr. TAFT. As a matter of fact, the Senator is not quite correct because in the ordinary method of figuring the receipts, the net appropriation to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund, $1,987,000,000, is deducted before reaching the $39,100,000,000. For some reason it is treated differently from any of the other receipts. The Senator will find in the total estimate of budget receipts a total figure which includes the taxes on the old-age insurance, and then a net appropriation is specifically deducted, not as an expense, but as a reduction from costs.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, but there is bound to be a difference, because from year to year the Treasury has used the excess of the tax received under the Social Security Act over the outlay which has been required and applied it to the current expenses of the Government. It has issued Government bonds in lieu of that excess. It is required by the law that money from this source be invested in Government bonds, and the Government has expended the money and issued its bonds in lieu of cash.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator. I merely ask, Mr. President, that the pending amendment be rejected.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask the question because there has apparently been a misunderstanding which I should like to have cleared up. As I understand the situation now, the amount to be applied under the amendment which the Senate unanimously adopted would be not less than $2,600,000,000, and that in nowise would be changed by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska or the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. The purport of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is that the $2,600,000,000 shall not be reduced, but in the event—and it is rather a far-fetched possibility—that surplus property should be sold in the amount we will say of $3,500,000,000 in 1 year, the entire $3,500,000,000 would be applied on the debt.

Mr. TAFT. Instead of $2,600,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes, instead of $2,600,000,000. So there might be applied to the debt a larger sum, but in no event a lesser sum than $2,600,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is entirely correct. That is exactly the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understood the discussion of the Knowland amendment and the compromise which was effected at $2,600,000,000, it was stated that the $2,600,000,000 figure would be taken to conference. When that is done usually the figure determined upon by the Senate does not stand in conference. We will assume the House to say, "We are not going to have any figures whatsoever," or that the proposal of the Senator from Ohio, which was for a reduction of $1,000,000,000, is agreed upon. Then we will assume that surplu. property sales amount to $1,000,000,000, and that money is turned into the Treasury to be applied on the debt. That leaves the entire difference between the appropriation and the Federal income to be applied on tax reduction, and in my opinion would leave the Knowland amendment completely meaningless.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me at that point?

Mr. TAFT. One moment. Does the Senator from Vermont know of any way by which to compel the House to do anything they do not wish to do?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know of any way.

Mr. TAFT. Any action we ever take in the Senate is always subject to objection in the House of Representatives. We cannot get away from that. I do not know what the Senator from Vermont wants us to do.

Mr. AIKEN. It is my opinion that if after taking this to conference the Senate conferees come away with an agreement of a one-billion-dollar debt reduction they will be doing very well. I believe that a part of the reduction in Government expenses certainly should be applied to reducing the national debt. The people at home are asking to have the debt reduced to a safe margin and are asking to have the budget balanced. They would also like tax reductions, but not many of them put tax reduction ahead of the other two conditions, namely, balancing the budget and reducing our obligations to a point consistent with national safety.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should say to the Senator from Vermont that if I thought such a situation would be brought about I would not be favorable to the amendment, but I call the attention of the able Senator from Vermont to the fact that the adoption of the concurrent resolution merely expresses certain judgments of the Congress; and if perchance the conference committee should reduce the amount to such a point that the Congress did not feel it was adequate to a sound fiscal arrangement, we would still have the last crack at the proposal, because while the Constitution says that revenue legislation must originate in the House of Representatives, it is also a requirement that the United States Senate must pass any tax measure. We have it in our power to decide whether there shall be any tax reduction at all; and if there is no tax reduction, or if there is a limited tax reduction and a surplus occurs in the Treasury of the United States, under the existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may take money from the excess of receipts over disbursements and apply it to the Federal public debt.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the able Senator from California very accurately states the situation. This is only a declaration of intention. We may have to amend our views in conference, although the Senator may be sure that I shall do everything possible to try to maintain the $2,600,000,000 application to the debt. However, we do have the last word on the question of whether or not we shall make a tax reduction and how large a tax reduction we shall make. Everything over and above that must be applied on the national debt. It will be automatically applied on the national debt under the present system of operation.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I was about to say that I think the Senator from California has correctly stated what may happen. But I wish to add that I think the Senate should aim its sights high at the target of good, sound government, because, after all, the resolution must go to conference. We must remember that leading Members of the House made the promise of a 20-percent reduction in taxes, straight across the board. They made the assertion that we should eliminate 1,000,000 Federal employees, without knowing from what departments they could be eliminated. We must deal with Members of the House. We shall probably have to compromise with them. Therefore, I do not believe that we can aim too high at the target of sound and progressive government.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, last year Congress passed and the President signed a bill relating to the use of certain credits from the sale of surplus property abroad, in limited amounts, to finance the exchange of scholars, and for other purposes. Would the present proposal interfere with that arrangement?

Mr. TAFT. No. As I understand the Senator from Nebraska, his amendment relates only to money which is derived from the sale of surplus property and paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. As I understand, in the situation referred to by the Senator from Arkansas that money never gets into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wished to make it clear that it was not intended to alter that program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The situation which might arise under this amendment is automatically somewhat confusing. While it is not binding so far as the overall goal is concerned, if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska had any effect at all, it would be this: Let us suppose that, regardless of the $39,100,000,000 which we have estimated as revenues from all sources, the revenues did not reach that amount. Let us suppose that when all the appropriation bills were added together they aggregated an amount equal to all the revenues from all sources. There would be no surplus of income over outgo. Would the Senator's amendment still require that the amount obtained from the sale of surplus property be applied to the public debt?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that were true, would it not create a deficit which would automatically increase the public debt by the same amount by which it was reduced as a result of the sale of surplus property?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator from Kentucky is correct. That is a proper criticism of the amendment. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to pay our debts, even though we must borrow the money with which to pay them.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, we would be taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another, and the result would be the illusion that we had more money than we had at the start.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the very argument which was used 2 years ago on the floor of the Senate as a reason why we should not adopt the amendment when the conferees came back with the report. The Senator can laugh it off if he so desires; but I maintain that the money which is recovered from the sale of surplus property should be applied on the debt, if for no other reason than to let the people know what it is, even if we must borrow the money. If we had to borrow the money, perhaps some of the people would object to buying bonds. The time has come when that question must be met, and that is the principle which we are declaring here today.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator wishes to emphasize the fact that if we apply the proceeds from the sale of surplus property to the debt, it will be brought to the attention of the people that we are really living beyond our income, because we should not have used the money for current expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to strike certain words from the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] as modified.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the debate on the Wherry amendment, with the modification suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], has made one or two principles pretty clear.

I think it has been made clear that there is not much inclination in the Senate to levy taxes with which to pay for debt reduction.

As I understand the discussion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], what they really have in mind is to use property which the Government now owns, namely, war surplus property, and apply it on the national debt thereby enabling them to use whatever savings we can make in the expenses of administering the Government for application on a tax-reduction program. I am perfectly willing to have whatever money we may get from transferring Government surplus property into money as payments on the national debt but I do not want those sums to be used as a substitute for at least a $2,600,000,000 payment on the national debt collected through taxes.

Hence I wish to express for the RECORD my view. I think the time has come when we ought to recognize the importance of levying taxes with which to reduce the national debt. I think it is very clear from the discussion of the senior Senator from Ohio that it is his desire to reduce taxes at this time rather than reduce the national debt. It happens to be my judgment that we cannot reduce taxes at this time and make any substantial payment on the national debt. When we talk about applying income from the sale of surplus property, on the basis of the fact that the President's budget includes within the term "revenue" receipts from the sale of surplus property, I would point out that that is a misuse of the term "revenue." When we translate governmental real property, governmental tanks, or governmental property of any other type into money, all we do is to indulge in recoupment.

For example if one gives $100 to his wife to buy a piece of furniture and she spends only $80 for it and gives him back $20 he has not received $20 in new income. What he has done is recouped $20 from the $100 that he set aside for the purchase of a piece of furniture.

I have on my desk here a book belonging to the Government. I imagine it is worth about 50 cents. If the Government sells the book for 50 cents and applies the 50 cents on the national debt it has not obtained for itself any new revenue but has only engaged in a form of recoupment.

I am perfectly willing to apply the proceeds from surplus property as payments on the national debt, but in addition to that I want to maintain at least the present tax structure and take at least $2,600,000,000 of tax revenue for additional payment on the national debt. I certainly think that is the spirit of the Knowland proposal and if it is not we ought to make it so.

If we are really to reduce the national debt, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] recently pointed out in his exchange with the Senator from Nebraska, we must tax the American people to do it. That is what the politicians do not like to do.

I think we would serve the people best in this year of great prosperity by levying taxes so that we can pay, not $2,600,000,000, but a great deal more, on the public debt. I voted for that figure in the Knowland proposal, because it was the best we could get. What we ought to be saying to the American people today is that we propose to tax them to pay, if at all possible, $10,000,000,000 on the national debt and protect the value of the American dollar. I think that if we made this issue clear to the people, they would be willing to pay about that sum on the debt if we showed good faith in eliminating unnecessary administrative costs of government.

We have now reached a point where it is proposed, because we are going to call the proceeds from the sale of surplus property revenue, to take that so-called revenue and apply it to the $2,600,000,000 involved in the Knowland amendment. I think that would be a most unfortunate fiscal policy for the Senate to adopt. I think it is our duty to inform the American people as to the great fiscal danger which confronts them today.

So, Mr. President, I would amend the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, as proposed a few minutes ago by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on behalf of both of us, by changing the word "should" in the last line of the Wherry amendment to the word "shall."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order at the present time.

Mr. MORSE. I serve notice that when it is in order, that is the amendment that I shall offer.

I close these remarks by reiterating that what the debate during the past hour and a quarter has really shown to the American people is that the design is to reduce our obligation to raise debt reduction revenue by way of taxation by applying on the National debt recoupment money obtained from trading already owned Federal property into money. If that is not juggling, if that is not indulging in fiscal gymnastics, then I have never seen that type of gymnastics.

I think that the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] places form over substance. I think that the proposal of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has as its primary objective a book transaction by applying surplus property which is already owned by the Government as recoupment payment on the national debt. By using such surplus property recoupment payments as debt reduction credits against the $2,600,000,000 called for under the Knowland amendment then the plan will be to reduce income taxes. I think that that is pure legerdemain and I am against it because I think the American people should be told that this year they should pay a substantial sum on the national debt out of tax dollars. I do not see how we are ever going to protect the value of our dollar if we do not tax ourselves now before it is too late in order to pay a considerable sum on the national debt this year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there are two points of view involved in this debate. They have been involved in the debate from the very beginning of the discussion of the resolution which seeks to reduce the budget submitted by the President and to place a ceiling upon appropriations. Those two contrary points of view are between the Members of the Congress who believe that any excess of receipts or of revenue should be applied to the reduction of the national debt, and those who, following the lead of the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means and the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, want to preserve the largest amount of excess revenues or receipts for the reduction of taxes. Republican leadership would give tax cut for big business priority over debt reduction.

When the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] offered his amendment in the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget to provide that at least $3,000,000,000 of revenues in excess of expenditures should be applied upon the national debt, he met the argument from Republican leaders in the House and in the Senate that if the amendment were adopted it would make it practically impossible to reduce any taxes. So in the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget the amendment of the Senator from California was voted down.

I glory, Mr. President, in the fact that the Senator from California had the courage to carry on the fight and to bring it upon this floor, to demand that whatever excess of revenue there might be should be applied upon the national debt, at least to the extent of $3,000,000,000.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] speaking upon this floor yesterday, called attention to the fact, which no one can deny, that big business interests in this country are at this moment charging "everything that the traffic will bear," instead of reducing prices so as to make it possible for the people of the United States to buy the things which they need. These great enterprises which made billions of dollars out of the war are keeping their prices up, although the facts show that their profits in 1946 were substantially greater than their profits in 1945.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a fact which is so definite and certain that nobody can possibly deny it or disprove it; namely that the profits of the corporations of the United States over a number of years have not shown more than 4 to 4½ percent net over all. I shall produce some figures which are very authoritative and which will prove what I am saying. In other words, American corporations have received on hazard investment and capital only a little more and, in some cases, less, than they could have gotten in savings banks.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the United States Steel Corp. for the 5 years of the war was engaged in the hazardous business of selling the product of the steel mills to the bondholders of America, to the taxpayers of America, to the people of America. They were facing a great hazard. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that if he will refer to Moody on Banks and Business for their monthly earnings, he will discover that the United States Steel Co.'s earnings in 1946 were about 37 percent greater than they were in 1945.

THOSE WHO PROFITED MOST FROM WAR WOULD ALSO PROFIT MOST FROM INCOME-TAX CUT

What has been transpiring here? The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] offered an amendment to perfect, as was suggested, the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] by reducing the amount that could be applied upon the national debt from $3,000,000,000 as proposed by the Senator from California, to $1,000,000,000. That amendment was designed to carry out the original plan to have as large an amount as possible applied not to preserve the soundness of the bonds of the United States, not to preserve the American fiscal system, but to reduce the tax burden upon those who are paying income taxes. That was the purpose. But it was quite evident, Mr. President, that there were a sufficient number of Republican Senators in this body who, when joined by the Democratic Senators, would see to it that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio could not possibly prevail. The rejection of that amendment was avoided by an agreement between the Senator from California and the Senator from Ohio by which the Senator from California agreed to change his amendment from $3,000,000,000 to be applied upon the national debt to only $2,600,000,000. In consideration of that the Senator from Ohio abandoned his amendment to reduce the amount to be applied upon the national debt to only $1,000,000,000.

What happened? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] offered his amendment to provide that the receipts, not the revenues, to be derived from the sale of surplus property should also be applied upon the national debt. That was a sound, straightforward, clear-thinking amendment, because this surplus property already belongs to the United States. In no sense does it constitute any revenue. It is property that belongs to the people of the United States, in the form of surplus plants, in the form of guns, in the form of clothing, in the form of trucks, automobiles, and all of the materials which were manufactured during the war in order to win the war, and in the building and making of which those who will most benefit from the reduction of income taxes made profits beyond imagination.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say that the earnings of the Bethlehem Steel Co. likewise increased, not to the same extent as those of United States Steel, but perhaps only 18 percent. I may say that the earnings of du Pont de Nemours, that top-flight company which owns many of the concentrated enterprises of America, earned 52 percent more in 1946 than in 1945. Yet Senators upon the other side of the aisle say "Let us reduce the taxes of persons and corporations whose incomes have so greatly increased."

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I merely desire to finish the statement I rose to make. It can be proved beyond all question of doubt that all the profits the Senator has been talking about, and others are talking about, are in 50-cent dollars, and they are related to real invested dollars made by sweat and toil before the era of inflation. If credit is to be given to 50-cent dollars in connection with all the labor, wage and salary demands which have been made, then credit in 50-cent dollars must be given to the profits of corporations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that unless we begin now to reduce the national debt by every single penny we can gather, the bondholders will be paying in 100-cent dollars.

Let us be realistic about it. The debt this country now faces is $259,000,000,000, after a reduction of $20,000,000,000 made during the last year by the application by the present administration of excess cash to the debt. That action by the administration reduced the national debt from $279,000,000,000 to $259,000,000,000. But, Mr. President, that $259,000,000,000—two hundred and fifty-nine thousand million dollars—is ten times greater than the debt which was accumulated to fight World War I.

O Mr. President, we adopted the policy of income-tax reduction, instead of debt reduction, during the 12 years of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. Five times the Congress passed an income tax reduction law. Then the depression came. In March 1933, when there was a change of administration, the national debt of the United States was above $22,000,000,000. There had been no substantial reduction of the debt. So we found ourselves plunged into depression with a national debt which made the fight against depression difficult and hazardous, indeed. But in spite of all the spending that was carried on during the fight against the depression, we entered the recent war in 1941 with a national debt of less than $50,000,000,000. Twenty billion dollars has already been paid off. Suppose only $200,000,000,000 had been added for the purpose of fighting the war. If $5,000,000,000 a year were applied upon the war debt, it would take 40 years to pay it off. What are businessmen thinking of if they imagine that there can be any profit for them in reduced taxes while we permit the national debt to stay at the tremendous pinnacle it has reached? The very system of free enterprise is at stake, Mr. President. If we permit the greedy and the narrow-minded and the selfish to drive us into reducing taxes, now that the revenues of the United States are twice as great as they were at any time during the era of Harding and Coolidge and Hoover, we shall be destroying every effort to pay off the national debt.

TO CUT INCOME TAXES BEFORE REDUCING DEBT IS TO COURT DISASTER

Ah, Mr. President, we have not yet reached peace. The distinguished Presiding Officer of this body knows how narrow is the margin and how difficult the road to achieve permanent peace among the nations of the world. If we do not achieve peace, and achieve it speedily, all this talk about income-tax reduction will be merely idle gossip, meaning nothing. If we confront another crisis, either an economic crisis within our own borders or an international crisis beyond them, while this debt remains at $259,000,000,000, it will be impossible to preserve the American system, because we cannot see revenues decline again while the debt remains at this dizzy height.

O Mr. President, the Senator from California did a noble piece of work when, by standing by his guns, he brought about the support, upon the Republican side of his amendment to apply $2,600,000,000 to the national debt. But now it is proposed by the language inserted by the Senator from Ohio, but which will be stricken out if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is adopted, to acquire more money to reduce taxes—less for the payment of the debt and more for the reduction of taxes. I say to you, Mr. President, and I say to all other Members of the Senate, that if we follow that policy, we shall be following a policy of driving the American free enterprise system down the hill to disaster.

Mr. President, I shall do what I can to support the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Moore
Baldwin	Hatch	Morse
Ball	Hawkes	Murray
Barkley	Hayden	Myers
Brewster	Hickenlooper	O'Conor
Bricker	Hill	O'Daniel
Bridges	Hoey	O'Mahoney
Brooks	Holland	Overton
Buck	Ives	Revercomb
Butler	Jenner	Robertson, Va.
Cain	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Capehart	Johnston, S. C.	Saltonstall
Capper	Kem	Stewart
Connally	Kilgore	Taft
Cooper	Knowland	Taylor
Cordon	Lodge	Thomas, Okla.
Donnell	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Downey	McCarran	Thye
Dworshak	McCarthy	Tobey
Eastland	McClellan	Tydings

Flanders	Malone	Wherry
Fulbright	Martin	White
George	Maybank	Wiley
Green	Millikin	Wilson

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent, and that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I have been sitting here all afternoon listening to the able Senators across the aisle lecture us on this side in respect to fiscal matters. I cannot understand how any Senator on the other side of the aisle, representing an administration which for the past 14 years has known so little about financial matters, which has known so little about how to balance the budget, which has created the greatest debt in the history of the Nation, which has taxed our people the highest sums in our history, which never once in 14 years ever balanced the budget, which will go down in history as being the most expensive administration in the history of the Nation——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CAPEHART. I refuse to yield at the moment. I do not see how Senators can stand over there and lecture us on this side, who have been in control for less than 2 months, trying to make provision to reduce a $260,000,000,000 debt, trying in some way to give the American people a little relief from onerous and burdensome taxes, trying to unscramble the confusion and to curtail the waste and extravagance of 14 years of Democratic administration. I am satisfied that the American people, the taxpayers, those who have paid these heavy taxes during the last 14 years, and who will have to pay them for the next 100 years, are getting a great chuckle out of the debate which is proceeding in the United States Senate this afternoon.

We on this side can well take care of ourselves, and we certainly do not want to be lectured by those who themselves have been so unsuccessful for 14 years in doing what we at least are trying to do, and have only about 7 weeks in which to do it.

WATER TRANSPORTATION SERVICE FOR ALASKA

Mr. JENNER obtained the floor.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JENNER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish to ask that the Senate proceed to consider an emergency measure, which will take only 5 minutes.

Mr. JENNER. I refuse to yield for that purpose, because the debate will come out of my time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I did not mean that it should come out of the Senator's time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington may ask unanimous consent that this emergency matter be considered in his own time.

Mr. JENNER. Then that is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Washington is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 65.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, what is the resolution?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I shall explain it.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish to have House Joint Resolution 122 substituted for the Senate joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will proceed. The House joint resolution is not available at the moment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I saw it at the desk a few moments ago.

Mr. TAFT. I object to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the unanimous-consent request by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to say that this is an emergency matter involving Alaskan shipping. A similar joint resolution has been unanimously passed by the House of Representatives, and unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It involves the extension of the authority of the Maritime Commission to act on Alaskan shipping on the expiration of its powers, which will expire tomorrow.

The House is waiting for the Senate to act. This is a matter that was acted on unanimously by the Senate committee and is very important. Unless prompt action is taken on the joint resolution, Alaskan shipping will close down on Monday, which, of course, would cause great hardship.

Mr. TAFT. The House joint resolution is not on the desk, and we cannot take action until it is.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wanted to make the explanation so that when I rise again there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House joint resolution is now available, and the clerk will state it by title for the benefit of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the House joint resolution be substituted for the Senate joint resolution and be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is whether the Senate will give unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business for the consideration of the measure to which the Senator from Washington refers. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senator from Washington now asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 122, which, the Chair is advised, has been reported today by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution.

Mr. TAFT. Is the House joint resolution the same as the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Exactly the same.

Mr. TAFT. And the Senate joint resolution has been unanimously approved by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. I have no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the joint resolution reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate is identical with the measure as it passed the House save in two particulars. Two amendments were offered in the committee, which were agreeable to the proponents of the joint resolution. They were persuasive with the other members of the committee; they had the approval of the Maritime Commission, and I think I am justified in saying they had the approval of the shipping interests of the country which are concerned with the situation in the North Pacific.

The joint resolution authorizes the Martime Commission to keep in operation various vessels in the Alaskan trade. I express the hope that there may be favorable consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were stated, as follows, on page 1, line 8, after the word "arrangements" to strike out "with American citizen operators deemed by the Commission" and insert "with American citizens operating American flag-line vessels deemed by the Commission," and on page 2, line 20, after the words "by the" to strike out "Commission for the use of the privately owned vessels, and" and insert "Commission for the use of the existing privately owned vessels, and in the case of vessels acquired subsequent to the enactment of this act an amount equivalent to 15 per centum per annum of the purchase price of said vessel plus capitalized betterments, and".

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I know that a freshman Senator is not supposed to think, much less talk, on the floor of this body, but I want to serve notice now on my distinguished colleagues on both sides of the aisle that as a freshman Senator I am disgusted.

In the first place, it seems to me that there are many candidates for President on both sides of the aisle. I have heard from Senators across the aisle arguments for the reduction of the national debt in order to save our great Nation. To me, as a freshman Senator, that is refreshing, because I thought all the New Dealers had been so indoctrinated that they did not need to worry about a debt; the suggestion was the people merely owed it to themselves. So why should we be discussing here at all the reduction of the $259,000,000,000 debt, when we have been taught for the past 14 years that debt did not mean anything?

I am sorry that I even voted for the Knowland amendment; if I had an opportunity to change my vote I would do so now, because, as I see it, the attitude of the Senate, and particularly of the Senators on the other side is to prevent any debt reduction, and, furthermore, to prevent any tax reduction.

I deplore the differences which seem to be growing amongst the Senators on the other side. Their great President, whom, in spite of us, they are afraid they are going to elect for four more years, wanted to reduce the debt only $202,000,000, and yet the Senators cry their eyes out about a billion-dollar reduction proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. That is almost five times as much as President Truman wanted to reduce the debt.

I say in all sincerity, this is much ado about nothing. If we are going to reduce the debt and taxes, there is only one way to do it, and that is not to debate and discuss resolutions that show the attitude of Congress. The way to do it is by reducing the expenditures, and the way to do that is by efficiency in government. But the selfish attitude taken here indicates to me that it is going to take a tremendous effort to reduce either debt or taxes; and I say in all sincerity that to me tax reduction seems just as important as debt reduction. The tax structure imposed upon the Nation today is so burdensome that the free-enterprise system of America cannot continue if there should be the least bit of shaking of the national economy. I am afraid there are some on this floor who would not mind seeing the financial structure crumble.

I think the Nation's debt should be divided into its two proper categories. There is a debt that came about as a result of the war, and then there is another part of the debt which came about through New Deal boondoggling. I should like to see whatever funds are applied to the reduction of the debt applied in such fashion that the American people would know what they were paying, whether they were paying for a great war emergency, or whether they were paying for New Deal boondoggling.

We heard the slogan "Don't worry about the debt—you simply owe it to yourselves!"

Senators on the other side eulogized the Senator from California for his statesmanship in taking this great and noble stand. At least, if nothing has happened here by reason of these windy resolutions—that is all they are—we have converted those on the other side from the viewpoint of the New Deal to a concern about debt.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I am happy that we have so many converts, as has been pointed out, to the philosophy of debt reduction. I am surprised that there should be any question regarding tax reduction, as I had understood that that was at least of some consequence.

In recent weeks, from both columnists and various sides, in Congress and outside, we have heard a good deal about the suggestion of a 20-percent tax reduction as being impossible in the extreme, and as something that only demagogs of the first water would dare even to suggest, particularly in a period preceding an election campaign.

Consequently I was interested to find in the records that there is distinguished sponsorship for the idea that not only can we reduce taxes by 20 percent, but that we can and should reduce taxes by 50 percent; and that particular policy was advocated on the eve of an election by none other than the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] at that time the distinguished majority leader of this Chamber. I take the liberty to quote from the New York World Telegram of Friday, June 30, 1944, which, as I recall, it was an election year, the Senator was speaking in what I am sure was not an entirely nonpolitical forum, since it was before the Annual Independence Day Dinner of the Society of Tammany, in the National Democratic Club, New York.

I find this statement:

TAXES TO BE HALVED, BARKLEY ASSERTS

ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Democrat, of Kentucky, Senate majority leader and potential Democratic candidate for Vice President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am very happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid that my potential candidacy was no more potential than that of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am happy that the Senator from Kentucky refers to it, as, five times, distinguished Members on that side, beginning with the Senator from Arizona and ending with the Senator from Kentucky, have thought it proper or prudent to bring up that very matter.

Whether they think it has any relevance to existing facts, I think it would be well for at least some of the Senators to bear in mind their own potential candidacies of other years and perhaps exhibit that tenderness for political sensibility which would be justified by their own experience, when we were reliably informed that certain gentlemen were even going to retire from the Democratic Convention because of unforeseen developments that created dissension of a rather serious character. I am quite willing to drop the matter of potential candidacies of any sort, but I myself do not propose to be a target further for suggestions from that side of the Chamber, which are only aspersions upon the motives of Members of this Chamber, strictly forbidden by the rules.

I am simply reading the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BREWSTER. If the Senator will wait a moment, I should like to finish this quotation. I shall then be happy to yield to him.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Democrat, of Kentucky, Senate majority leader and potential Democratic candidate for Vice President, declared last night that taxes will be reduced after the war by "at least 50 percent."

I shall be happy to have the Senator from Kentucky tell the Senate and the country when that pledge, made on the eve of the 1944 Democratic Convention, is going to be redeemed, and what he considers to be "after the war," and how the 50-percent reduction in taxes is going to be achieved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely rose to suggest to the Senator that when I referred to his potential candidacy, which has been a matter of some comment in the public press and otherwise, I meant to cast no aspersions upon him. I did it merely because he had referred to what he called my potential candidacy of the past, which he did not regard as an aspersion nor as an impugnment of any motive.

I rose also to say that so far as I am concerned I intended to compliment the Senator from Maine, because I am strongly for him for the Republican nomination for Vice President. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREWSTER. I appreciate very much the sponsorship of the Senator from Kentucky. I suspect perhaps he thinks it may be the kiss of death. [Laughter.] That is not improper. I did not drag this subject in by the heels. It was only incidental to the report contained in the newspapers—in the New York World Telegram of that time. But I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact that it was only four days ago that, when I was advocating certain measures on this floor in the debate, he dragged this particular suggestion in by the heels. It was peculiarly ungrateful—I blush when I say it—on the part of the Senator from Kentucky, because it was in 1944 that, as the Senator well knows, I gave my most enthusiastic support at a distinguished gathering to the nomination of the Senator from Kentucky for the Presidency, and now to suggest that I should retire to the Vice Presidency seems to be ingratitude in the highest degree. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. That particular endorsement turned out to be the real kiss of death because I was not nominated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] striking out certain words from the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I think that in the debate this afternoon it is easily possible for us to overlook inadvertently the real effect of the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I desire to address myself very briefly to his motion, as I understand it, and to speak in opposition to it. I precede my remarks concerning the motion by a statement of recognition of the high ability and high integrity and high motives of my distinguished colleague from Maryland.

The motion, as I understand it, of the Senator from Maryland relates to certain language which was submitted by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] as an amendment to the so-called Wherry proposal. It will be recalled that as a result of the action taken by the Senate this afternoon the so-called Knowland amendment was adopted in the following language:

It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

Mr. President, it will be observed that the effect of the amendment which was adopted is to agree upon the figure $2,600,000,000, or rather not less than that amount, to be applied toward the reduction of the public debt. There was then submitted by the Senator from Nebraska his amendment, which reads:

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that all proceeds from the transfer or disposition of property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, should be applied toward reduction of the public debt.

Mr. President, it will be observed that the Senator from Ohio proceeded upon the theory and with the proper solicitude that the language offered by the Senator from Nebraska might and probably would increase by $1,000,000,000 the amount of debt retirement for which the Senate is this afternoon at least morally obligating itself. And thereupon the Senator from Ohio added, by his amendment, the language:

But any such reduction in the fiscal year 1948 may be counted as part of the $2,600,000,000 referred to in the preceding sentence.

It is this language offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio to which the motion addressed by the eminent Senator from Maryland is directed.

Mr. President, it seems to me that a change of $1,000,000,000 by way of an increase in the amount fixed by action taken by the Senate earlier this afternoon upon the Knowland proposal is worthy of the most careful and thoughtful consideration. To my mind it is unwise to attempt by the action proposed in the Wherry amendment to increase by $1,000,000,000 the amount of retirement of obligations of debt to which the Senate would thereby obligate itself. So, Mr. President, it appears to me that the action suggested by the Senator from Ohio is sound and proper.

The motion made by the Senator from Maryland proceeds, as I understand it, at least in part, from his remarks, upon the thought that the Taft amendment in some way signifies a retreat by the Republican Party from the four and one-half billion dollars of savings below the President's budget, down to a smaller figure. I think the motion of the distinguished Senator from Maryland and my friend proceeds upon a misunderstanding or a misapprehension of the Taft amendment. The Taft amendment does not, as I read it—and I say so most respectfully—in any way amount to a retreat of one single dollar or any number of dollars below the savings contemplated to be affected by a reduction of four and one-half billion dollars in the President's budget.

In the first place, Mr. President, the four and one-half billion dollars of savings to which the Senate has already agreed in the action taken a day or so ago does not at all come from the portion of the action which is referred to by the Senator from Maryland or by the Senator from Nebraska or by the Senator from Ohio. The savings of four and one-half billion dollars below the President's budget comes from the earlier action in amending Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, which, as amended, reads as follows:

That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $33,000,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year.

Mr. President, the saving of $4,500,000,000 results by reason of the fact that the Presidential budget was $37,500,000,000 for expenditures, whereas the provision of Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, which I have just read, sets up the figure $33,000,000,000 of expenditures, a difference of $4,500,000,000. This portion of the resolution, the main portion of it so far as the extent of the language is concerned, and the first part of the resolution, as it is, is not the part at all to which either the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Ohio, or the Senator from Maryland addresses himself.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. With the consent of the Senator, I should like to complete this thought very briefly, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator for any questions I may be able to answer.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. DONNELL. It seems to me, therefore, that the effect of carrying out what the Senator from Ohio proposes does not directly or indirectly have anything to do with the saving of $4,500,000,000. The reduction from thirty-seven and one-half billion in the President's budget to $33,000,000,000 in the Millikin amendment, as it was adopted, and therefore now in Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, still remains in effect; and nothing in neither the Wherry amendment, the Taft amendment, or the Tydings amendment would have the remotest connection with that saving of $4,500,000,000.

What is the effect of the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland? It seems to me that clearly the effect of the motion, if it were to prevail, would be to strike out the Taft amendment and thereby to increase the amount of the reduction of debt upon which we have agreed this afternoon—$2,600,000,000—to an indeterminate figure which would be $2,600,000,000 plus—as the Wherry amendment provides—the proceeds from the sale of surplus property.

It is my understanding that the proceeds from the sale of surplus property are somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000. Therefore, regardless of the excellent intention of the Senator from Maryland, the effect of the amendment which he now proposes would be to set aside the earlier action taken by the Senate this afternoon in favor of a reduction in the debt of $2,600,000,000, and substitute therefor, in all probability, a reduction for the year 1948 of $3,600,000,000.

What is the effect of the Taft amendment? As I understand—and if I am incorrect, I am sure I shall be corrected—the effect of the Taft amendment is to leave the amount of debt to be retired in 1948 at $2,600,000,000, except that if the proceeds from the sale of surplus property exceed $2,600,000,000, the amount of such proceeds from the sale of surplus property will be the amount of debt retired in 1948.

So, Mr. President, the Tydings motion proceeds upon what I deem to be the incorrect assumption that we are in some way reversing our motion up the hill, as he so dramatically and beautifully described this afternoon, and results in our coming down the hill. By reason of the fact that he is mistaken in that assumption, it seems to me that there is no reason for apprehension on the part of the Senate if we adopt the Taft amendment and reject the Tydings motion.

In the second place—and I close with this observation—its seems to me that it would be a decided mistake to adopt the Tydings amendment, because its effect would be, to say the least, to throw doubt upon whether the amount of debt to be retired is to be $2,600,000,000 or $2,600,000,000 plus approximately $1,000,000,000 of proceeds from the sale of surplus property. It seems to me that the doubt to which I have referred amounts, in fact, from the construction of the language, to a practical certainty that if the Tydings amendment were to be adopted the amount of debt reduction to which the Senate would have committed itself would be approximately $3,600,000,000, instead of $2,600,000,000, which was agreed upon only a few hours ago.

So I earnestly urge, notwithstanding the various branches into which the argument has digressed this afternoon—some of them of a more or less personal nature—that the Senate should not adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, but should see to it that by the adoption of the language of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, plus the modification suggested by the Senator from Ohio, we shall follow what we decided earlier this afternoon; namely, the figure of $2,600,000,000, with the exception that if the proceeds from the sale of surplus property exceed $2,600,000,000, the amount of such proceeds from the sale of surplus property will be the amount of debt retired in 1948.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I promised to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, has the Senator any further time? I should like to take the floor in my own right, so that I may answer the Senator and clear up any misunderstanding which may exist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. DONNELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the Senator's position that the $4,500,000,000 under discussion is to be gleaned from a cut in the expenses of the Government?

Mr. DONNELL. I take it that that will necessarily follow to a large extent, and perhaps entirely. But let me say that the $4,500,000,000 saving is the difference between the President's budget of thirty-seven and one-half billion and the $33,000,000,000 budget which the Senate agreed upon a few days ago.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the Senator says that the expenses of the Government are to be cut by $4,500,000,000.

Mr. DONNELL. I should say that the expenditures, as stated in Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, will be $33,000,000,000 instead of $37,500,000,000, as set forth in the President's budget.

Mr. TYDINGS. We may be in agreement. What I wish to do first is to get a definition of what we are discussing. Let me ask the Senator if it is his understanding that, in addition to the $4,500,000,000 saving resulting from a cut in expenditures, another possible $1,000,000,000 is to come from the sale of war surplus property?

Mr. DONNELL. Let me state it in this way: My understanding of the resolution is that the judgment of Congress is that the revenues will approximate $39,100,000,000. I understand that the $39,100,000,000 includes approximately $1,000,000,000 of proceeds from the sale of surplus property. Then I understand that the saving which is to be effected between the President's figures and the Senate figures arises by reason of the fact that in his budget the President provided for expenditures of $37,500,000,000, whereas the Senate provided for expenditures of $33,000,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me put it to the Senator in this fashion: Is the $1,000,000,000 of tentative receipts arising from the sale of war surplus property included in the $4,500,000,000 of savings?

Mr. DONNELL. I should say that that——

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator please answer "Yes" or "No"?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall endeavor to answer the question. The $1,000,000,000 representing proceeds from the sale of surplus property is a part of the receipts or revenues; and the savings arise from the difference between expenditures and receipts. The $1,000,000,000 is not included in the expenditures. Expenditures are outlays. The $1,000,000,000 of proceeds from the sale of surplus property to which I refer is included in the receipts embraced in the $39,100,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have a very high regard for the Senator from Missouri, and I assure him that I am trying to understand his point of view as accurately as I can. Let me say to him that I am still confused. Perhaps he could clear up my confusion if he would tell me whether or not, in the $4,500,000,000 of contemplated savings set forth in the original resolution, as adopted, there is included $1,000,000,000 arising from the sale of surplus property, or whether it is not included?

Mr. DONNELL. I should say that the $1,000,000,000 from the sale of surplus property is included in the $39,100,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. That does not answer my question.

Mr. DONNELL. Oh, yes; it answers the question. No one can say that the saving comes from this fund or the other fund, unless the funds are earmarked for that purpose. The distinguished Senator need not assure me of his regard for me, because it is thoroughly reciprocated, and I am sure of his sincerity in proceeding here this afternoon. The answer to his question is that the saving of $4,500,000,000 is of course embraced within the thirty-nine and one-tenth billion, which includes approximately $1,000,000,000 of surplus-property proceeds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to take time on the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 20 minutes on the concurrent resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in view of the levity indulged in a while ago, I wish to say with complete sincerity that there is no new Member of the Senate for whom I have a higher regard than I have for the Senator from Missouri, whose work I have watched for some time. I know that he is an able, sincere, and conscientious Senator and citizen. But I am confused, because if one of his premises in the argument which he just made is right, then his conclusion is wrong; or, to put it differently, if his premise is wrong, then his conclusion is also wrong.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator thinks my conclusion is wrong in either event.

Mr. TYDINGS. No. It might be right if the Senator would define whether or not the $1,000,000,000 of savings resulting from the sale of war assets is included in or is excluded from the $4,500,000,000 set forth in the resolution. Surely he knows what he thinks about it. Will he tell me what he thinks about it?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, it is impossible to segregate the four and one-half billion dollars into its component parts and say that so much of it comes from liquor taxes, so much from income taxes, so much from surplus-property proceeds. I repeat—and I think it is a correct answer—that the four and one-half billion dollars of savings results from the fact that instead of expending thirty-seven and one-half billion dollars of the $39,100,000,000 of revenues and receipts, under the plan agreed upon by the Senate we are to expend $4,500,000,000 less than $37,500,000,000, namely $33,000,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator consider that the sale of war surplus property to the extent of $1,000,000,000 constitutes a cut in the expenditures of the Government?

Mr. DONNELL. I would say, of course, Mr. President, that the sale of surplus property does not constitute a cut in expenditures, because the sale of the property results in an increase in the receipts.

Mr. TYDINGS. At least we have got hold of one end of the broomstick, namely, that if the $1,000,000,000 is included in the $4,500,000,000, then the savings is only three and one-quarter billion dollars.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not want to trespass upon the Senator's time, but I have not said at all that the $1,000,000,000 from the sale of surplus property is included in the four and one-half billion dollars. It is included in the $39,000,000,000; and the difference between the amounts to be received constitutes the four-and-one-half billion dollars.

Mr. TYDINGS. Now I have the complete answer of my good friend from Missouri. He does not claim that the $1,000,000,000 arising from the sale of war surplus property is within, and he does not claim it is without, the four and one-half billion dollars of proposed savings. As a matter of fact, from his remarks—and I say this with no desire to reflect on him—he has told me in so many words that he really does not know.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. The surplus-property proceeds have no relation to the four and one-half billion dollars of savings. The $1,000,000,000 of proceeds from sale of surplus property goes into the receipts of $39,100,000,000. Under the plan proposed by the President, we were to expend $37,500,000,000. The $39,100,000,000, of course, includes the proceeds from the sale of surplus property. The Senate has decided that instead of spending $37,500,000,000 we are to expend only $33,000,000,000; and the savings will result by reason of that decision.

Let me say, if it will in any sense answer the Senator, that of course the more receipts that come in the greater the savings, and that the savings can be made greater and are greater by reason of the fact that the surplus-property receipts are contained therein. But the savings themselves consist merely of the difference between receipts and expenditures.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator, at the last try, has pretty well answered my question. At least he has given me the information which I wanted, but which perhaps I did not ask for in such fashion as to elicit it before, namely, that by a reduction in expenditures from $37,500,000,000 to $33,000,000,000 it is contemplated that there will be a saving of $4,500,000,000; and in addition, if there shall be receipts from the sale of war property such as are contemplated there will be a saving of $4,500,000,000; and in addition there will be receipts from the sale of war property which it is estimated will amount to approximately $1,000,000,000. Therefore the Senator now proposes, as I understand the argument he makes, to reduce to the extent of $2,600,000,000 the amount that would have been applied to the payment of the war debt from the savings of $4,500,000,000. He proposes to reduce that by another billion dollars by taking out of the war surplus fund a billion dollars to be applied to payment on the national debt; so the net effect is that the amendment offered by the Senator from California contemplates that of the $4,500,000,000 of savings resulting from cutting the expenditures of the Government, $2,600,000,000 shall be applied to the national debt. By the adoption of the Taft amendment, if $4,500,000,000 is cut from the expenses of the Government, only $1,600,000,000 shall be applied to the payment of the national debt and $3,000,000,000, twice as much, shall be applied perhaps to tax reduction.

In order to perform on the trapeze and still pay something on the debt and make it appear that there is to be a $2,600,000,000 payment on the debt, by taking the money we already have out of one pocket and transferring it to another we keep up the illusion of paying $2,600,000,000 on the debt, when, as a matter of fact, what the resolution proposes to do is to pay only $1,600,000,000 on the debt. If the House should cut expenses by $6,000,000,000 we shall have in that category $4,400,000,000 for tax reduction and $1,600,000,000 for debt payment. That is the theory of the Taft amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator really serious? Is he unable to understand the difference between an asset and a liability?

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope I can understand the difference.

Mr. TAFT. Or is the Senator deliberately trying to confuse the Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am not. I never was more serious.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator's statement is so absolutely impossible of comprehension that I cannot understand it at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, how much time have I left?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator, but I ask him not to make too long an argument in my time, because obviously I want an opportunity to answer him.

Mr. TAFT. The $4,500,000,000 comes out of various items—legislative, judicial, and executive. It comes out of the expenditures which the President intends to make. It has no relation whatever to surplus property.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator from Maryland agrees with that, then in no way is the figure $4,500,000,000 reduced to $3,000,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no figure of $3,000,000,000 here; it is $2,600,000,000, if I understand correctly.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator's whole argument was that the amendment reduced the proposed budget cut from $4,500,000,000 to $2,600,000,000. Now I take it that the Senator recedes from that position.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not; and I ask the Senator this question: If his contention is correct, and if this amendment does not take money from the receipts and use it for debt reduction, then why does he offer his amendment? Why does not he let the amendment of the Senator from California and the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska stand, without saying that such receipts shall be applied to debt reduction, if his contention is as he has stated?

Mr. TAFT. The effect of the amendment is perfectly clear. It is that from the total receipts of $39,000,000,000, we shall apply $2,600,000,000 to reduction of the debt. That is what the Senate decided earlier this afternoon.

If the Senate now strikes out these words and requires the application of these particular receipts to the debt, in addition to the $2,600,000,000, that will call for the application of $3,600,000,000 to the debt, which is not what the Senate wishes to do at this moment or what it wished to do earlier this afternoon.

The only effect of the Wherry amendment is to leave the $2,600,000,000 exactly where it is. If the sale of surplus property exceeds $2,600,000,000, and is $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, then $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 will have to be applied to the debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from California and the Senator from Nebraska, let me take the time remaining to me to ascertain whether what we started out to do will really be done. In the joint meeting of the two committees, the Senator from California offered a proposal that $3,000,000,000 of any savings must be applied on the debt. I supported him in the joint committee, and I also supported him on the floor of the Senate. In the Senate his amendment, after some modification, was finally adopted, carrying the figure $2,600,000,000.

Then the Senator from Nebraska rose and offered his amendment, namely, that the receipts arising from any sale of war surplus property in 1948 should likewise be applied on the national debt. It was the supposition, I believe, of the Senator from Nebraska—and as a result of his colloquy with the Senator from Ohio it was certainly the supposition of those on this side of the aisle—that in addition to the $2,600,000,000 of savings effected by the Congress which would come under this resolution, all receipts from the sale of war surplus property were likewise to be applied to the national debt. Then there was a colloquy between the eminent Senator from Nebraska and the able Senator from Ohio on that point, showing that there was a misunderstanding; and then I did not know whether the Senator from Nebraska had gone over to the point of view of the Senator from Ohio or not.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. First I yield to the Senator from California who rose first; and then I shall yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I simply say to my able colleague, the senior Senator from Maryland, that if he will recall what took place in our joint legislative committee hearings, he will remember that section 6 of the committee report, appearing on page 9, which we had before us on that particular day, contains language reading as follows, which was presented to us by the subcommittee:

> The committee recommends that a portion of the excess receipts over expenditures be applied on the public debt.

At that time in the committee I offered an amendment to change that language so as to read:

> The committee recommends that not less than $3,000,000,000 of the estimated excess receipts over expenditures be applied to the public debt.

So the provision, as thus stated, called for the application to the public debt of $3,000,000,000 of the excess of receipts over expenditures.

As I understand, the estimated receipts from the sale of surplus property appear in the list of receipts into the Treasury, under the heading "Miscellaneous receipts." So I do not see that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska changes the legislative intent as expressed here today, because in no event will less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess be applied on the debt.

The only possible change which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, can have is that if $3,000,000,000 worth of surplus property is sold in 1 year or if $4,000,000,000 of surplus property is sold in 1 year, the payments on the Federal public debt will be either $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 rather than $2,600,000,000.

For that reason, I am delighted to accept the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, perhaps I can develop the difference that has arisen by asking the Senator a question; and I ask him to give a short answer to it, rather than a long one. My question is as follows: In the event the sale of surplus property amounts to $2,600,000,000, how much of the $4,500,000,000 saved by cutting expenses will then be applied to the payment of the national debt?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to wait a moment, please.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator ask me the question?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I ask it of the Senator from California.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I would say to the Senator——

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator from California to give me a brief answer to that question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Just a moment, Mr. President. If the Senator from Maryland is going to ask me a question, I do not wish to be asked to reply to a question similar to the one, "Have you stopped beating your wife? Answer 'Yes' or 'No.' "

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no "have you stopped beating your wife?" to this question. I repeat my question: If the sale of war-surplus property brings into the Treasury $2,600,000,000, and if the budget cuts amount to $4,500,000,000, how much of the $4,500,000,000 will then be applied to making payments on the national debt?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I say to the Senator from Maryland that in that event the situation will not be changed one iota from what it would have been if the Senator from Nebraska had never offered his amendment, because if $2,600,000,000 comes into the Treasury, instead of the $1,000,000,000 estimated, the receipts into the Treasury will merely be that much greater. So that will not change the situation or make one iota of difference in regard to the $4,500,000,000 of savings.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from California has answered my question. The answer could have been given in one sentence, thus: In that event all the $4,500,000,000 will be available for tax reduction; and none of it, under this resolution, will be used to make payments on the national debt.

The original proposition of the Senator from California in the joint committee—and I now use his own words—was as follows:

> Mr. Chairman, I propose that $3,000,000,000 of any savings be applied to the liquidation of the national debt.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not like to dispute what has been said by my friend the Senator from Maryland, but I must say that I now hold in my hand the very paper which was presented to us on that day, on which I myself wrote the language of the amendment which I then proposed, and which I have since proposed in the Senate of the United States. It reads as follows:

> The committee recommends that not less than $3,000,000,000 of the estimated excess receipts over expenditures be applied to the public debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not read the Senator's resolution, but I remember the words he used. Probably he used the words inadvertently. He will recall that I met him on the way out, and I told him I felt that if we could save $3,000,000,000 I should support his proposition.

The net result, after this long debate, is that at least we have this figure—namely, that if the sale of war surplus property brings into the Treasury $2,600,000,000, and if there is a $4,500,000,000 cut in expenses, there will not be any payment on the national debt larger than $2,600,000,000, and all the rest of the $4,500,000,000 will be available for any other purpose for which the Congress may wish to use it. That is what I have been trying to develop for the last 15 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The point is that under the amendment which the Senate adopted today by unanimous consent, it is provided that "not less than $2,600,000,000," and so forth. The Senate and the Congress still have in their hands the power to say how much, if any, tax reduction will be given, and we have within our control power to make a tax reduction, let us say for the sake of argument, of $1,000,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The difference could be applied to the debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] amending the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. TYDINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	Morse
Baldwin	Hawkes	Murray
Ball	Hayden	Myers
Barkley	Hickenlooper	O'Conor
Brewster	Hill	O'Daniel
Bricker	Hoey	O'Mahoney
Bridges	Holland	Overton
Brooks	Ives	Revercomb
Butler	Jenner	Robertson, Va.
Cain	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Capehart	Johnston, S. C.	Saltonstall
Capper	Kem	Stewart
Connally	Kilgore	Taft
Cooper	Knowland	Taylor
Cordon	Lodge	Thomas, Utah
Donnell	Lucas	Thye

Ellender	McGrath	Vandenberg
Ferguson	McKellar	Watkins
Flanders	Magnuson	Wherry
Fulbright	Martin	White
George	Maybank	Wiley
Green	Millikin	Wilson
Gurney	Moore

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to strike certain words from the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike from the Wherry amendment, as modified, the words "but any such reduction in the fiscal year 1948 may be counted as part of the $2,600,000,000 referred to in the preceding sentence."

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. HATCH. On this vote my colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained. He would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent and has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] is absent on official business.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK] are necessarily absent; the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness; and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] are absent on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The vote was recapitulated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this vote the yeas are 38, the nays——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask for a recapitulation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The vote was again recapitulated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this vote the yeas are 38——

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President——

Mr. TAFT. It is too late, Mr. President.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no; it is not. The result has not been announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. TAYLOR. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—39

Aiken	Holland	Myers
Barkley	Johnson, Colo.	O'Conor
Connally	Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney

So Mr. TYDINGS' amendment to Mr. WHERRY's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] as amended by the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which my amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves to reconsider the vote.

Mr. TAFT. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the motion to table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not yet received the motion to table. The yeas and nays are requested. Is the demand sufficiently seconded? Evidently it is. The clerk will call the roll on the question of reconsidering the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Maryland was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Upon the offering of the motion to reconsider the vote made by the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Illinois rose and moved to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois did, without being recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Chair did not recognize him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I now move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to move to lay the motion on the table.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BRIDGES asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent and has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] who is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] is absent on official business.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate on state business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK] are necessarily absent; the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness; and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] are absent on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

Mr. HATCH. I am authorized to state that my colleague [Mr. CHAVEZ], who is unavoidably detained, would vote "yea" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—40

Aiken	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Johnston, S. C.	Overton
Connally	Kilgore	Robertson, Va.
Cooper	Lucas	Russell
Eastland	McCarran	Stewart
Ellender	McClellan	Taylor

Byrd	Malone	Wagner
Chavez	Pepper	Williams
Downey	Reed	Young
Langer	Robertson, Wyo.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] as amended.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to propound a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized at the convening of the session on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into covering the limitation of time. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts now, and he may yield, which is the usual practice, so the Senator from Maine can make his motion to recess.

Mr. TOBEY and Mr. BUTLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Maine is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 3, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

WITHDRAWALS

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate February 28 (legislative day of February 19), 1947:

POSTMASTERS

Mrs. Sara Devine to be postmaster at Copper City in the State of Michigan.

Mrs. Helen D. Burbridge to be postmaster at Alligator in the State of Mississippi.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Touch that strange power within us, O God, that will steel our faith in Thee by a settled and a steadfast will. Make us invincible in the presence of every temptation, counting no struggle too great and no sacrifice too costly to fulfill Thy law and our obligation to the Republic. Make us great in mind, strong in principle, pure in spirit, and, above all, enlarge our capacity for joy, for service, and for the consideration of all men. Bless us with the virtues of resistance and restraint, for these give form and force to blameless character. Dignify this day with duty wisely performed, for herein lies true nobility of soul. O blow, ye winds, and fill the sails of our great Ship of State, and send us on and on to our ultimate task and our final triumph. In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances; in one to include an address by Hon. Herbert Hoover; another relating to the shortage of copper; and another relating to the budget; and to include therein an article appearing in the Times-Herald this morning.

Mr. GRAHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short editorial.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WHITTINGTON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOWELL asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of a letter written by John McCann, president of the International Union, Progressive Mine Workers of America, to Hon. ROBERT A. TAFT.

Mr. SEELY-BROWN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain printed material.

Mr. STEVENSON asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the La Crosse Tribune, of La Crosse, Wis.

Mr. SMATHERS (at the request of Mr. SIKES) was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after the conclusion of the regular business and any other special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ARMED FORCES IN KOREA

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I have just received a letter from a man in Chicago whose son is a soldier in Korea. He enclosed with his letter an article from the Chicago Daily News of February 22, 1947, which he says is a letter from a GI which expresses the thoughts of his son and other boys in Korea.

The letter follows:

Who is it that said the American Army is the best-fed, best-clothed, and best-supplied army in the world? That person should visit the Army camps in Korea.

Conditions here are definitely not good. The food is poor and insufficient, the heating is bad, baths are taken out of our helmets, the PX is poorly supplied, and the lighting is not good.

Is this the peacetime Army or the wartime Army? There is no excuse for poor conditions like this in a United States Army camp, even if it is in far-away Korea.

We are here to do a job in the occupation army. We can't do this job if we are unable to live like men. We're not animals but men. We're the brothers of you men and women that live in the finest country in the world and deserve better living conditions.

Please publish this letter. The public must know how their Army is being treated.

A GI IN KOREA.

I submit our Army has had plenty of money to take care of a matter like this. Our boys should receive the best treatment in Korea, not only because it is just and right but because it will act as a good example to the people of Korea, to whom we are trying to present a picture of our American way of life. If we cannot take care of our boys over there, then let us bring them home from Korea.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS] has expired.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR SMALL AIRPORTS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a telephone conversation I have just had with some people representing the smaller airports in my district. There is a rumor abroad that some gentlemen in another body not very far from here, at the other end of the Capitol, are desirous of taking away $45,000,000 that was given the Civil Aeronautics Administration, that was intended to be allotted to the small airports of the country, the small communities of this country; this would take that money into the big airfields of the large cities such as Washington, New York, Chicago, Boston, and so forth. When it comes to the big boys getting the money for the big cities of this country and taking it away from all of our small communities, we should just let them know that we are here to fight. We are not going to let them take that money already appropriated from the small communities, where it belongs, where it was appropriated to assist in an effort to promote aviation all over the United States, and give it to the great cities. It is not right. It is not just, and we will not permit it.

I am for the smaller airfields in this $79,000,000 appropriation of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to be awarded in accordance with the act as the Civil Aeronautics Administration is supposed to award the money and in accordance with the agreements already made by the Department, so that many smaller airports can be built in small communities and that other airports already in existence can be improved. I am for the small towns as against the great large city airports. I am for the small businessman as against the great large corporations. I am for the small airports to get a start. Let us build up aviation all over the country in every town that is willing to maintain and support an airport. He who strives to divert these funds will come to grief, let me warn you now. If the bill was right last year it still is good legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a memorandum prepared by the New York Housing Authority.

Mr. RIVERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by the American Medical Association.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. LANDIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts from letters and other material.

Mr. FOOTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter on the subject of the Federal income tax.

AMENDING THE HOUSING ACT TO MEET INCREASED COSTS

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a joint resolution today amending the United States Housing Act of 1937 by exempting certain contract and cost limitations. This applies to low-income housing projects which I am sure are being built or have been contracted for throughout the country. With building costs rising so extremely high it is impossible to complete these projects based upon contracts made in 1937. My resolution would amend the act so that new contracts can be made at today's prices so that these projects may be continued to completion. The localities and cities where they are under construction cannot finance these projects themselves. It is up to the Federal Government to help out, so that the veterans and others who have no homes may be adequately housed.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I have inserted a memorandum explaining my resolution. I trust the Members will read it.

THE FERTILIZER SHORTAGE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to endorse what my distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] said a few moments ago.

The people in this country who as a rule sent the largest percentage of their sons to the war were the farmers. Very few of them are exempted.

Those sons are back home now trying to work. They are not asking for sit-down money, and the majority of them cannot go to college. As a rule they are not engaged in any job training. They are back at home at work, and I am opposed to taking fertilizer away from the American farmers and sending it to other countries throughout the world.

While I am on the subject I want to say to you that I am opposed to going down into the pockets of the American taxpayers to get money to feed and clothe every lazy lout from Tokyo to Timbuktu and taking away from our farmers the fertilizer necessary to enable them to make a crop.

Let us look after the American people first.

PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK OF MARCH 3

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order that I may ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] what we may expect as a program for next week.

Mr. HALLECK. I will be glad to respond to the gentleman's suggestion. This statement as to what the program will be for next week will depend upon certain committee actions which I think probably will come along so that these matters can be reached.

On Monday we will call the Consent Calendar. There are a number of bills on this calendar. We want to take care of them.

On Tuesday we will call the Private Calendar, and in addition it is hoped we can call up H. R. 2102, a bill from the Committee on Agriculture providing a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor-supply program. We also shall consider House Resolution 118, reported by the Rules Committee, to give the Committee on Expenditures certain investigatory powers.

It is our plan to adjourn from Tuesday to Thursday.

On Thursday, if the bill is reported and the rule granted, we propose to take up House Joint Resolution 140, to restore to the now designated "Boulder Dam" the name "Hoover Dam," which it originally carried. We also hope to call up H. R. 1327, which has been reported by the Veterans' Affairs Committee, providing for a renewal of the 5-year level-premium term insurance for veterans. Also on Thursday we hope to call up House Resolution 120, which is before the Rules Committee, a resolution to authorize the Committee on Veterans' Affairs to carry on certain investigations.

Unless something unforeseen should develop, it is our plan to adjourn from Thursday to Monday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thank the gentleman.

THE BOXCAR SHORTAGE

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, one of the most alarming conditions in the country is the boxcar shortage. Because of this shortage, and because proper consideration has not and is not being given to diverting sufficient boxcars for the movement of high-moisture corn before mild weather commences, between 100,000,000 and 200,000,000 bushels of this corn in the Midwest and Northwest is about to spoil. As a matter of fact, I have recently received a sample of corn showing that some of it is in a highly moldy condition.

In addition to the general shortage of boxcars, one of the principal difficulties has been that the boxcars which belong to railroads of the Midwest and Northwest are being used in other parts of the country and are not being returned. On February 4 I called a conference of the Members of Congress from six of the Midwest States to meet with Mr. W. C. Kendall and Mr. R. V. Fletcher, president of the Association of American Railroads, in an effort to get some action on this matter. Subsequent to that meeting I was assured by Mr. Kendall that the boxcars necessary would be provided. However, from very recent information I have received, it appears that the boxcar situation has not improved to any appreciable degree.

I charge that it is the responsibility of those in authority, from President Truman down, to see that the necessary boxcars are provided in time to move this high-moisture corn so that it is not lost to the American people and a starving world.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TOLLEFSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include an editorial and a memorial.

REGULATING THE RECOVERY OF PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2157, with Mr. JENKINS of Ohio in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Committee, the Chair may say that the first section of the bill was read yesterday for amendment. If there are no amendments to be offered to section 1 the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Every claim, cause of action, and action for the recovery of wages, overtime compensation, penalties, or damages (actual, liquidated, or compensatory), pursuant to any of the laws of the United States mentioned in section 5 hereof shall be subject to the following limitations and conditions:

(a) Hereafter no such action shall be maintained unless the same is commenced within 1 year after such cause of action accrued.

(b) No such claim or cause of action which had accrued prior to the effective date of this act, and which would otherwise be barred by subsection (a) hereof, shall be maintained unless action thereon is commenced within 6 months after the effective date of this act: Provided, however, That this subsection shall not be construed to revive or extend any claim or cause of action which but for the enactment of this act would have been barred by any statute of limitation applicable to such action.

(c) An action shall be deemed to have been commenced as to any individual claimant as of the date when such claimant is named in such action as a party thereto.

(d) If at any time within such 1-year period or 6-month period, as the case may be, process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing the applicable period.

(e) In any action, whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, the employer may plead and prove that the act or omission complained of was done or omitted in good faith consistent with, required by, or in reliance on any decision of a court of record in connection with which such employer was a party in interest, or any administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice.

Such a defense, if established, shall be a bar to the action, notwithstanding that after such act or omission, such decision, administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice is modified, rescinded, or determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect.

(f) Any claim, cause of action, or action may be compromised, adjusted, settled, or released, in whole or in part, either before or after commencing such action by the person entitled to bring such action. Any such compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release according to the terms thereof, and in the absence of fraud or duress, shall be a complete satisfaction of such claim and a complete bar to any action based on such claim. No such claim, cause of action, action, or interest therein, shall be the subject of lawful assignment. The provisions of this subsection shall also be applicable to any compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release heretofore so made or given.

(g) In any action pursuant to any of the acts mentioned in section 5 hereof, the court, if it finds that the violation of the law giving rise to such action was in bad faith and without reasonable ground, may, in its sound discretion, award not to exceed the amount specified as penalty or damage in the law under which such action arises.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 3, line 17, after "within", strike out "1 year" and insert "2 years."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment would increase the statute of limitations from 1 year to 2 years. I would ask the Members of the House to do in this Congress what you did in the last Congress when you adopted the Gwynne bill, namely, establish the statute of limitations longer than 1 year. In the last Congress we voted for a 3-year statute. In my humble opinion if you leave it at 1 year you will emasculate the act so as to render it quite impotent, particularly for those workers who do not have the benefit of the advice and counsel ready available from some lawyer of a labor organization. I refer specifically to the vast army of employees who are not in unions.

Now, there is a veritable hodgepodge of laws throughout the States with reference to the time within which claims may be brought for compensation for wages under the basic Wages and Hours Act. We failed in the basic act to provide a statute of limitations. Therefore the various States passed their own acts. These statutes vary from 1 year to 6 years to 8 years. It is a veritable mishmash, and it is very essential that we establish some uniformity. The question is, What price uniformity? Will we bolster up the Fair Labor Standards Act by making it possible for a worker to know his rights and to be able to enforce them within a reasonable time? Will you do that with a 2-year statute of limitations or will we so narrow the time to 1 year so as to make it quite impractical for the worker to know and sue in time? Will we deny the worker his rightful reward for productive work by a fairly reasonable statute of limitations, or will we make sure that some chiseling employers—and there are some—can successfully euchre their employees out of compensation for work done by dodging and by stalling for at least a year? Then the production work prior to the 1 year which should be compensated for remains unpaid and the employer cannot be made to pay. The money, as far as the employee is concerned, goes down the drain, as it were, if the statute of limitations of 1 year would apply. One year is entirely too short. It is very significant that the States that have had most experience with these matters, the States where there are the greatest number of workers, do not provide for a statute of limitations of 1 year. We find 6 years in the States of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, and 3 years in Ohio and California.

I offer a compromise. I would prefer 3 years, and I think a substitute will be offered to make it 3 years, but I urge upon you to be reasonable to the workers in this regard and set a reasonable time limit. I think a fair time limit would indeed be 2 years. Otherwise the bad employer can gamble, he can take his chances, and instead of abiding by the Minimum Wage Act and paying 40 cents an hour, he can pay 20 cents an hour. He can do that for 4 or 5 years before they catch up with him, and then for 1 year back he might have to pay the 40 cents as provided in the Minimum Wage Act, but for all the prior years he would be absolved from obligation to abide by a solemn act which we solemnly passed in this Chamber.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. If the employer is in violation of the act, does not the gentleman think that either the administrative agency or the man or men affected ought to be able to determine within a year that he is so violating the act, and hence bring their suits to correct it?

Mr. CELLER. The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Fair Labor Standards Act testified that there are over 500,000 establishments covered by the act, and it takes from 10 to 12 years with his present staff to make the proper inspections. So a chiseling employer could wait 3 or 4 years and, when he is examined and inspected, then pay back wages for 1 year that were due the employee, and then go on chiseling again, taking his chances that maybe he would not again be examined for another 6 or 7 or 8 or even 10 years.

What is the Senate doing? The chairman of the Judiciary Committee has offered a bill which provides for a 2-year statute of limitations. I think we should follow suit.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. I wonder if the gentleman has lost sight of the fact that a penalty applies, and that there is also a criminal action possible under the law. I can hardly conceive that the employer is going to delay the matter—to be a chiseler, as the gentleman suggested—when he knows that if he is wrong he pays a double penalty, plus what he owes, and is subject to criminal prosecution.

Mr. CELLER. I defy the gentleman from Michigan to tell me of one case where there were criminal proceedings brought against a so-called euchring or chiseling employer.

Mr. MICHENER. There is a difference between possibilities and what happens.

Mr. CELLER. But there has been no criminal proceeding.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman had asked me 6 months ago if there would be any of these portal-to-portal suits where there was a collective-bargaining contract, I would have said, "Certainly not."

Mr. CELLER. I desire to protect the low-income worker—usually a nonunion man. He is usually uninformed. He has not the advantage of information usually open to union men.

It takes him more than a year to know his rights. By the time he becomes aware of his claims, the year has set in.

He must rely upon information given him by the Wage and Hour Division. That Division must, with insufficient staff, inspect 550,000 establishments under the basic act. That will take from 10 to 12 years. Bad employers can gamble on the chance that it will take years before his plant will be inspected.

The pending Senate bill provides 2 years. We passed the Gwynne bill last year with a 2-year statute of limitation, and the Senate raised it to 3 years.

A 1-year statute would be a rank discrimination against labor.

The Fair Labor Standards Act did measurably succeed in stamping out the blights of excessive hours and inadequate pay. It advanced the public interest by improving the lot of the worker, by increasing purchasing power, by improving health of workers, by advancing the Nation's economy.

Kill bad so-called portal-to-portal suits, but in doing so do not eviscerate the Fair Labor Standards Act. One-year statute of limitations will do just that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this raises one of the questions about which there is difference of opinion in the committee and in the House and probably in the country. That difference of opinion as to what the statute of limitation should be is in the minds of people who very firmly believe there should be a limitation. I think the limitation should be 1 year, as the committee fixed it. All I want to do now is point out the reasons why I think a short statute of limitations should be fixed.

Let us bear in mind that this limitation applies only to statutory actions, which seek to recover not only the minimum wages or the overtime compensation but an additional amount as liquidated damages, and attorneys' fees and costs. It applies to that action which cannot be settled under existing law and as to which the court has no discretion in the assessment of the liquidated damages.

Someone has said here that we are making a different rule for the worker suing for his wages than we are for the grocer suing for his grocery bill. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are now proposing to put the employee in exactly the same position as the grocer and every other person in this country. If the grocer should be given a special action which would allow him to recover not only the amount of his grocery bill, but an equal amount as liquidated damages and attorney's fees and costs, and in addition have created some officer of the Federal Government who had the power to secure injunctions and institute criminal prosecutions, then you would have an analogous situation, and I would say that the 1-year limit should apply to that statutory action for the grocer. We have always followed that policy, not only in this Congress, but in State legislatures. Where we have given a special drastic cause of action or we have given a man a sharp sword, we have said, "You must use that quickly or not at all."

Here is an illustration. When we passed the Price Control Act, allowing ceilings to be placed on prices of commodities, those ceilings entered into every contract throughout the land, and if someone in Iowa overcharged me I could at that time sue him for the amount of the overcharge. I could sue him within 5 years, the time allowed me under the statute. But Congress thought that remedy was not sufficient, so we gave to the person overcharged a special drastic remedy, just as we are giving here to the employee, whereby the person overcharged could recover $25. But we included in that law a provision that the person must exercise that right within 1 year. We do the same thing in the case of mechanics' liens. Someone has said that we are providing a shorter statute than the average throughout the country. They say the average now is 3.8 years. Let me tell you how they arrive at that 3.8. Of course, you will understand, when there is no Federal statute, the district courts in applying the law must look around and find some State statute which applies. In my State they applied the 5-year general statute covering oral contracts. In Maryland they applied the 12-year statute. To get away from that obvious injustice which Congress had refused to correct, the State legislatures moved in, and if you are interested in knowing what your State legislatures thought about this you will find the information in the table on page 159 furnished by Mr. Walling during the hearings on H. R. 2788. The table shows that since 1938, which was the effective date of the wage-hour law, 11 States have reduced the period of limitations. Two States have reduced it to 3 years. One was Maryland, which reduced it from 12 years to 3 years. Three States have reduced the statutory period to 2 years, and six States have reduced it to 1 year or less. Incidentally, I found no case, as was indicated here yesterday, where any court has held that 1 year is unconstitutional or unreasonable. They have held some statutes unconstitutional but have done so not because of the time element involved, which they have pointed out is a matter for the legislative body, but they have held those statutes bad because they sought to discriminate between actions under the Federal law and actions under State law.

I think this 1-year period of limitation is reasonable and should stay in the law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Can the gentleman give us that citation again?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is on page 159 of the hearings on H. R. 2788, the bill which was before the Committee on the Judiciary in 1945.

Mr. RANKIN. Is that the same list on page 82 of the hearings on this bill?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman insert the list in the RECORD so that we will have it before us?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I will be glad to insert the list.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. WALTER for the amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: On page 3, line 17, strike out "1 year" and insert "3 years."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] called to the attention of the committee the statutes of limitations in the several States. I, too, want to call your attention to those statutes. They are listed on page 82 of the hearings on the bill now under consideration. It is significant to note that in all of the States there are 13 statutes of less than 3 years and 35 statutes providing a limitation of 3 years or more, up to 8 years.

Now, it seems to me unfair that we should single out this particular type of ex contractu actions and fix the statute of limitations at 1 year. In most States the statutes are about 5 years. The national average, even considering the State of Iowa where the statute was for 1 year and which, incidentally, was declared to be unconstitutional—taking the average of all of the States of the Union the average is 3.8. I just cannot see how we can justify cutting the period within which a worker may proceed against an unscrupulous employer to 1 year. We must bear in mind this very important fact, that in this bill we have provided a complete defense for anyone who does not willfully violate the wage-hour law. It would be a very simple matter for unscrupulous employers—and unfortunately there are a great many of them in this country—through subterfuge, deceit, or any kind of device, to prevent their employees from receiving that to which they are entitled under the Wages and Hours Act.

I do not know whether there have been many cases where employers who have complied with what they honestly believed the law to be have been injured, except insofar as this wave of portal-to-portal suits is concerned, and I would like to call your attention to the testimony of Mr. Smethurst, who appeared for the National Association of Manufacturers. On page 448 of the hearings on this bill, near the bottom of the page, he said:

If you give more than a year there ensues an advantage in not raising questions of violation, because of the effect of the double damage section of the act.

That was the reason why he insisted on the period of 1 year; but I submit to you we have removed the question that he raised by providing in the courts some discretionary power in the imposition of penalties. So that no longer would it be to the advantage of the employee to refrain from bringing his action in a proper suit.

On page 449, in interrogating the representative of the National Association of Manufacturers, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee which reported this bill made this statement:

Mr. GWYNNE. Well, at least if the court would consider the good faith of the employer, and measure the amount of the liquidated damages by that yardstick, it would help a great deal, would it not?

Mr. SMETHURST. I think it would help tremendously.

And it was because of that that we endeavored to clothe every reputable employer with the protection required to resist claims improperly brought and those claims withheld for the purpose of collecting not only the wages but the penalty. The honest employer is amply protected. Let us exercise the same degree of fairness with the employee who has a legitmate claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is most unfortunate that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary reported out a bill which goes far beyond the portal-to-portal question. Under the guise of meeting the portal-to-portal question the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary have reported out a bill which for all practical purposes in setting the statute of limitations at 1 year seriously impairs if not destroys the effectiveness of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Bacon-Davis Act, and the Walsh-Healey Act. Certainly when the portal-to-portal legislation was introduced I know of few Members on either side who felt that this far-reaching bill that stepped upon the proper exercise of legal rights by millions of employees with reference to other legislation would be reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I have been a lawyer a little over 30 years. A very substantial percentage of the Members of the House are members of the legal profession. Anyone who is a lawyer knows what a 1-year statute of limitations means. One-year statutes of limitations exist in very few States. We can take the case of the very man who hires employees covered by any one of these acts—and I am addressing my remarks to the men outside of the portal-to-portal field who sell goods to these employees—he has a 6-year statute of limitations, yet if this employer fails to pay his 40 cents an hour to the man or woman working for the minimum wage, the statute of limitations runs against that unfortunate employee at the end of 1 year.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Is it not a fact that under the wage-and-hour law an employer must keep his records for a period of 3 years?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about that; that is the law. This is a matter of elemental justice. It can be put through; of course, the majority will prevail, but the responsibility will be definitely placed. If this bill were confined to a solution of the portal-to-portal issue and that question alone it would go through the House without opposition. It is the other provisions of the bill, particularly the 1-year limitation, that is unfair in its results, discriminatory in its results—and I use the word not from the angle of intent of the proponents but the results of the legislation—discriminatory upon millions of employees, and at least 14,000,000 of them are unorganized.

I know a little about minimum-wage legislation. I remember my first year in the Massachusetts Legislature in 1920. We had a minimum-wage law in Massachusetts which was passed in 1912 or 1913. The law provided for the establishment of minimum-wage boards, but once a board was established and made its findings as to a minimum wage for a group covered under it, there was no authority in law to reconvene the wage board or order a new one unless the employer requested it or the employees filed a petition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, during 1914, 1915, and 1916, up to the time we entered the First World War, wage boards had been established, covering scrubwomen, charwomen, stenographers, and others, who were covered by a minimum-wage decree. Then 1920 came along. Not a wage board had been reconvened or a new one ordered during those years, with the cost of living increasing right along? Why? No employer would petition for the establishment of a new wage board because the wage decrees were based upon 1914, 1915, and 1916 conditions, and were low in relation to what they should have been in 1920. The employees did not petition because they were afraid to—afraid to lose their positions.

Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill giving the commissioner of labor the authority upon his own initiative when in his judgment he thought there was a change in the cost of living to either reconvene the old wage board or order a new one. The same fear in the case of employees to assert their rights under this 1-year provision will take place if the pending bill limiting it to 1 year becomes law.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MATHEWS. As I understand the situation, there is a double-damage clause in these acts which gives the man twice the wages which may be coming to him. This being so, is it not a fact that a 1-year limitation under those circumstances is actually a 2-year limitation?

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman feels that way, I thoroughly respect his views, but I am in disagreement with him?

Mr. MATHEWS. Why is that not so?

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot agree with the gentleman. Last year the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] agreed to a 3-year limitation. Why this sudden change? Why? What reasons are there for my friend changing from 3 years last year to 1 year this year?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it was 2 years, as a matter of fact. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I think the gentleman understands what the situation was last year. The committee reported a bill for 1 year. We got a rule for it, and in spite of the fact we had a rule the gentleman's party did not call it up. I finally agreed to accept a 2-year compromise to get it on the floor, and we passed it with the 2-year limitation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Massachusetts was at that time the distinguished majority leader of the House, and he stated on the floor that he was opposed to the Gwynne bill and that he would not program it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. MICHENER. He stated he would not permit it to come up under any conditions unless compelled by the House. He was compelled to do so under the rules. He did call it up, and it did pass. The bill went to the Senate; it came back, and the leadership neglected, let us say, to permit the bill to come up after it had been amended by the Senate. Then the House adjourned for the session.

Mr. CELLER. The Senate made it 3 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, there exists, as most of us know by now, an honest difference of opinion between the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and some of the other Members on this side regarding this question, and there is one item that has been discussed to which I would appreciate directing your attention.

The point has been made, and well made, that there are some 11 or 13 States which have specifically dealt with this problem and have passed statutes of limitation of from 6 months to 3 years, whereas there are some 35 States which have not, and when you average all of these States together, both those which have and those which have not, you have an average of 3.3 years in which such actions may be brought Nation-wide.

It has been ably argued that the fact that certain particular States have legislated indicates that those States feel that a shorter period is desirable. To that specific point I would like to direct your attention. These States legislated, cutting down this period, at a time when we had the existing Wages and Hours Act, not the Wages and Hours Act as modified, or more accurately put, affected by the provisions of this act. In this bill we have inserted a good-faith provision so that an employer, if he acts in good faith in reliance upon administrative rulings, is absolutely protected not only from the basic cause of action, but also from the penalty, and if he acts in good faith and with reasonable ground, even though not in reliance upon a specific ruling, he is exempted from the penalty provision and is only liable for the basic claim for wages which, if you accept the underlying soundness and merit of the Fair Labor Standards Act and do not take the position which some of my colleagues do as typified by the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, and, perfectly legitimately, that the entire act should go out of the window—if you accept the act. I say, as I do, then you are committed to the conclusion that there are legitimate causes of action under it. It is for that reason that it seems to me when we reduce the period of time in such a State as mine, for instance, where an employee now has 6 years to bring his action—when we reduce that to 3 years, we have gone as far as we should. If this substitute amendment fails, I shall support the 2-year provision, but to limit it to 1 year seems to me to go beyond the point where we should go, in fairness and justice.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. Does the gentleman, in referring to our 6-year statute of limitations in New York, refer to the original general statute of contractual limitations, or did we in New York at any time adopt a special statute of limitations for this kind of action?

Mr. KEATING. My understanding is that we have never taken such action, and I am referring to the limitation of 6 years, applicable to actions ex contractu.

Mr. COUDERT. Then the fact is that, in New York and in all of these other States upon which the gentleman and those in his position rely by way of analogy, you are really referring to the underlying general statute of contractual limitations, and not statutes that those States may have specifically enacted to deal with this very extraordinary and unique cause of action.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is partially correct. The average of 3.8 which I have cited includes those States which have and also those which have not acted on this specific proposition.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, the gentleman recognizes that this being a statutory remedy and right, and being extraordinary in character because of the provisions for double liability, it differs from the ordinary contractual obligation.

Mr. KEATING. That is a point to which I am very happy to address myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. My point is that by the provisions of this bill, which I favor, whereby we have given to the employer the defense of good faith, which I feel he should always have had, and by the further provision where we have permitted settlement between the employer and the employee which seems to me to be to the decided advantage of both parties, we have created quite a different situation from the one which applied to the original Wages and Hours Act, upon which those State legislators acted when they passed the shorter period, which they have.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. In order to clarify that matter, the table referred to on page 82 is of course a list of the general statutes applicable to actions in general and does not purport to set out the States which have acted specifically. Is that correct?

Mr. KEATING. That may be right. I am not sure. I think the Nation-wide average, however, is 3.8 years.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. If the gentleman has the hearings before him, he will find that the State statutes of limitation to which the gentleman from Iowa referred include both, and they are the number of years for which back pay can be claimed either under a special statute or under the statute relating to actions ex contractu.

Mr. KEATING. As to what the list on page 82 covers I do not know, but my understanding is that the Nation-wide average is 3.8 years and in my State of New York it is now 6 years.

Mr. GWYNNF of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman does not deny the fact, does he, that of 11 States which have acted specifically and positively 6 have enacted a statute of 1 year or less?

Mr. KEATING. That is right, I believe, but they have acted upon the existing wage-hour law, not the law as we are now proposing to amend it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming that good faith is involved and that the employer gets before a district judge who has the audacity to state, "Now, this is a prolabor court," would not it naturally follow that a prolabor decision would result? Should we not guard against any possibility of that kind?

Mr. KEATING. I agree entirely with the distinguished gentleman that there should be some statute of limitations written into this law. He and I are in an honorable difference of opinion as to the length of time which should be written into this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee bill with all the pleasure in the world. It does not take me a year to yell "Ouch," if somebody hurts me, and that is all that the filing of a claim is. You can file a suit in 1 hour, and if your resentment at the outrageous treatment of management be sufficient you can do it in less than an hour.

I do not believe in saving up these claims like Octagon soap wrappers for 8 years, as the night watchman did over here in an Alexandria ice plant, and then filing a suit of $34,600. That is an illustration of one of the reasons our committee recommended a 1-year statute in the Gwynne bill last year, to stop such racketeering. What did you do, how many hours did you work on September 16, 1936? You do not know and no one else knows. But now we have perfect time books showing exactly what happened.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is citing a perfectly ridiculous situation, of course. But is it not a fact that employers, under the law, must retain their records for a period of 3 years?

Mr. HOBBS. That is my understanding. This is just warmed over food from last year, and the House is going to eat it the same way they did before, because they know it is good and we are hungry. Anybody who has an honest claim under any of these civil statutes—which have no relation at all to the statutes of limitations in criminal cases—can certainly file his suit, if he thinks he has a case, within 12 months. Not only is that common sense, but it is justice, and is preeminently fair to every honest claimant.

I rather resent the imputation that we are trying to do something unfair to organized labor. It is not true, no matter how much the distinguished gentleman may be in utter sincerity in saying so.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so glad to yield to my friend, the distinguished dean of the House.

Mr. SABATH. May I inquire why the same provision should not apply to other actions that are commenced? I believe the average on civil actions under the different laws is nearly 4 years. Why is this different from other civil actions? Why should labor be the only one to be treated differently? Do you think the country would approve of that? No. Unfortunately, you are picking on labor, but not on the businessman or anyone else. You are just picking out labor for this different treatment.

Mr. HOBBS. I am so glad to have the elucidating explanation and statement of the distinguished gentleman. May I say that nothing is further from the thought of the Committee on the Judiciary than to pick on labor. We did not select any particular group or any particular act. The Gwynne bill last year brought up the point that there were 19 civil laws providing civil penalties no one of which had any limitation, no derailing switch, and therefore we provided one, which met with the almost unanimous approval of the House. We are trying to do the same thing today.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to my friend the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Under the statute, one employee may file a suit for himself and for others similarly situated. There is one section in the bill which troubles me, and if the gentleman can help me, I will certainly appreciate it. Subsection (c) of section 2 says:

> An action shall be deemed to have been commenced as to any individual claimant as of the date when such claimant is named in such action as a party thereto.

Do I understand that to mean that if the individual himself is not named, then at the expiration of the statute of limitations he is out?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. And he is not protected by the fact that some other employee has filed suit for himself and others similarly situated?

Mr. HOBBS. That is exactly right, but anybody who has a claim can be named in any such suit, and, of course, would be if he wished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for five additional minutes. We members of the committee gave this matter long and serious consideration, and the gentleman should have an opportunity to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate the kindness of my friend, as well as the indulgence of the House, but I shall not consume the entire 5 minutes, but I will be delighted to conclude my answer. The point that the gentleman from New Mexico raised relates to that part of the bill which interdicts the practice that has obtained thus far, of having a group frequently in a distant city bring in 176,000 cases, in one instance without any permission from the alleged claimants; without any knowledge of many of the alleged claimants. Many of them repudiated the pretense of authority to act for them. Therefore, the committee bill provides that if anyone has a claim, either he or one of his buddies acting for him with his authority should put his name in, so that we may know who is really back of the propounding of the claim.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the dean of the Democratic minority from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Suppose there are 1,500 employees and they all want to join in an action, each must be named individually?

Mr. HOBBS. Named, yes. But they can all sue in a group. In other words, all of those who really want to be in the suit can put their names in the complaint and thereby preserve their rights. We are delighted to have that provision. It is salutary. The only thing we are after by that provision is the unauthorized suing for people who do not want it done.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, this bill grows out of the necessities of the situation that confronts the businessmen of this country and their employees. Not only the owners and managers of business, but the men and women who work for them are threatened and are in peril.

These portal-to-portal suits, aggregating almost $6,000,000,000, hang like a pall over the business of this country. They operate to stop the flow of what we call risk capital—new money that people might put into business if they thought they could do business without being destroyed by a law that has really been misconstrued by the United States Supreme Court. Those suits do not grow out of any contract between the employer and employee. They do not grow out of any usage or custom in industry. They grow out of a judicial effort to legislate. So far it has accomplished its purpose. The Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case flooded the courts with thousands of unprecedented and unexpected suits.

I feel that a majority of this Congress are here under a mandate from the people to relieve them from this sort of a threat to the solvency of this Nation and of our industries.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, we all know the gentleman from Tennessee is a very able member of the great Committee on the Judiciary. As the gentleman has pointed out, the filing of these portal-to-portal suits shocked the conscience of our people. They demand that something be done. I rise at this moment to commend the gentleman's committee, the Committee on the Judiciary, for the expeditious manner in which they have approached the solution of this very difficult problem. I think the committee has done a good job with it. I think the majority of the committee in reporting this bill are dealing fairly and honestly and properly with the issue that is presented. As far as I am concerned I propose to stand with the committee in the matter of this legislation.

I trust that the bill, as reported, may proceed to speedy enactment.

Mr. JENNINGS. I thank the majority leader for his contribution; and may I say that I do not for one moment lay the flattering unction to my soul that this Committee on the Judiciary is the repository of all knowledge and all wisdom, but I do say that the able members of the subcommittee who had this bill in charge and under consideration, and who wrote it and reported it to the whole committee and to this House gave it careful and studious attention. It is a good bill. I am getting letters from both working people and men in business from all over my State and my district. They are asking me, "Does the Congress propose to function? Has it got the guts to stand up? Or are we going to march up the hill and then back down again because somebody comes at us with a wooden gun or threatens us with some reprisal at the hands of some organization."

William Green and the thoughtful members of the American Federation of Labor have disapproved of these portal-to-portal suits. I have been threatened and you have been threatened by scalp hunters who went out under the banner of certain labor organizations and denounced us as unworthy representatives of the people. I have no quarrel with any workingman. I think the workingmen are just as patriotic—the great body of them—as I am; but many of them have been misled, and the time for action is now. We are face to face with an opportunity, and the first opportunity we have had in this session of Congress, to do something to protect the people who are in industry, to protect the jobs of our workers. There can be no job for any man unless there is an employer financially able to pay him for work when he has performed it. In addition to that, it requires from six to seven thousand dollars in money to create and maintain a job for any man or woman in industry. When you stop the flow of capital, when you terrorize those who put their money in business, you have threatened not only the solvency of that particular business, but when you have an avalanche of suits like this, you threaten the entire economy of the country. You may destroy the jobs of millions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. This limitation of 1 year applies only to actions brought under these laws that are now in question. Any workingman who has a claim against his employer in my State, or your State, simply for wages and not for the penalties and not pursuant to the remedies afforded by these labor laws, has 6 years within which to bring a suit for what is due him for wages. We are undertaking to set a period of limitation upon the suits that involve these penalties, this time and a half, and these attorneys' fees and costs; that is all we are doing. This matter ought to be set at rest, and set at rest now. Everybody knows that the working people of this country are well advised, they are informed, they have their lawyers and their leaders. This debate in this House, the pendency of this measure, its terms, are known to the working people all over the country, and any man who has sense enough to have a job can certainly learn within a year whether or not somebody has treated him wrong. I have never yet seen the time when a man or woman in this country who conceived himself or herself to be aggrieved did not go to the courthouse. People down in my country are litigious; they are good supporters of the lawyers and they are good asserters of their own rights. I believe human nature is pretty much the same all over this country. Let us not emasculate this bill; let us not kill this bill with weakening amendments; let us not disappoint the people of this country; let us quit shadow-boxing and adopt a period of limitation here within which these suits may be brought that will stop the uncertainty which is about to stop the wheels of industry in this country. The passage of this measure by this House by an overwhelming majority will enkindle new hope, faith, and courage in the people eagerly awaiting our action here today. I predict that we will not disappoint those who sent us here to do this job.

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last six words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to state at the outset that I intend to vote for this law. The debate seems to have gotten off the point, however, as most of the gentlemen are talking about the general statute of limitations. I do not know how many States like Texas have special statutes creating labor liens and material men's liens, but our time limit has been for years that when a man worked at a job building a house he had 30 days within which to file a labor lien after the job was completed. That time has been recently extended to 120 days. That same law applies to material men, the people who furnish the lumber, the mortar, and the brick to go into a house. Many States have such laws.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. That applies, of course, to actions that are known as lien actions?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. That is right. This is drastic action. This law has been written by the Committee on the Judiciary and it has allowed a very reasonable time. It has been written to take care of a very ridiculous situation that has arisen so far as the business of this country is concerned.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in his own State of Texas an employee has 2 years within which to bring a suit for wages.

Mr. WILSON of Texas. That is true of oral contracts. The limitation is 2 years. On written contracts the limitation is 4 years. But that is not relevant to this matter. This law as written is fairly liberal, in my estimation.

I, like the gentleman from Tennessee, think this Congress should adopt the pending measure by an overwhelming majority and thereby cure a ridiculous situation that has arisen in this country, not by contract but dragged out of thin air, by some of our labor unions.

The laws of Texas further require that after a laborer or a materialman files his itemized list of either labor performed or material furnished with the county clerk that he must bring suit within 6 months in order to foreclose that lien which gives him an over-all period of time of 10 months in which to file and prove his lien.

This bill allowing 1 year limitation should be ample for any laborer who feels that he has a claim to file on it. I urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the substitute amendment and I hope it passes, but whether it passes or not I am going to support this bill and I am going to support it wholeheartedly.

There are other amendments I would like to see to this bill. In my opinion it is a little too broad. It is not the kind of a bill I would have written; in fact, it is not the kind of a bill I wrote. I presented a bill, H. R. 1440, which I thought went as far as we ought to go to take care of the problem. But, as I stated, whether the amendments which are going to be offered are accepted or not I am going to support this bill wholeheartedly. However, I do want to offer at the appropriate time an amendment which I think ought to be adopted for clarification of the act.

The amendment I shall offer will be to line 13, page 5, section 2. In that section there are used the words "without reasonable ground" and the complete section reads as follows:

(g) In any action pursuant to any of the acts mentioned in section 5 hereof, the court, if it finds that the violation of the law giving rise to such action was in bad faith and without reasonable ground, may, in its sound discretion, award not to exceed the amount specified as penalty or damage in the law under which such action arises.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know just exacty what is meant by the words "without reasonable ground" but from a reading of the report I think what is meant can be made clear by the amendment which I shall offer at the proper time.

In lieu of the words "without reasonable ground" I am going to offer an amendment to strike out those words and insert in lieu thereof "or with intent to evade the provisions of said acts relating to fair labor standards and practices." I mention that matter now so that you may be giving it some thought before the amendment comes up. I think that is what the committee had in mind. In any event, the words "or with intent to evade the provisions of said acts relating to fair labor standards and practices" have at least the virtue of being clear. I think we ought to take time in drafting and passing this law and see to it that all the terms are clear.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last six words.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, we have this one amendment before the House, and let us not get into a discussion of other amendments until we dispose of this. I wonder if we could not agree on time as to this particular phase? Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, before you close debate are you not going to allow some of us who introduced bills long before you started in on this to say anything?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman was yielded 10 minutes yesterday, and he was not here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I stayed around here until after dark, and I thought perhaps I could not get any light on it then.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am only a juror in this case. But should you not be willing to hear a comment from a juror? We have heard this legalistic conversation going on for some hours. Of course, we know the issue. It is simple enough. We know there is a flood, and we should turn off the spigot and shut off the flood as soon as possible. However, it seems as if we have been flooded this morning with argument of sympathy for the lawyers themselves, who want 2 or 3 years to bring a suit for possible clients. How you do look after your profession. What a wonderful harvest for the legal profession. I want to congratulate the membership of the bar on this side of the House, who are willing to forego the harvest of fees which would necessarily follow. As a juror, I should remind other jurors of this feature of the proposed amendment. We think we know the issue, and we should not have to sit here much longer to determine simply which side has the best lawyers. Again, the issue is a very simple one to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FELLOWS].

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, when they say that the laboring man does not understand his rights, that he is not capable of understanding just where he stands at any time, I wish to call this to your attention, because I think it is unfair to the laboring man to insinuate that he does not understand. The Supreme Court decision came down in June, and within a matter of a few months they not only understood their rights but they instituted lawsuits numbered in thousands and in amounts aggregating $6,000,000,000. They knew that the Supreme Court decision in the pottery case had come down before you did. I shall support the limitation of 1 year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, when my distinguished leader the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], whose slightest wish, whenever I can ascertain what it is, I delight to follow, chides me for not being around yesterday, it becomes expedient—it is not necessary—for me to offer an alibi. I was here pretty nearly all afternoon, but I was so overcome by the flow of eloquence and information I received from the members of the Judiciary Committee who spoke, that I did not feel competent to add anything at that time to its debate. I wanted to spend the night in collecting my thoughts, if I could, and see if there was anything they had not said that I might say to add to this discussion. I found out there was not a thought that had to do with the merits of the issue that had not been expressed far better than I could give it utterance. So today my only purpose is to call your attention to the fact that these lawsuits are the result of a decision of Justice Murphy and four of his associates. Justice Jackson was not there when the opinion was handed down. He was across in Germany doing something else, making new international law. The other four justices may have been asleep or down to lunch. There was something wrong, anyway, over there, because they overruled a unanimous decision in which they had all joined just a little while before. Skidmore against Swift, in which they held that the master should find the facts and was what might be called the old formula in awarding damages, if any. So Justice Murphy wrote this Pottery decision and the other justices, apparently not knowing what it was all about, four of them, they signed up, and that decision—lawsuits against industry—$6,000,000,000 worth—is Justice Murphy's attempted gift to the CIO.

JUSTICE MURPHY IS CIO'S SANTA CLAUS

Way back in 1937 Justice Murphy gave us the sit-down strikes in Michigan, and you gentlemen from the other States have had the benefit of that over the years. That action of the then Governor of Michigan was a gift to the CIO—which enabled it to exist.

This is the way it works out. There is a little company in Benton Harbor, Mich., in the Fourth Congressional District. They had just 35 employees at the beginning. Then in wartime they went up to 100. When this decision of Justice Murphy came down in 1946 the CIO sponsored and filed a portal-to-portal suit against the company, based on the Mount Clemens Pottery decision, asking for $575,000. They also called a strike over there. There were no employees on the picket line, but they brought in pickets from outside to stop the workers, but were not successful. Then on top of that what do you think happened? The National Labor Relations Board, which now is over there across the hall in the room with the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee asking for more money, went down there and filed unfair labor practice charges against that company. The suit, you see, was not enough. Along comes the Labor Board and dips its oar in and brings this charge, and refuses, bless their heart, to call an election so that the employees themselves can determine whether or not that organization represents them in this suit and in their other labor relations.

On top of that, what happens? The CIO puts an ad in the daily paper saying in substance, "If you worked in 1940 or any year between 1940 and the present time you are entitled to hundreds of dollars, and if you will call at our office and we will be open until midnight"—they are accommodating—"we will file a suit for you and it will not cost you anything." How do you like that for a speculation? How do you like that for a racket? That is the Supreme Court's gift to industry. I have the highest respect in the world for that Court, or at least if I have not right this minute, I will have when any three of them can agree on any one opinion when they file a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALTER) there were—ayes 40, noes 145.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—ayes 73, noes 124.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEVITT: On page 4, line 18, after the word "practice", insert the following: "of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor, or of any Government agency having jurisdiction of the subject matter."

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer here a relatively simple amendment to this bill which I hope will have the favorable consideration of the House. I offer the amendment in order to take care of several situations of which I have personal knowledge and in order to clarify the bill. As the bill reads now, you will note in subsection (e) of section 2 that it is provided that in any action where the employer relies on an administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice, such reliance is a good defense to an action, even in the face of a later court decision to the contrary. Personally, I object to a law which gives to administrative orders a precedence over judicial decisions. But I believe by the amendment which I have offered we will be able to limit the scope of this law. What I seek to do is to limit the force given to these regulations and orders and make the law applicable only to those agencies of Government which have jurisdiction of the subject matter.

So my amendment would make subsection (e) read as follows:

In any action, whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, the employer may plead and prove that the act or omission complained of was done or omitted in good faith consistent with, required by, or in reliance on any decision of a court of record in connection with which such employer was a party in interest, or any administrative regulation, order, ruling, interpretation, approval, enforcement policy, or practice of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor, or of any Government agency having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

What I seek to do is to strike from the bill the administrative policies, regulations, or rules of all kinds by Government agencies, bureaus, or departments which have absolutely nothing to do with the subject matter of the employment.

I related to the Members of the House yesterday afternoon the facts with reference to the lawsuit in my own congressional district, where a decision has already been rendered, but where, if this bill is passed without amendment, some 2,500 employees would be denied recovery which a court of the United States has said they were entitled to receive.

Under the proposed amendment I feel sure that these employees will be saved from the operation of this bill and that other groups of employees throughout the country similarly situated will also be saved.

Most of the administrative rules and regulations which the employers have relied upon in the past have been rules and regulations which have been issued by the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor. I dare say that some 95 or 96 percent of the rules have emanated from that particular department.

I emphasize that the purpose of this amendment is to make sure that the employer cannot stand up years later and say that he relied on a regulation which was issued by some department—and certainly there are thousands of agencies and departments in our Government today issuing regulations—which had absolutely nothing to do with the subject matter. That was the case in the Northwest Air Lines lawsuit which I told you about yesterday.

I urge the members of this committee to give favorable consideration to this clarifying amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVITT. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming that a representative of the Wage and Hour Division, having his card and credentials, appeared in the factory and advised the employer and the employee that they must do a particular thing; assuming that they acted in good faith and complied. A month or two later another agent comes from Washington, representing another agency of the Government, and shows his card and identifies himself and says he has authority, and commands the employer to do a certain thing. Does the gentleman mean that before that employer has any protection he must come to Washington and make an investigation to find out which man had authority, before he acts in good faith?

Mr. DEVITT. The gentleman's question is answered in the negative. I am sure he would not need to come to Washington to make an investigation. The question of good faith and reasonableness is involved. I am sure that any kind of a businessman with business acumen could find out the authority of somebody who walked into his plant and told him what to do. That would be the first thing he would do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DEVITT] has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Take the case about which the gentleman told us yesterday. The first representative of the Wage and Hour Board came along and told this concern what it should do. They complied. Later another representative came along and said he represented the Railroad Labor Board and it was the duty of the factory to do what he said. The factory accepted his authority. They did what he said, in good faith. If the gentleman is right now, he was wrong yesterday.

Mr. DEVITT. Just a moment. You say they did that in good faith. Does the gentleman recall the rest of the facts of that case that I cited yesterday? What did the Northwest Airlines do?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEVITT. May I answer the gentleman from Michigan? In the case of the Northwest Airlines, when they had two conflicting rulings from two departments of the Government they did not rely on this second contradictory ruling. They went to the War Department and told the War Department the situation and said that if this ruling should be reversed by a court of competent jurisdiction, and judgment should be entered against them for this overtime pay they wanted the War Department to reimburse them; and the War Department said they would do so. Now, I ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee: Was that acting in good faith on the ruling of the Railroad Labor Board?

Mr. MICHENER. It might have been good faith, but the question is this: Under the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota no one could rely on the authority of any representative without making an investigation to find out what his authority was.

Mr. DEVITT. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that that is true in any aspect of life. If anybody comes up to you with a proposition you ask: Who are you? What is your authority?

Mr. MICHENER. We are striving by this bill to remedy things that have already happened.

Mr. DEVITT. Yes; and I am trying to limit the scope of the bill so that it will not apply to all rules and regulations of all kinds of agencies. I am trying to limit the bill to the pertinent agencies.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVITT. I yield.

Mr. OWENS. Is it the understanding of the gentleman from Minnesota that this bill applies only to an action arising under the laws set out in section 5?

Mr. DEVITT. That is right.

Mr. OWENS. And that it should be limited to the administrative boards that have been appointed under those certain laws.

Mr. DEVITT. That is right; and I will go even further than that, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois, to provide that it should be limited to the rules and regulations of the board having jurisdiction of the subject matter. I think that is certainly wide enough to cover the situation.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVITT. I yield.

Mr. REEVES. I take issue with the suggestion that in determining whether or not the employer is in good faith he, the employer, must always pass on the question of jurisdiction. I submit that the amendment the gentleman has offered would impose upon employers the obligation of determining at their peril a jurisdictional question, which ought not to bear on the question of their bona fides or their good faith.

Mr. DEVITT. The answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Missouri is the same as the answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Michigan, that any businessman having dealings with a regulatory body must exercise reasonable judgment to determine its functions and authority.

Mr. REEVES. But that is the very question which the court has to decide in any matter of good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. REEVES. But the custom is that in any question of good faith the courts look into the reasonableness of the reliance of the party claiming good faith. What the gentleman's amendment does, I believe, is to substitute for reasonable reliance in good faith the responsibility of determining the question of the jurisdiction of the several governmental agencies.

Mr. DEVITT. I beg to differ with the gentleman. The object of this amendment is to limit the scope of the bill so it will not cover the entire field of these boards and their numerous regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment will not be adopted. I trust that for the sake of helping somebody's lawsuit out in Minnesota, you are not going to wreck the hopes and the aspirations of hundreds of thousands of employers all over this country.

This good-faith provision is not new to this bill; we had it in the last session in H. R. 2788; we had it before that in the bill that was sponsored by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]. Its intent is to bring the maximum of protection to a group of people who have been greatly abused and mistreated, the small employers in this country.

We do not wish in any way to limit the authority of any administrator to make whatever rules and interpretations he has the right to make, or to change them from time to time.

All we are trying to get into the law is a provision that if an employer relies upon a ruling or interpretation of the Administrator, of the Board, of the authority that has been given the power to enforce the law, he will be protected and any change in ruling will not operate retroactively. The courts have recognized that theory.

What is attempted by this amendment is to limit it to the rules and regulations of the Administrator of the wages-and-hours law. Why? Because, then, then, their lawsuit would be safe. That is the whole story.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that if we ever start making a crazy-quilt out of this legislation which has been gone over carefully with a thought to writing a bill which would be the maximum protection for everybody, if we are going to start now letting this fellow out and letting the other fellow out, we will soon have no bill at all.

In the first place, I have heard their case explained and I have serious doubt if their case is affected by the present bill for the reason that it simply provides if the employer relies in good faith on any rule or interpretation of some administrator in the executive branch of the Government he will be protected. That will take care of the great majority of the situations.

What happens when there is confusion in the temple, when there are conflicting rules and regulations of various boards and groups? Could a man be said to be in good faith if he picks out one he wants to comply with and complies with it? I am not so sure he would. I am not so sure this bill will affect the case the gentleman has in mind, and even if it did, I would not be in favor of adopting an amendment to save that case and scrap the rights of the many thousands of other employers all over the country.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to write into the base of the general law a special act for the protection and relief of one group of business?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is exactly right.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to say anything with respect to suits which I think are improper. However, many suits which have been filed were filed justifiably and correctly and have as their object giving relief to employees who are entitled to that relief. We understand that this act is to be limited to certain laws which have heretofore been passed and which are set forth in section 5. In view of that fact I believe that when persons are raising defenses based on good faith, that defense being that they were informed by some administrative agency of some provision which caused their action should certainly be limited to an administrative body appointed under one of those laws which are set forth in section 5, or some administrative body which clearly has jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. Chairman, this is a mighty drastic law which affects the rights of employees throughout the Nation. For this reason we should be very careful and give consideration to a just amendment of this type.

I therefore submit and urge you to support the amendment that was submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DEVITT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERNANDEZ: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "and without reasonable ground" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or with intent to evade the provisions of said acts relating to fair labor standards and practices."

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, under subsection (e) of the act we make good faith a defense. Under subsection (g) we say that if the court finds that the defendant acted in bad faith or without reasonable ground, the penalties provided by the statute may be imposed. The words "without reasonable ground" stand out with a big question mark. It seems to be a new expression in this connection. It is hard to understand what is meant by those words. If the members of the committee who are more able than I can tell us what that means, I will withdraw my amendment. But I do think that we should endeavor to make the meaning clear. From the report I gather that what the committee meant was that if the defendant acted in bad faith or with intent to evade the provisions of these three statutes, then the court may impose the penalty and damage provisions of the act.

Therefore, to make that clear, I have offered the amendment to substitute for the words "and without reasonable ground" the words "or with intent to evade the provisions of said acts relating to fair labor standards and practices." If the court should so find, then, of course, the court would impose damages and penalties.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment which adds the words "or with intent to evade the provisions of said acts relating to fair labor standards and practices" would seem to me to add nothing to the present wording of bad faith. Anybody who acts with intent to evade the law would be acting in bad faith and without any reasonable grounds. The addition of this proposed wording would be repetitious.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we have already passed on subsection (e), I believe we could justly support this amendment, because certainly where we want to prove that the person was not acting in good faith it is sufficient to show that it was with intent to evade the law. I do not see that there is anything wrong at all with this amendment. As I said before, I believe this is a very drastic law, and we ought to give some support to the position of those employees whose actions are brought in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERNANDEZ].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. No action or proceeding of any kind whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, shall be maintained to the extent that such action is based upon failure of an employer to pay an employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee other than those activities which at the time of such failure were required to be paid for either by custom or practice of such employer at the plant or other place of employment of such employee or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee or his collective-bargaining representative.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 5, after section 2, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2½. The whole of section 6, the whole of section 7, and the whole of section 16 (b), Public Law 718, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, are hereby repealed."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It is not germane. It deals with sections of the Fair Labor Standards Act not within the scope of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I was heard yesterday in the general debate, speaking to this amendment, and I try never to burden the House with my remarks if I can possibly avoid it. Therefore, I thank the Chairman, but decline to avail myself of the privilege. The ruling in the Committee was against me on this point of order, and I understand the Parliamentarian is of the same opinion, so further argument on the point of order would be useless.

May I assure the House, however, that nothing is further from my thought than to cut off any real, honest right. My amendment would cut out the cancer, root and branch, and cure the disease that afflicts our national economy to the point of threatening its life. But no one could be so foolish as to think that immediately following that beneficent surgery there would not be further amendment fully protecting every honest portal-to-portal claim, and doing full justice to all concerned with respect to wages and hours of honest labor. My amendment is but an invitation and challenge to straight thinking, urging that detours be avoided until the first city of refuge shall have been reached by the safe highway of good legislation.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman wants to be heard, I will reserve my point of order so that he can make his statement. However, I shall press the point of order after the gentleman has made his statement.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman, but I do not wish to take the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: At the end of section 3, strike out the period and insert "or upon failure of an employer to pay overtime compensation for items of inactive or unproductive time or services, which pursuant to either such practice or custom or such agreement have been absorbed in the rate of pay or have been treated as noncompensable."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to include under the provisions of section 3 those arrangements that are made with certain employees whereby those employees remain in a standby status for some period of hours after the normal period of employment, where compensation for the unproductive standby period is supposed to be included in the rate of compensation which is agreed to and paid. That condition obtains in a number of industries. It obtains in emergency or repair aspects of industries of several kinds. It may be that the intent of the language which I have offered is actually covered by intent of the committee in this or other portions of the bill. If so, I shall be glad to withdraw my amendment. May I now ask the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the author of the bill, whether this intent is covered in the bill?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is familiar with the circumstances the gentleman has in mind.

Section 3 has been written with a great deal of care and is designed to rule out all cases which are based upon compensation for activities that were not agreed to be paid for, either by express agreement or by custom or practice. I would think the words in the gentleman's amendment to distinguish between productive and nonproductive time would have a very unfortunate effect. Nonproductive time is just as compensable as purely productive time. But the distinction we have tried to make is between activities for which there was an understanding that they were to be paid for either by express agreement or by custom or practice. If your situation falls in that category, you have the protection now of section 3.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman from Iowa. I believe the bill covers the situation that has been presented by this amendment. The amendment was offered merely for clarifying purposes, and in view of the clarifying statement of the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, although because of other hearings that are going on, it has not been my privilege to hear all the debate on this bill, I have been surprised at some of the debate that I have heard because of the apparent indifference of some speakers relative to the effect that this portal-to-portal question has on the public treasury. There have been some of those who have spoken rather slightingly of this legislation who have been among those who in times gone by have spoken very strongly for the control of excess war profits. They must be overlooking the fact that the real target of these portal-to-portal decisions, if they were to be made, would be the United States Treasury.

The committee report on the bill calls attention to the fact that cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts in the War Department between 1941 and 1946 totalled between forty and forty-five billion dollars, and it was estimated by Under Secretary Royall that a potential liability could rest against the Government of $1,400,000,000 on those contracts alone. In addition to that, there were $100,000,000 worth of lump-sum contracts. While the Government may not have the same legal responsibility there, it would have a moral responsibility which would add another large amount.

I am a little perplexed by the following sentence from the committee report which says:

> There might also be an additional although apparently limited loss in connection with the renegotiation proceedings.

It would be limited only to the extent that when renegotiation is completed, the Government does have a fixed settlement. But the moral liability would still remain.

As was pointed out in a letter from Colonel Hirsch, which I placed in the RECORD a week or two ago, the contracts under renegotiation which have not been completed are those with contractors who were the obstreperous sort, generally speaking. Those who came in and were willing to renegotiate their excess profits have been settled and, while the Government liability there may be closed, it is not closed in those which have been less willing to settle, those who would now stand to benefit if this legislation is not passed.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. The witness for the Government who appeared before the subcommittee pointed out that there would be liability in that field. It would merely be smaller than the liability in the other fields. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad to have the statement of the chairman. All of this must be taken in consideration in connection with the announcement of the Treasury that if individual firms or employers were liable for judgments under these portal-to-portal claims, credit would be given to the employer in the year in which the claim was reduced to judgment. The significance of that is that the tax rate was higher a few years ago during the time when some of these contracts existed. The tax rate will be lower this year and in succeeding years when these claims may be reduced to judgments and the Treasury would suffer an additional loss, because it would admit the loss under a lower tax rate.

Apparently there is a feeling on the part of some folks that what you can get from the Government is all right; perhaps that does not hurt anyone. When I think of this I am reminded of a thing General Eisenhower said in a committee hearing the other day. He said that it was a regrettable thing in the history of the United States when we started dropping the word "patriotism" out of our Fourth of July speeches.

Now, for the life of me I cannot see any reason why claims should be defended when they cannot be made in good faith. I think section 3 of this bill, protecting the employer in the case of good faith, is one of the most important sections of the bill. I am glad the committee reported the bill with that section in it.

So, I repeat the real target would have been the Treasury of the United States in many of these claims. It is the responsibility of the Congress to protect the Treasury of the United States as much as the employer or the employee. That is what we are really protecting in passing this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. JAVITS:
>
> On page 5, line 23, after the word "employee", insert "covered by collective-bargaining agreement then in effect."
> On page 6, line 5, strike out the period after the word "representative" and substitute a semicolon and insert the following clause: "or upon the failure of an employer to pay any other employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee other than those activities which at the time of such failure were specifically required to be paid for, either by custom or practice of the particular industry most nearly applicable to such activities, or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the section as amended so that you will get the meaning of it clearly:

> No action or proceeding of any kind, whether or not commenced prior to the effective date of this act, shall be maintained to the extent that such action is based upon failure of an employer to pay an employeee covered by a collective-bargaining agreement then in effect for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee other than those activities which at the time of such failure were required to be paid for either by custom or practice of such employer at the plant or other place of employment of such employee or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee or his collective-bargaining representative; or upon the failure of the employer to pay any other employee for activities heretofore or hereafter engaged in by such employee other than those activities which at the time of such failure were specifically required to be paid for either by custom or practice of the particular industry most nearly applicable to such activities or by express agreement at the time in effect between such employer and such employee.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment goes to the heart of this bill. It is not an amendment for the purpose of making some minor changes. It seeks to separate the sheep from the goats in this way: First, it states that this bill shall stand as is with respect to those cases in which a collective-bargaining agreement exists. I am firmly of the opinion that in no case where people meet and bargain should they get a greater advantage than what they bargained for. The bill, however, is not confined to collective-bargaining agreements; it goes into the whole question of the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act for people who are not covered by collective-bargaining agreements, and the major portion of the workers of the country are not. I am a Republican who was elected to come here and defend labor and employer alike—to give them justice—and that is what I am here speaking for. I want justice done in this bill, and in justice I am against portal pay suits where those portal pay suits are drummed up by unions for the purpose of getting advantage they never bargained for. But I am not for any act where a man may be victimized under the Fair Labor Standards Act—an act which was designed to prevent such victimization.

My amendment simply separates collective-bargaining agreements from others and does justice by everybody.

I should like to make just one further observation: The majority which the Republican Party now has was created by men elected from the big cities, just like me, and it has lifted Republicans—many of whom have been here for years in the minority—lifted them into the majority. Let us not forget that. I campaigned—and I think many of my colleagues campaigned—on a platform of even-handed justice. That is all I ask be done; and, Mr. Chairman, do not forget this other thing—this is not an inconsequential bill; this bill will be considered the length and breadth of America as a pilot-plant vote by the Congress, as to whether it is going to be just to labor and employer alike—as to whether it is going to legislate with a cutlass instead of a scalpel, which is the instrument that should be used in any legislative procedure.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman says his amendment refers only to collective-bargaining agreements and not to cases where there are no collective-bargaining agreements. In the latter cases the employee would have no protection. In other words, it would only protect union shops where there is collective bargaining and not anyone else who did not happen to have a closed shop and collective bargaining. This latter group would not be protected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. May I say to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee that my amendment does exactly take care of that situation by doing the following: It protects those who have collective-bargaining agreements and it also covers those without collective bargaining agreements by providing in those cases that payment, and so forth, shall only be for practices customary in that industry in the absence of agreement between employer and employee. I cover them both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I can state my objection very briefly. The bill as written was designed to protect not only collective-bargaining agreements between a powerful union and an employer but was designed just as surely to protect the agreement between one workman and his employer.

The provision in the amendment relating to practice and custom would create this situation as I understand it. Let us assume there are four plants in the same industry in one community, that in three of those plants 15 minutes of these preliminary activities are paid for as a matter of custom and practice generally but that in the fourth plant the employer was a little more liberal and paid for 20 minutes of such time. Is there any reason why the better agreement or the better custom and practice in the one plant should not be recognized and enforced as to the employees of that plant? What we are trying to do in section 3 is to protect every collective-bargaining agreement about these activities and to protect every practice and custom which we assume must have entered into the minds of the people when they made the contract. I am afraid the amendment would introduce confusion where we have tried to write a section which will adequately cover all cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I must, indeed, admire the forthright and very courageous statement of the gentleman from New York in offering his amendment, which particularly provides that the custom and practice must prevail throughout the industry nearest appertaining thereto. Unless we do that, then you have different practices and customs in the very same area of production. You will have black spots and white spots in an industry. Different plants within an industry could have different conditions and wages of employment.

I would like to ask, What is custom and practice in a new enterprise, a new employer who goes into business? He could declare his own practice; he could write his own ticket; he could write his own law, because there is no practice theretofore established. If we do not have uniformity throughout the industry, if you do not adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from New York, you will have uneven and unequal conditions throughout the length and breadth of a particular industry. You will have unfair competition and those types of employers who want to do the fair and honorable thing, pay adequate wages, and provide decent conditions, will have to meet at their own disadvantage the chiseling, the corner-cutting employers who do not provide for decent employment conditions and who do not pay decent wages.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It seems to me that the gentleman's argument runs rather wide, although I am not going to bring that up. The gentleman overlooks the fact that, if this amendment means what he implies it to mean, it may result in setting up a basis for a claim which was not in the minds of either of the contracting parties at the time—either the employee or employer—and that the fair thing to do is to let the matter rest upon good faith and what was the meeting of the minds of the employer and the employee at the time the employment contract was entered into.

Mr. CELLER. I do not object to that. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York provides that if there is an express agreement or if there is collective-bargaining agreement, that shall prevail. I am speaking in general of the workers who are not organized and do not bargain collectively.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Even without a collective-bargaining contract, there is a contract of employment, so to speak, between the individual employee and his employer and whatever the meeting of the minds of the employer and employee was at the time that he entered the employment relationship it seems to me should be allowed to prevail.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman there are many cases where there are no collective-bargaining agreements and, therefore, custom and practice must prevail. What custom and practice? Shall it be the custom and practice of the individual establishment or shall it be the custom and practice in the area of production? It should be the latter and the New York gentleman's amendment provides for the custom and practice that prevails generally in the industry so that there will be an evening out of conditions and wages to all competing establishments of the industry.

I repeat the argument I made when I drafted the minority report to the bill:

> In our judgment the proposal to make the law depend on the custom or practice of the employer accomplishes a virtual destruction of any standards under an act which by its title is supposed to set standards, namely, the Fair Labor Standards Act.
>
> The bill proposes that the question of whether certain activities are or are not required to be compensated under the law is to be determined by the custom or practice of the employer. This means that a new employer setting up his business for the first time is free to write the law for himself. He will determine what is his custom or practice and that will determine what is the law as far as he is concerned.
>
> Even among employers already in business, the proposed bill means that instead of setting any uniform or even any minimum standard the law will vary from employer to employer. Those employers who have been more liberal and decent and who have compensated their employees fully for all activities engaged in for the benefit of the employer will be penalized. For them the law will be quite stringent, based on the decent practices they have followed.
> On the other hand, the employer who has cut corners, who has given the most restricted possible interpretation to his duties under the law, who has paid his employees as little as possible, who has required his employees to engage in a substantial amount of work without compensation, is to be favored under the proposed bill. He is to be rewarded for his sweatshop conditions. The more vicious his practices have been the more he is rewarded since the law, for him, will set standards as low as those he himself has set.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons above set forth, I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the rules providing for the consideration of bills by the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union are for the purpose of permitting Members who are not members of a committee to have their own ideas about the matter expressed and considered carefully.

I think that this Committee ought to consider the amendment just offered by the gentleman from New York, which I think is most fair. Everybody agrees that these laws were written to protect men from being over-reached by employers; the men who could not protect themselves. We have unions now that are strong and that are able to protect their own men. We could do without some of these protective laws as to those men who are fully protected by their unions, but as to those who do not come in that category, I think that we should protect them by continuing protective laws as to them. This bill as written, I think, will weaken those laws. The gentleman's amendment is fair in that it reaches the problem without the danger of weakening those laws. I thoroughly agree with him.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It seems to me that the greatest value of the gentleman's amendment is that it would give a standard for a new industry starting out in a particular line of business in the matter of custom or practice to go by; otherwise it seems to me that an industry just beginning could declare its custom or practice to be anything it wanted to which might not be in conformity with the fair standards of that particular industry.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I think so. I think the gentleman is correct. I think we ought to consider that amendment; in fact, I think all amendments so far offered today have been good amendments, and we ought to have considered them more carefully.

I started to say that I fully agree with the gentleman from New York. His amendment would tend to limit this act to the problem which is before us. In my own bill—H. R. 1440—and I ask the indulgence of the House if I may read a part of it—I tried to limit the act to the problem which is before us. My bill, in part, reads as follows in that respect:

SEC. 2. In any action now pending or hereafter instituted, based upon services performed by any employee prior to the effective date of this act, claim for which is based on the mandate of sections 6, 7, and/or 16 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (act of June 25, 1938, ch. 676, as amended) and not upon the express or implied provisions of any contract, no compensation shall be allowed by the courts, either as compensatory or as liquidated damages where it is found by the court—

(1) that the services were rendered pursuant to a contract of employment defining the hours of work or workweek and entered into through collective bargaining and in good faith; or

(2) where the claim is based on items of time or services which were, pursuant to general and established custom and with the acquiescence of the employee, absorbed in the rate of pay but excluded from measured time; or

(3) where the claim is based on incidental activities required as preliminary or preparatory to the actual performance of productive work otherwise compensated, or required as incidental to the conclusion of such productive work, which incidental activities were not, because of usage or custom, included in the measured time and were not contemplated as items to be included in the measured time by either the employer or employee under the terms of employment express or implied.

I think this House ought to limit itself to the problem and not go out and broaden the bill to where it invites more trouble.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. The committee hearings have been going on for 3 weeks. Why did the gentleman not appear before the committee and present his proposal instead of coming on the floor of the House and taking up our time? The committee has now brought in a bill and you gentlemen come in with a lot of amendments to muddy up the waters, and we are not getting anywhere.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Just a moment.

Mr. GAVIN. Let me take some time. I waited on the gentleman, and the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yielded to the gentleman for a question and he asked the question. Let me answer it.

In the first place, my bill was submitted to the gentleman's committee. If the gentleman did not look at it, that is not my fault.

Mr. GAVIN. It is not my committee. They tell me the committee was holding hearings on it.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. It was in the Judiciary Committee. I do not know whether the gentleman is on that committee or not.

Mr. GAVIN. I am not on that committee.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The committee was holding hearings on the bill. My bill was before them and I assume was considered by them. Perhaps they did not quite agree with me. As to offering amendments here and taking up the gentleman's time——

Mr. GAVIN. You are taking up everybody's time.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I think we are taking time in a good cause, and we ought to take time, and plenty of it, right here in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS], who told us he represents the great metropolitan area. I might tell the gentleman that I represent a rural area of Pennsylvania, and that the American people are sick and tired of the conditions that have been prevailing, and are watching the Congress, requesting that they be given relief from the conditions that have existed. The hearings on the bill have been held. The committee, I presume, has given everybody an opportunity to present any proposal they may have had, and why they have not I do not know. But most of the Members here are ready to vote on this legislation. Now amendment after amendment is being offered to muddy up the waters, with the result that we are unable to take definite action and clean up this matter and give the American people the relief they are asking. It is time for action and not talk.

COMMUNIST FOSTER PREDICTS DOWNFALL OF UNITED STATES BEFORE COMMUNIST CONGRESS IN ENGLAND

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important measures that ever came before the Congress of the United States. For my part, I expect to follow the Judiciary Committee.

We had before our Committee on Un-American Activities on yesterday laborers who told how the strike in the Allis-Chalmers plant had been inspired by Communists and promoted and expanded by Communist influences. Those influences have been found behind every movement to paralyze industry in this country; and I think they are behind these suits.

A few days ago William Z. Foster, head of the Communist Party—the man who said that just as surely as the sun rises the Communists will take over this country, that when that day comes it will not be a capitalist government but a "Soviet government, and behind that government will stand the Red Army to enforce the dictatorship of the proletariat"—a few days ago this same William Z. Foster spoke to the Communists in England. Let me read you this news item from London on February 22:

Two thousand British Communists shouted today when William Z. Foster, head of the Red Party in the United States, opened the Communist congress here by telling them the news they all wanted to hear—that America was nearing a bust.

For months the British Communists, like Reds the world over, have been predicting the downfall of America, but getting the word straight from America made it seem final.

In other words, when William Z. Foster, whose pernicious influence is found in all these disturbances, went to England and assured them that America was on her way to a downfall, these enemies of civilization stood and applauded.

The paper quotes Foster as saying:

The economic crisis in America will shake not only that country but the entire capitalist world.

Then it says:

The ovation given him was tremendous.

Foster, in England as a reporter for an American Communist paper, is the distinguished guest at the congress, to which the Communist Parties in 30 countries have sent delegates.

After cheering Foster's obituary of America, the Communists heard the British party leader, Harry Pollitt, say that even under the present Labor government England could not meet competition from modern industrial America, and they cheered him when he denounced this American economic domination of the world.

Trained to expect the unexplainable contradictions in the Moscow party line, the Communists found no conflict in descriptions of America as dying, and a few minutes later as a ruler of the world.

The congress is the largest ever held in Britain. All of the 1,000 branches of the Communist Party in England, Wales, and Scotland have sent at least one delegate to the 3-day meeting—all expenses paid.

This man Foster has gone from one end of the country to the other spreading communism. His influence has been found stirring up strife in labor unions, stirring up and promoting strikes, and stirring up racial hatred. His influence is seen in the picketing of the National Theater here in Washington, and in the race rioting in Detroit, according to the Negro Nowell, who testified before our committee the other day. He plays the renegade, if not the traitor, to America by telling the Communists in England that the United States is headed for the downfall for which he has been working.

It is time for real Americans to stand together to save America from such influences and to preserve this country for our children and our children's children.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I assume it is entirely within the rights of any Members of Congress in the Committee of the Whole to offer amendments to legislation reported by any of the legislative committees.

May I say to the Members, however, that a bill which comes from the Committee on the Judiciary under the sponsorship of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] you may rest well assured has received most careful consideration. So far as I am concerned, not being privileged to serve upon any legislative committee of this House, but being obliged to be a drudge, so to speak, sitting in the background with the Committee on Appropriations trying to save a dollar here and there and trying to understand how in the name of conscience we are going to put our financial house in order, I want to remind you again this afternoon of the critical situation that faces our country and to arouse, if I can, from their lethargic attitude, the people not only of this Congress but of the country who seem unable to realize that we are sitting on top of a volcano which may erupt at any time.

It is important that this bill be passed. But, my colleagues, may I say to you, as the leaders of this Government in secret meetings are telling groups every day, it may be of small moment ultimately what we do here now unless we restore, protect, and preserve the economic stability of our country. The demands that are going to be made of you in the next few days, demands which must be met, are going to be staggering because of conditions which exist throughout the world.

I implore the Members of this Congress to take the position, wherever it can be taken as we proceed from day to day, to let the people of the United States know that, regardless of any line that may exist in this Chamber, there is one thing that, as Americans, we must be ruthless about. That is, if we are to save our country from collapse and keep it strong enough to maintain our commitments to the other peoples of the world, it will require heroic efforts on the part of the Members of this Congress.

As these bills come in, may I repeat—and they will start coming to this Congress shortly—there must be a new attitude manifested on both sides of this aisle. New vision must be brought to bear on this whole question if America is to survive. Realize, if you will, that unless we are just devastatingly ruthless in cutting down expenditures, we may be through as a nation sooner than we expect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

The gentleman from New York is one of the new Members of this House and he has presented an amendment in good faith. I think it is a good amendment and I want to support the amendment. If that amendment is defeated, which seems probable, because we have seen that most amendments have been defeated today, I still want to say that I shall support it. At this time I want to pay compliment to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] and other members of the Judiciary Committee who have handled this bill in the very fair manner in which it has been presented. They have not sought to cut out debate. They have not sought to keep Members from giving their ideas on amendments. I am somewhat amazed at the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN] who just came to this well a few moments ago and gave some of the new Members on his side a tongue lashing for presenting amendments in Committee of the Whole. I wonder if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has ever offered an amendment to a bill presented by the committee.

Mr. GAVIN. No.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I am glad to hear that. Now, will the gentleman sit down. I refuse to yield further. The gentleman had his 5 minutes to give the new Members a tongue lashing and now I am going to say something on behalf of the new Members. I want the new Members to know, if they do not already know it, that they have the parliamentary privilege of presenting amendments when in their good judgment and in their conscience they think an amendment should be presented. I have known very good bills to come to this floor and I have known them to be amended very remarkably to the welfare of the Nation as a whole. So when you present an amendment, present it in good conscience, because you think the people of your district sent you here for the purpose of producing a good piece of legislation. When one of the older Members gets up and gives you a tongue lashing and implies you are reflecting on the judgment of the members of the committee which brought in the bill, it is just so much hogwash. It does not amount to anything. It is a grandstand play for the benefit of the galleries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill. I think it is a constructive bill. I think this is a time when Congress should concern itself with legislation such as this that will bring about better days not only for industry but for the workingman. We have a job before us to do, and I hope that both Republicans and Democrats have the stamina, I hope we have the character, I hope we have at heart sufficiently the interest of this country that we will come here and vote for those measures that are good for the country and not for any particular class, any particular organization, or any particular industry.

I wish to congratulate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] for bringing in this constructive measure. His explanation of the bill on yesterday was one of the finest, one of the most lucid, I have ever listened to, and I went immediately to him and congratulated him on his fine explanation of the bill. I have read the bill; I have studied it. It contains one provision, however, that I do not like, and I am sure that if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] got the same reaction from this bill that I did, this particular phraseology would not be in the bill. I intended to offer an amendment, but at the time that portion of the bill was reached I happened to be out of the Chamber preparing the amendment, so I cannot offer it now except by unanimous consent, but I wish to read this language and submit it for the consideration not only of the gentleman from Iowa but of the membership at large. I speak particularly with reference to the paragraph beginning in line 12 on page 5:

> In any action pursuant to any of the acts mentioned in section 5 hereof the court, if it finds that the violation of the law giving rise to such action was in bad faith and without reasonable ground—

Then the court may, in its discretion, award damages or penalty, and so forth.

Now, under this language the court has got to find these two things, that it was brought in bad faith and without reasonable ground—> may in its sound discretion award not to exceed—

And so forth. This provision of the bill alleges two conditions: After the court has found it is in bad faith and has found that it is without reasonable ground. But you still repose in the court the duty then to say whether or not in the court's sound discretion a judgment should be awarded. Congress should not pass the buck like that. Why should we pass it on to the courts? Why does not the Congress say in simple language that if you, Mr. Judge, find that the action is in bad faith, if you find it is without reasonable grounds you shall award certain damages? If you do not do that, you had just as well strike out the penalty in the original bill.

Let us not throw on the courts the responsibility which belongs to Congress, the responsibility which is our duty. Let us not shirk our duty. Let us not put a subterfuge in this bill and try to dodge a responsibility which is ours. Let us adopt language so clear there will be no question of doubt, absolutely none. The reason we are here now considering this bill is because Congress failed to do its duty to define in the Fair Labor Standards Act what is meant by a workday. This was left to the court to define, and portal-to-portal pay was permitted under the court's decision. Congress failed to legislate fully and the court legislated for us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The first words I uttered in this House today were that, regardless of whether amendments were adopted or not, I was going to support this bill wholeheartedly. I supported a similar bill in the last session and I am going to support it again regardless of whether or not amendments are adopted.

I wish to join the gentleman from Florida in complimenting the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the chairman of the committee, for this excellent bill. I do not hesitate to say that it is better than mine, although I was very proud of my own.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I am sure every Member of Congress wants to be fair. We want to be honest. We want to deal with every particular section of our economy, with labor, management, and the citizens at large.

I say that this Congress should not pass that responsibility and say that after you have found those facts you still have a discretion. Let us not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

The Clerk reread the pending amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has been put and I think the gentleman's request comes too late.

Mr. SABATH. I have not heard it put.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois may proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. For 3 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Did not the gentleman ask for 3 minutes?

Mr. SABATH. No. I am rising for the purpose of supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for 5 minutes, if there is no objection.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO GWYNNE BILL

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion, personally, that this is a splendid amendment and I favor its adoption, but I realize and understand that because it might aid and protect the laboring man to some extent in his rights the gentlemen on the Republican side, I am certain, will vote solidly against it.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] showed a little while ago that he was very much interested in financial stability and made a great plea, as he is capable of doing, for that happy condition. Unfortunately, no such plea was made by anyone on the Republican side when the so-called Ruml plan was considered and forced through Congress. That action cost the Nation about $6,000,000,000. No such plea was made when a vote was taken on the carry-back provisions under which the Government is now refunding millions upon millions of dollars to the manufacturers. Nor was any such plea made when the excess-profits-tax legislation was before us, which permitted the profiteers of this Nation to get away with some $3,000,000,000. At that time the gentlemen on the Republican side had confidence in their ability to have the Government pay for any possible losses that business employers might sustain by their willful and deliberate refusal to agree to fair pay adjustments with their labor.

LABOR ALSO LOST MILLIONS

But labor lost millions of dollars in wages in those work stoppages, and the workmen and their families suffered privation of the most severe kind. In some States, denied the benefits of unemployment insurance, they used up their savings, if they had any, drained the union treasuries, and were succored by sympathizers who were in their turn smeared by Red-baiting columnists.

Who made up to the workers the wages they lost?

Nobody.

Not so with Westinghouse Electric Corp., with General Motors, and with other corporations.

Under leave given me, Mr. Chairman, I insert at this point a news report from the staid and respectable New York Times; in fact, from the financial pages of the New York Times for yesterday, February 27.

This article explains how tax refunds from the carry-back tax gifts enabled Westinghouse to have an operating loss of $59,768,997 but a net profit of $8,823,846 in the year 1946. Members may recall that 2 months ago the president of the company expected to have a net profit of only $4,000,000. Even that was considerably more than the net profits of Westinghouse workers in 1946, who were virtually locked out of the plants for 4 months last year when the company refused even to discuss terms of the contract. The company had confidence in the Congress; the workers had confidence only in their cause.

The text of the New York Times story is as follows:

OPERATIONAL LOSS FOR WESTINGHOUSE—$59,768,997 DEFICIT IN 1946 AGAINST $48,443,839 NET IN 1945 LAID TO STRIKE

The Westinghouse Electric Corp. had an operating loss last year of $59,768,997 in contrast to an operating profit of $48,443,839 in 1945, the annual report disclosed yesterday. Tax refunds arising from the carry-back feature of the Federal tax laws and other income, however, enabled Westinghouse to show a net income of $8,823,846 for 1946, which compared with the net income of $26,744,055 the year before.

Gwilym A. Price, president, explained the large operating loss resulted from a strike last year that lasted 4 months, scarcity of materials, inadequate prices under the Office of Price Administration, and expansion outlays. While operating losses continued throughout the first 11 months of 1946, improvement in production and prices was reflected in an operating profit of $1,446,763 in December, he declared.

Unfilled orders at the close of last year reached a new peacetime high of $589,583,459 which compared with $303,873,749 a year earlier. Notwithstanding the production difficulties during the year, output, as represented by net sales billed, also made a new peacetime high of $301,691,788, Mr. Price points out. This, however, was substantially below the 1945 figure of $685,132,854, most of which represented war production.

OTHER COMPANIES GET SAME BENEFITS

I wish I could take the time and space to continue to quote from this same newspaper—from page 35 of the New York Times of February 27. It is filled with cheering news. Profits are everywhere—cash dividends, stock dividends, expansion programs, new high record sales, new high profits.

But I shall pass over this interesting and optimistic page of reports, except to note that the carry-back provisions added substantially to the net profits of R. G. Le Tourneau, Inc., and of Ryan Aeronautical Co.

Now let me paraphrase from another publication which would never be accused of unfriendliness to business, big or small, Moody's Industrials, reporting on another great industrial unit which, you may recall, had a little labor trouble last year.

I refer to General Motors Corp.

In the first 9 months of 1946 this far-flung industrial empire lost $68,000,000; but an $82,000,000 tax credit turned that operating loss into a net profit of $14,000,000. I wonder if all the unions of which you Republicans seem so fearful have total assets as great as this profit?

WHERE ARE REPUBLICAN PROTESTS AGAINST THESE VAST GIFTS TO CORPORATIONS?

How many more millions of dollars will be thus refunded to war profiteers and multimillion corporations no one can now foretell.

But it can be prophesied with absolute certainty that there will be no Republican squawks against this law which bestows so many generosities on corporations, and enables them to turn a lockout into a net profit.

With equal certainty it may be foretold that whenever and wherever the underpaid employees seek their rights, under the law, to recover unpaid wages for overtime work—oh, Mr. Speaker, what a hue and cry will then be raised.

Obviously, then, in the face of this predetermined judgment no amendment which might minimize or mitigate such discriminatory antilabor legislation as this has the slightest chance of adoption; and the bill, I feel sure, will be forced through with an almost unanimous vote from the Republican side.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman referred to me.

Mr. SABATH. I referred to the general vote.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman referred to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SABATH. I referred to the statement that the gentleman made on the floor.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman declines to yield?

Mr. SABATH. I decline to yield because I only have 5 minutes.

REPUBLICAN TAX POLICY, IF ANY, PROMISES MILLIONS TO MILLIONAIRES

Mr. Chairman, not content with all this prodigal generosity to the profit-gorged vested interests, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], the chairman of the powerful Committee on Ways and Means, comes in with a demand for a straight, across-the-board, 20-percent cut in income taxes.

This means millions for millionaires, pennies for the people.

I realize that it is highly debatable that there is a Republican tax policy.

It is somewhat difficult to read the widely differing reports from Republican leaders and know just what the official party policy is.

The one thing we can be reasonably sure of is that their policy, as it finally comes out in the revenue act, will sock the poor and coddle the rich.

DRY THOSE CROCODILE TEARS

O Mr. Chairman, the crocodile tears that have been shed on this floor for the poor, oppressed business interests that are being oppressed and bankrupted by the portal-to-portal pay suits, so-called.

Unfortunately, many well-intentioned, sincere, and honest men have permitted themselves to be influenced by these far-fetched statements made here on the floor and in the press and in the unending flood of propaganda we receive in our offices from high-pressure lobbyists.

I have risen to bring to you the real facts, and to show that there is no more justification for these crocodile tears than for any belief that you will not vote solidly for this and for every other piece of legislation proposing to protect capital and industry at the expense of the American wage earner.

THESE ARE THE FACTS

I will give you the facts.

You have heard, as I have heard, that if all the so-called portal-to-portal pay cases filed were upheld in the courts it would cost $10,000,000,000 and bankrupt American industry.

The fact is that it is impossible to estimate what the total back-pay bill would be.

The $10,000,000,000 figure has been exploited because it sounds huge; yet that could be arrived at only if the courts held that every minute of preparatory time had to be paid for.

But in the key case, the Mount Clemens Pottery case, the court did not so hold.

CASE DISMISSED AS INSUBSTANTIAL

The fact is that the principle that work done should be paid for has been upheld; but the key case was dismissed on the grounds that the preparatory time for which pay was sought was not sufficiently substantial to establish a claim, although the master's finding showed it averaged about 15 minutes.

Therefore, the fact is that the total bill for back pay probably would not exceed $1,000,000,000.

Most fair-minded Americans accept the principle of pay for work performed.

INDUSTRY IN NO DANGER OF INSOLVENCY

But if the courts did uphold all the pending cases for back pay for preparatory work, I can find no imminent danger of bankruptcy, insolvency, and industrial chaos in the picture.

We must remember that whatever the liability is, that liability is actually a part of production costs, and as such a charge against total costs before taxes. American corporations have paid taxes upon production costs which did not include portal-to-portal pay. The Federal Treasury has received tax revenues upon profits that have not included portal-to-portal pay.

WILL GET TAX REBATE, TAKE NO LOSS

If the court upholds any given suit and awards judgment, it will then become the legal obligation of the corporation to pay for the preparatory work, in which case the Government will have to refund taxes paid on that portion of the profits which now will be legally returned to the workers involved. The corporations would have their undistributed profits on earned surpluses reduced to the extent of the wage payments. Had the corporations, from 1939 on, paid for preparatory work their earned-surplus positions and the Treasury's tax revenue would have been adjusted accordingly.

Consequently, the fact is that there is really no loss to the corporations and no loss to the Federal Government if the claims are paid.

Moreover, the burden of paying the claims would not fall on the corporations alone. For the war years 85 percent would be borne by the Government, and for 1946, 30 percent by the Government.

CORPORATIONS HAVE FARED WELL

According to the Securities and Exchange Commission, and again these are facts, the net working capital of United States corporations in 1939 was $24,600,000,000. In 1945 it had grown to $52,000,000,000. By the end of the third quarter of 1946, these corporations—which we have been assured are on the verge of financial collapse because of labor demands—had increased their working capital to $55,400,000,000. I should like to point out that that is not only an increase of $30,800,000,000, or 100 percent above the 1939 position, but also approximately equal to one-fifth of our total national debt.

Working capital is nothing more than the difference between total current assets and total current liabilities of corporations.

The assets position of our corporations has been improved mainly through earned surpluses. Most of this earned surplus was, during the war years, put into one of three categories of assets: increased inventories; increased cash balances; increased holding of United States Government securities.

LIQUID ASSETS OF CORPORATIONS UP OVER 600 PERCENT IN 7 YEARS

The cash balance of American corporations increased from $10,900,000,000 in 1939 to $22,300,000,000 in the third quarter of 1946, or more than 100 percent.

Their holdings of United States Government securties increased in the same period from $2,200,000,000 to $16,200,000,000, or over 600 percent.

The claim made by the National Association of Manufacturers that the portal-to-portal pay claims can break American corporations because the claims exceed current profits is a bald misrepresentation of facts. The fact is that it is working capital or net current assets position of the corporations which determines their ability to pay.

INDIVIDUAL CORPORATIONS PROVE TOTALS

I have been talking about total figures for all American corporations, big and little. I will not take up time and space with a long catalog; here are just a few examples: United States Steel has increased its working capital from $432,000,000 to $600,000,0000 in 7 years. Westinghouse has increased its working capital from $102,000,000 to $245,000,000 in that period. General Motors—and remember that I am reducing this to simplest terms, for there are other favorable factors involved—has increased its working capital from $434,000,000 in 1939 to $775,000,000 in 1945.

As to smaller companies, I quote from the Federal Reserve Bulletin of December 1946:

> The improvement in financial position during the past 5 years has been relatively greater in small and middle-size concerns than in larger concerns. This is because of the relatively greater increase in sales, profits, and assets * * *. At the end of 1945 the small and middle-size concerns were probably in a more liquid position than they had ever been in the history of the country.

FARMERS TOO ARE IN CLOVER

Nor are the farmers suffering right now.

I quote now from the January issue of Illinois Business Review, published by the College of Commerce of the University of Illinois, which I just received this morning:

CASH FARM INCOME

> Cash-farm income in Illinois jumped to a record peak of $206,077,000 in October 1946, almost three times the figure for September, up 35.8 percent for the year, and more than five times the average for 1935–39. In the United States as a whole, October income rose 65.4 percent from September and 40.7 percent from October 1945. Illinois cumulated cash-farm income for the first 10 months of 1946, $1,066,716,000, was 13.5 percent greater than for the comparable period of 1945.

Lest it escape you gentlemen, for it did not escape me, note that this sudden increase of 65.4 percent in farm income in October followed the murder of OPA and preceded the November elections.

I wonder if, a year from now, farm profits will still be on the increase as they have been in recent years. Can you Republicans continue to reap the advantage of wise Democratic administration? Will the index of farm prices still be above 250 percent of the base years of 1935–39? Will farm incomes top 500 percent of the base price?

ANTILABOR LEGISLATION DESTROYS PROSPERITY

This kind of antilabor legislation destroys prosperity, because it destroys the purchasing power on which all these high profits, high sales, high business indices of every kind are based.

You will encourage high corporate profits at the expense of workers, so workers buy less, so farmers get less, so farmers buy less, so workers are laid off, so sales drop, so profits begin to drop.

I may at another time insert in the RECORD a table showing how 1946 corporation profits rose over 1945 profits. Right now it is enough to say that for one company it was 760.5 percent; for another 487.6 percent; for a third, 322.9 percent. Fifty big companies increased their profits from 22.7 percent to the top figure I just cited in 1 year.

Estimated profits in 1946, after taxes, are $11,800,000,000, and in 1947 are projected at $16,100,000,000 after taxes.

Our annual national production rate for 1946 is now estimated at $185,000,000,000 gross, four times as great as under President Hoover, while estimates based on Government figures indicate that in 1947 the national product will exceed $200,000,000,000 in value.

Consequently, I find it difficult to become frightened by all the forebodings that have been shown here, by the NAM propaganda, and the cries of disaster. I only hope that by passing this bill and other restrictive and discriminatory bills of like intent you do not bring on the disaster you so fear and retard our progress and destroy our prosperity.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, though I could continue to cite facts and then more facts, I can only repeat that I deplore these alarmist statements and only hope that they do not frighten away our present good fortune.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make a personal explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to my colleagues who are on the Committee on the Judiciary to say that I have the highest regard and respect for their judgment, that I did distribute copies of my amendment to the members of the subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] some days ago, and that all has proceeded with complete cooperation and graciousness. I think there should be no misconception on that score whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAVITS) there were—ayes 53, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEFAUVER: Page 6, line 1, after the word "by", insert "lawful."

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not offered for the purpose of emasculating the bill or of creating any confusion in connection with it. I sincerely believe and feel that this amendment would greatly improve the bill.

Section 3 provides that no action shall be brought for any wages which violate a custom or practice of a particular employer; that is, conditions that grew out of either a custom or practice in the particular industry shall not be considered the subject matter of a suit. The question presented here is whether you want to sanction an illegal custom or whether you do not. All my amendment says is that if that custom is lawful, then no suit may be brought for wages or any claim growing out of that lawful custom or practice. If the custom is unlawful, I cannot believe that the Members of the House want to give sanction to it and to protect that industry in the event it is following an unlawful, illegal custom or practice.

Some may argue that the words "custom or practice" standing alone would mean a lawful custom or practice. If that is true, and if that is your position about the matter, what harm would be done by inserting the word "lawful" to make doubly sure that it is a lawful custom or practice that we refer to and protect?

But I am afraid that the words "custom or practice" in line 1 of page 6 are not confined to lawful customs and practices. In other words, I am afraid this language would enable an industry to start out and have the management declare, "In this industry the custom or practice is to pay one-half of the minimum provided in the Fair Labor Standards Act," or to pay any amount that they may want to establish as their custom, or to pay any amount that would permit that industry to be in violation of the other labor laws that are dealt with in this bill and say, "That is the custom." Then there is nothing anyone can do about it. So let us at least provide that they must begin their industry in compliance with the lawful custom or practice of the particular industry.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Is not the trouble with the gentleman's amendment that under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Mount Clemens case it refused to recognize custom? Therefore, if we say this bill applies only to lawful custom, are we not running rather counter to our efforts to upset that decision?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I do not think so. The only thing I am concerned about is that we do not allow one side, industry, to completely write its own ticket as to the meaning of these laws by saying, "This is the custom and practice in this particular industry." Let us require it to be a lawful custom and practice.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. FOLGER. Going a little further than that, does not this make the custom or practice that is established by any employer regardless of what may appear in the industry generally the law, if this is adopted?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It makes it the law as to that particular plant, whether it is legal or not, and regardless of what the custom is in the industry generally, unless this word "lawful" is written into the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEFAUVER) there were—ayes 48, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLIFIELD: On page 6, line 1, after the word "for", strike out "either by custom or practice of such employer at the plant or other place of employment of such employee or."

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this seeks to do in a simple way what the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] sought to do, which was to put some specific meaning on the phrase "custom or practice." The amendments to accomplish this purpose have failed. There is no doubt in the world that this amendment will fail, too, because the steam roller is working pretty well. I notice only about five or six of the Members on the Republican side voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

If they fail to get a crust of bread from their parents, why should I expect anything but a stone? But there is a great deal of concern on the part of some of us as to the bringing in of this new phrase, "custom or practice." It is indefinite and may be used by chiseling employers to substantiate wage rates in their industry which will in effect not only hurt the employees but may hurt other employers. The bill proposes that the question whether certain activities are or are not to be compensated for under the law is to be determined by the custom or practice of an employer. It does not specify whether that custom or practice is in one of the low-wage States or one of the high-wage States or in an adjoining town or across the street or any other specific limitation on the meaning of "custom or practice."

I submit to you that if those words which I have asked to be eliminated are eliminated, then the vagueness is eliminated and the prohibition against an action resolves itself to the terms of an agreement, whether it be collective bargaining or individual agreement between employer and employee. Certainly that is what we want to get at. If an employer and an employee have certain terms in their agreement, certainly the employee should not be allowed to sue the employer for additional moneys which are not included in that agreement. That is just a matter of common justice. That is what the committee hopes to attain in this act which they have presented in good faith, and it is what I hope to attain.

I ask that consideration be given to take out this indefinite wording, this phrase, "custom or practice," and permit the filing or not filing of a suit to depend upon an agreement between the employee and employer, whether it be a written or verbal agreement. It could still be substantiated in court and would prohibit the employee from suing and collecting any damages for something that was not in the verbal or written agreement.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FOLGER. Therefore, it is not proposed by your amendment, nor was it proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, to avoid an agreement?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Absolutely not. I think, as an employer myself, that the employer and employee should have an agreement, preferably in writing, and if not in writing, at least verbal.

Mr. FOLGER. Is it not true when you adopt this language "by custom or practice of such employer" you take that category of people entirely out of the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think you do. I think it would supersede it to that extent and would modify it to the extent at least of giving a chiseling employer grounds for substantiating a chiseling practice against employees and against other employers.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBSION. Does the gentleman contend that the employee and employer could enter into any agreement which would take away the protection of the minimum wage or time and a half?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Certainly, and if that is not the case, then this wording is superfluous and should be removed.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. The proposition you are advancing is disadvantageous to the worker.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do not think so.

Mr. JENNINGS. You say in effect by your amendment that if a worker is performing work which according to custom or usage existing between him and the employer entitles him to be paid he cannot have that pay.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do not think so. The gentleman is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLIFIELD) there were—ayes 36, noes 113.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. No court of the United States, and no other court, deriving jurisdiction under or pursuant to a law of the United States, over actions, causes of action, or proceedings defined in this act, shall have jurisdiction to entertain, proceed with, impose liability in, or enter judgment upon any such action except in accord with the conditions, limitations, and policies herein prescribed, whether or not such action was commenced prior to the effective date of this act, except actions upon which final judgment was entered prior to such effective date and from which no appeal had been or could be taken.

SEC. 5. This act shall apply to all actions, causes of action, or proceedings arising under or pursuant to the act of June 30, 1936, as amended (49 Stat. 2037; 41 U. S. C., secs. 35–45); the act of June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1069; 29 U. S. C., secs. 201–219); and the act of August 30, 1935, as amended (49 Stat. 1011; 40 U. S. S., secs. 276a–276c). Any parts of said acts inconsistent with any provision of this act are to such extent hereby repealed.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PRICE of Illinois: On page 6, after line 24, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 6. Nothing contained herein shall permit the lowering of any existing wage or hour standards now contained in any laws of the United States mentioned in section 5 hereof."

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this section as an amendment to this measure in order to clarify its effect on existing laws that have become cornerstones in our basic industrial economy.

I am certain that anyone who will approach this matter in a fair-minded way will agree that it is not the intent of the authors of the bill to disturb existing wage and hours structures provided for in other laws. In the event that the Davis-Bacon Act, the Walsh-Healey Act or the minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act were disturbed it would be a death blow to thousands of unorganized American workers who are now working under substandard conditions.

The leaders of both major parties have committed themselves to increases in the minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I feel certain that had this bill been considered by the Committee on Education and Labor of the House, who are experts in legislative matters affecting labor relations, provision would have been made to prohibit the lowering of any existing wage or hour standards as mentioned above.

I sincerely hope that the House will adopt this section as an amendment in order to guard against a recession in the progress of America's underprivileged workmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman offers this amendment in the same spirit that actuated the committee. That is, that nothing will be done here which will damage the great essential features of the wage-and-hour law. Nevertheless, I think the adoption of this amendment might bring considerable danger to this bill. I will read the amendment:

Nothing contained herein shall permit the lowering of any existing wage or hour standards now contained in any laws of the United States mentioned in Section 5 hereof.

That means any law of the United States as presently construed by the highest court of the land. The very thing we are trying to do here is to disagree with the construction of the wage-hour law put on it by the Supreme Court. For example, the Supreme Court has construed the workweek provision to include as compensable time, time which was agreed should not be compensable. That is the law now, that is the standard now of the wage-hour law as interpreted by the Supreme Court. It is now interpreted to include certain travel time, certain preliminary activities which it had been agreed by employers and employees either by agreement or through customs and practices were not compensable. Now we are taking that out, and I suppose in that particular we are reducing the standard of the wage-hour law as interpreted by the court.

I suggest that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. In other words, this amendment is an effort to suspend and take away from the Congress the right to express its legislative will on this proposition.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do not know whether I heard the gentleman aright or not, but did the gentleman make the statement or admit the fact that this bill would reduce the wage standards under the present Fair Labor Standards Act?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I am sure the gentleman heard me; I am sure the gentleman understands me.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Will the gentleman please explain what he said to me?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I will explain it again. We have been very careful to put nothing in this law which would take away the essential features of the wage-hour law. The very thing which has caused the trouble is that the Supreme Court has given it a construction which will result in raising, if you want to say that, the wage standards of certain workers of this country by $6,000,000,000 at the expense of everybody else. That is just exactly what we are trying here to prevent.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Does not the gentleman believe that this bill will go far beyond that?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. No, no; certainly not. The bill is designed to overcome the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman does not believe that this is only a bill to prevent portal-to-portal pay suits, does he? He means, does he, that it does not go beyond that factor?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. All I am saying is this: I am afraid this amendment may introduce a very disastrous factor into the bill. It may upset the entire bill. Possibly I am not making myself clear, but this might nullify the very thing we are trying to do in this bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman's amendment, if adopted, might be so construed as to reinstate portal-to-portal pay suits.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Absolutely.

Mr. HALLECK. And that is the very thing we are trying to stop.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is exactly what I am getting at; in other words, the law will be as construed by the last decision of the Supreme Court, exactly what we are trying to get away from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. If any provision or portion of any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this act and the application of such provision or portion thereof to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 117, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CELLER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CELLER moves to recommit H. R. 2157 to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 3, line 17, strike out "1 year" and insert "2 years."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—ayes 42, noes 219.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 345, nays 56, not voting 31, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Davis of Georgia for, with Mr. Feighan against.

Mr. Redden for, with Mr. Delaney against.

Mr. Woodruff for, with Mr. Dawson of Illinois against.

General pairs:

Mr. Macy with Mr. Bonner.

Mr. Jones of Washington with Mr. Gathings.

Mr. Hagen with Mr. Heffernan.

Mr. Hugh D. Scott, Jr., with Mr. Smathers.

Mr. Fuller with Mr. Engle of California.

Mr. Stockman with Mr. Boggs of Louisiana.

Mr. Poulson with Mr. Morrison.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] paired as voting "aye"?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not paired.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on H. R. 2157 just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a report of Mr. Hoover to the President of the United States on the food situation in Germany.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article that appeared on February 25 in Pathfinder.

M . SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked and obtained unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article from Plain Talk. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $230.75, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in reference to the death of two outstanding Ohioans.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TIBBOTT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech made by the Honorable RICHARD M. SIMPSON, of Pennsylvania, delivered at Philadelphia.

Mr. KEARNS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BYRNE of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of Friday, February 28, 1947, entitled "Mr. Truman Grows."

Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from his home town newspaper.

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a communication from the American Lithuanian Council of Lake County, Ind.

Mr. KELLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BLATNIK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 2157.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts from two editorials.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

RECORDING OF VOTE

Mr. BANTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be recorded as voting "yea" on the last roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to inform the gentleman that he cannot be recorded in that way. Was the gentleman here and did he answer to his name when called?

Mr. BANTA. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent to have the roll call corrected.

Mr. BANTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the last roll call be corrected to show me as voting "yea."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WORLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committees on Armed Services and Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, establishing the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, I transmit herewith the Thirty-second Annual Report of the Committee covering the fiscal year 1946, and containing a review of the unreported war years.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1947.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE COMING MOSCOW CONFERENCE—POLAND'S WESTERN BOUNDARY IS ON THE ODER AND NEISSE RIVERS

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have before me the results of a Gallup poll taken from a clipping in the Washington Post dated February 7. The poll indicates that the overwhelming sentiment among the peoples of five allied nations—the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Holland, and France—is that the warlike ideals of Germany have not been rooted out, and that she will one day become an aggressor nation again.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the results of this poll deserve careful consideration by my fellow colleagues, by our foreign policy makers, and particularly by Secretary Marshall. For here we have, less than 2 weeks away from the Moscow Conference, when the great powers will tackle the core of the peace problem—Germany—an expression on the part of the peace-loving peoples of five allied nations that they are fearful that we are rebuilding Germany's war machine so that some day it will be able to threaten world peace again.

As March 10, the date of the opening of the Peace Conference, approaches, we hear expressions of sympathy for Germany with increasing frequency. More and more we are told that the rapid reconstruction of Germany, before it is denazified and democraticized, is essential to world peace. This is simultaneously accompanied with a "get tough with our allies" attitude. In some circles our wartime reliance upon our allies to help us defeat Germany has now been replaced by a reliance upon Germany to assure peace.

This attitude has alarmed the constituents of my district, as well as myself and many of my friends. I come from Detroit, Mich. I come from a district largely populated by Americans of Polish descent—a district which took no second place in its contributions toward victory. From this district flowed a steady stream of arms and munitions which hastened the end of the war. All the various phases of activities to promote the war effort found enthusiastic support in my district. To many of the people there the complete destruction of the German war machine would provide a twofold satisfaction, for they knew what it would mean to their kinfolk in Poland.

They are disturbed by the growing feeling of compassion for those responsible for World War II, which is combined with a more calloused and harsh approach to our ally, Poland. When they hear new proposals which would reward Germany at the expense of its victims, they feel that it is time to protest.

They are aware of the great sacrifices of Poland and cannot grasp why an ally that was never found wanting by us in 6 years that it fought overwhelming odds should today find its considerations secondary to those of Germany in the thinking of certain circles in this country and abroad. Perhaps this would be a good place to refresh our memories and impress us of our moral obligations to a heroic people by presenting some statistics. Six million one hundred and four thousand nine hundred and ninety Poles were tortured, burned alive, and murdered by the Nazi butchers. This includes millions of women and children. Nearly a million civilians have suffered heavy injuries of the body and mind. This was the human cost to Poland of German aggression.

Since, in our approach toward the peace treaty with Germany, the question of the western frontiers of Poland plays such an important role, I think it is necessary for a clarification of American policy to eliminate some of the confusion and distortion which has been injected into the case. It is important to the United States that this problem be settled justly and correctly, for it will be one of the pillars of the future peace structure. Failure to do so will endanger world peace and possibly involve our country in another world war.

A brief examination of the developments affecting the question of the Polish frontier in the west up to the present moment might contribute to a better understanding of the problem.

It was at the Crimean Conference in February of 1945 that the Big Three agreed that the eastern border of Poland should follow the Curzon line with a few digressions in favor of Poland and in return for which the three heads of government recognized "that Poland must receive substantial accessions of territory in the north and west."

Poland agreed to accept this decision and proceeded to make the painful readjustments which such a revision of its eastern borders entailed, accepting in good faith the pledge made by all three governments that she would be compensated in the north and west by "substantial accessions of territory."

The Big Three further agreed that:

> The opinion of the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity should be sought in due course on the extent of these accessions and that the final delimitation of the western frontier of Poland should thereafter await the peace conference.

At Potsdam on August 2, 1945, both pledges were realized. After consultation with representatives of Poland, the Big Three agreed to grant "substantial accessions of territory" to that country. The Potsdam accord declared that:

> The three heads of government agree that, pending the final determination of Poland's western frontier, the former German territories east of the line running from the Baltic Sea immediately west of Swinemunde, and thence along the Oder River to the confluence of the western Neisse River and along the western Neisse to the Czechoslovak frontier, including that portion of East Prussia not placed under the administration of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in accordance with the understanding reached at this conference and including the former Free City of Danzig, shall be under the administration of the Polish State and for such purposes should not be considered as part of the Soviet zone of occupation.

The language is clear and the implication is obvious. There is not the slightest suggestion that the frontier defined was simply a demarcation line. This decision was hailed joyously by the Polish people, who now, with the return of their former areas, could look to a happier future.

It is obvious that the Potsdam Conference was not the peace conference and that any steps undertaken there would have to await formal ratification at the peace conference when it would be held. Here only the principles and bases for the peace conference were under preparation, and one of the most important, dealt with the question of Poland and it cannot be shrugged off through any verbal gymnastics or ingenious interpretations.

Following the Potsdam Conference, specific agreements were reached within the Inter-Allied Commission on the evacuation of Germans from the areas granted Poland, which further implemented Potsdam and which permit of no misinterpretation as to the proposed permanency of that frontier.

The attack upon the Potsdam decisions and specifically in reference to Poland was launched by Winston Churchill at Fulton, Mo., where he wept bitter tears over the sad fate of those who only recently were dropping bombs on the defenseless women and children in London, Paris, Prague, Warsaw, and scores of other heavily populated areas. This stanch defender of the British Empire, which seethes with unrest and strife, took his place in the vanguard of those who defend the Germans when he charged that the Polish Government "has been encouraged to make enormous and wrongful inroads upon Germany, and mass expulsions of millions of Germans on a scale grievous and undreamed of are now taking place."

But the American people are alarmed most not by what Churchill, who was decisively repudiated by the English people, said, but by the statement made by former Secretary of State James H. Byrnes at Stuttgart. Byrnes gave hope to the unrepentant Germans when he declared on September 6, 1946, that:

> The United States will support the revision of these (western and northern) frontiers in Poland's favor. However, the extent of the area to be ceded to Poland must be determined when the final settlement is agreed upon.

I was disturbed by the implications in the Stuttgart speech, as were many of my constituents who had looked to the United States to take the leadership in living up to the spirit and intent of the Big Three commitments to Poland made at Crimea and Potsdam. The Big Three had committed itself to grant Poland substantial accessions of territory, and at Potsdam compensated Poland with 39,000 square miles of territory for its loss of 69,000 square miles in the east. To lessen the amount of territory granted as suggested in the Stuttgart speech would be to take it out of the realm of substantial compensation.

Understandably, the Poles and all of the Slavs are more than perturbed by these developments. The hobnailed boot of the Nazi aggressor is still a very fresh memory in every Slav home in Europe. Recollections of the unexampled bestiality of the Germans will live for generations and every move that would strengthen Germany is regarded with great doubt and suspicion. When one keeps this in mind, one cannot help but be surprised at the remarkable restraint of their criticism of the suggestion that there is a possibility that the Germans will again be provided with a dagger aimed at the heart of the Slav nations in the form of areas rightfully Poland's. Two world wars were largely fought on Slav soil—they do not want a third to devastate it again.

Since the Stuttgart speech there have been many inspired stories in the press quoting responsible sources calling for the return of Pomerania and Brandenburg to Germany. Some Congressmen, and even congressional committees, have joined the press and radio in the hue and cry to defend German interests attempting to justify their position in various ways, with which I will deal later.

It is interesting to note here that those who cried most loudly against the injustice done Poland at Crimea when the Curzon line was accepted as Poland's eastern border are among the most vehement and determined to see that the Potsdam accord which compensated Poland for its loss of territory in the east be violated grossly. It might also be in order to make the observation that those who shed themselves of isolationism rather belatedly are numbered among the most ardent defenders of the "poor Germans." They are, at least, consistent.

A profoundly disturbing document was released recently which attempts to make a case for the need to rebuild Germany while simultaneously calling for cutting off all forms of assistance to our allies in Europe. It was the House joint committee report released December 30, 1946, by my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi, Representative COLMER. Its solicitude and good will toward the Germans, whose crimes against humanity have been unequaled, is alarming.

This report takes us, the Congress, to task for having made "inadequate provisions for feeding both Germany and Austria." At the same time it calls for the liquidation of UNRRA which was, and continues to be, so important to the rehabilitation of the victims of Nazi aggression and degradation.

> It does not require prophetic power to show that a continuation of this plight for Germany—

Declares the report—

> means slow starvation and disease on a widespread basis to say nothing of the effect upon the working ability and political unrest of the population.

It then proposes that:

An immediate increase in the funds available to the Army for relief to bring the ration up to a real subsistence level is essential and should be regarded as the most serious emergency action immediately confronting American foreign policy.

There are, at the moment, 3,500,000 children in Poland who need additional nourishment. Two million five hundred thousand children require medical care. There are 1,000,000 orphans in desperate need of assistance in a country which fought the full fury of the Nazi Wehrmacht for several years before we entered the fray against Germany, and the Colmer report runs history upside down and declares that the "most serious emergency action confronting American foreign policy" is to feed the Germans.

A stranger unacquainted with the events of the last decade could only conclude that Germany had been our ally in the last World War, and that Poland, France, Czechoslovakia, and our other European allies were our enemies. He could only conclude that Germany must be rewarded for its role, and the other nations punished.

But the report raises an even more fundamental problem: Are we to rebuild Germany first or are we to rebuild those nations destroyed by Germany? Are we to again establish Germany as the dominant European power, or are we to guarantee the peace of Europe by rebuilding its neighbors? The problem comes down to that. The American people, I am convinced, do not want a Germany that will be a threat to world peace again.

The Colmer report adopts the position that a loan should be granted Germany and that no loan should be granted to the greatest victim of German brutality, Poland. It states:

In the final report of the committee, therefore, a special emphasis has been put upon the key problems which revolve around the position of Germany and Austria in the European economy because of their crucial import to the recovery of western Europe.

This approach is so reminiscent of the post World War I period which saw Germany rebuilt, granted loans and concessions, wooed by world powers and placed in the position where it challenged the world to combat and left over 30,000,000 dead on fields of battle.

I deal at length with this report because I am firmly convinced that this approach can only do irreparable harm to the cause of world peace and security. I am of the opinion that no Germany, but the victims of German aggression should be reconstructed. It is my considered opinion that the reconstruction of Poland and the development of its recovered territories has greater importance for Europe and world peace than the resurrection of Germany. I cannot forget that we who hailed Poland as the inspiration of the world during the war have a deep responsibility toward her. It is no accident that the Colmer report derived satisfaction from the Byrnes Stuttgart speech which it says "reminded the world that the western boundaries are not yet drawn," while at the same time it calls for a return of railroad cars from Poland to Germany, a step which would further cripple Poland's economy which relies so much upon its coal production.

Further, in the last few weeks we have been showered with reasons which purport to prove why Pomerania and Brandenburg should be returned to Germany. All sorts of spurious arguments have been advanced which will not hold water upon closer examination in an effort to camouflage the real reasons behind the desire to return these age-old Polish areas to Germany.

An Associated Press dispatch dated December 29, 1946, which was prominently displayed on the front pages of the American press declared that:

The American position will be that Germany cannot be self-sustaining with the loss of 25 percent of her best agricultural land and that this loss will only provide for a new war, these sources (that is responsible sources in Berlin) said.

It referred to Pomerania and Brandenburg.

There is a remarkable coincidence between this line and that followed by the German delegation at the Versailles Peace Conference. There the Germans talked about these areas being economically indispensable to Germany, but conveniently forgot to mention that in comparison with the rest of Germany they were not economically developed.

What are the facts? These areas are no more indispensable to Germany after this war than they were after the first. I want to quote Dr. Wilhelm Volz, professor at the Leipzig University, who in one of his most important works issued in 1930, wrote that:

For the German Reich the east plays no role whatsoever as a supplier of wheat and a quite insignificant role as a supplier of rye. The Reich has no need whatever of the east for its supply of potatoes.

Dr. Volz points out that the Polish recovered territories supplied the Reich with only 0.77 percent of wheat, 4.53 percent of rye, 2.27 percent of potatoes, 5.68 percent of pigs, and with 2.75 percent of cattle.

And in a letter to the Manchester Guardian on November 15, 1946, Prof. W. J. Rose, of the London University, said that on the basis of prewar German statistics, the territories lost to Germany supplied the rest of the Reich with 0.86 percent of the total wheat, 5.1 percent of rye, and 2.7 percent of potatoes. These figures include areas now ceded to Russia.

The same conclusions were reached by many other German scholars who cannot be considered prejudiced toward Germany.

Further, there has been a constant migration of Germans from these areas over the recent years, leaving them so depopulated of Germans that they depended upon Polish migratory farm workers for harvesting the fields. Pomerania and Brandenburg by no stretch of the imagination can be termed a granary of a peacetime Germany.

But the German delegation at Versailles fought for the retention of these lands for a much more important reason. They are a first-rate military base for operations in the east, and World War II confirmed that indisputably. We cannot shut out eyes to this danger. We cannot be lulled to sleep by that familiar refrain harking back to the period before World War II, that Germany could never again wage war.

On the contrary, it can be proven that these territories never were indispensable to Germany and constitute a hinterland for Poland now needed as never before in its history.

German written history is replete with reference to Pomerania, Brandenburg, and Silesia as colonies. The many years of Germanization and colonization never succeeded. The Prussian east as it was known, had the lowest density of population as a result of the exodus of German colonizers in the last century. It was impossible to sow the fields and reap the harvests without Polish labor. The huge estates of the Junkers would have been forced to lie fallow if Poles were not seasonally employed. In marked contrast, there was a dense population across the border in Poland with sufficient surplus labor to migrate seasonally to sow and reap the German harvest. Minus the lands of the east, Poland today more desperately than ever, requires its lands in the west.

A further point emphasizing the fact that these lands were considered as a colony was the presence of only 1,500,000 Germans in all of these territories as of July 1945. The Germans had fled into their native land.

Where, then, is the argument advanced by some German apologists today that Poland cannot exploit the land and that the economy of Europe requires that they be returned to Germany? They have simply turned the facts topsy-turvy. The only guaranty that these lands will be fully exploited to balance the food supply of all of Europe is their possession by Poland from whom they had been wrested by conquest.

Now, for the first time in its history, the Polish Nation has an opportunity to develop a healthy, industrial economy. The return of Stettin, Pomerania, and the control of the Oder River insures rapid expansion of the Silesian industries and the possibility of unlimited foreign trade. Pomerania and Brandenburg are rich in agricultural potentials. In the recovered territories are situated 25 percent of Poland's textile industries, 30 percent of her metal production, and 50 percent of her freight-car and trolley manufacturing plants, according to a recent dispatch from Marguerite Higgins in the New York Herald Tribune, dated February 19. With the acquisition of these areas, the mining and industrial production, which amounted to 215 zlotys per head before the war, will show an increase to 324—or 96 percent. The Polish cotton industry will increase production by 30 percent; wool industry by 60 percent; linen industry by 25 percent; sugar industry, 60 percent; cement industry by 30 percent; steel by 100 percent.

But, without the recovered territories, Poland's 3-year plan for economic reconstruction will be severely wrecked. The five or six million Poles who will have resettled in these areas would have to live in a much smaller area. It would mean overpopulation, unemployment, and low consumption, which not only would cripple Poland's economic recovery and lower the standards of its people considerably, but would have drastic effects on world trade. For its reconstruction Poland desperately needs heavy machinery. America has this needed commodity. In the interests of American businessmen, Poland should retain these territories. In the hands of the Germans these territories would once again provide the base for international cartels, which benefit, not the independent businessman in America, but the cartelist and monopolist.

The economic, political, and social achievements that have been realized in these territories since Potsdam solidifies Poland's claim to these lands. Devastated areas have been rebuilt. Transportation and communication lines have been repaired. Over 4,000,000 Poles have been resettled, while only approximately 500,000 Germans remain. Factories and industries are flourishing.

Here are some figures: As of August 1946, 825 factories were operating, employing 226,305 workers, or 13 percent of the total for all Poland; 10,000,000 tons of coal were produced last year; the lower Silesian mines produced 60 percent more coke than the Germans did in 1939; despite the complete destruction of nearly all factories and the removal of all machinery the metal industry in the recovered territories has been built, and is now producing 19 percent of the overall Polish production; the ports of Stettin, Danzig, and Gdynia, which were mined and blocked by sunken ships when the Poles received them, are back in operation. Prussian estates have been and still are being broken up and parceled among the peasants.

In the field of cultural advancement, much progress has been made also; trade-union membership in lower Silesia exceeds 12,000; there are 4,000 schools of all types, three polytechnics, one university, and one academy of medicine; there are about 1,000 kindergartens and 130 homes for children; there are 31 newspapers and magazines, and 800 libraries; about 6,000 workers have been trained in special courses; over 80 industrial schools have been organized, training 9,000 pupils.

In short, the foundations for a fuller and better life have been laid. If these territories are taken away from Poland, all the good that has been accomplished will be undone. It would mean misery, privation, and despair for the millions of Poles who are now permanently resettled there.

What are the guardians of German interests doing when they ask that these territories revert to the Germans?

When at Potsdam, the accord of the Big Three was reached and the western territories reverted to Poland's possession, the Polish Nation embarked on one of the greatest tasks in European history—the resettlement and reconstruction of a war-devastated area which involved the movement of millions of people. The enormity of the problem is difficult to grasp. Since then, the bulk of the Germans have been evacuated and over 4,000,000 Poles resettled despite the lack of transport, food supplies, housing, medical supplies, and services. All public bodies had to be reconstituted and a million-and-one complicated situations resolved at a tremendous cost of both money and expenditure of human energy. Order has replaced chaos. Fallow fields have been resown. Devastation repaired. Transport and communications lines reestablished. The preconditions for an expanding and richer life were being fulfilled.

And with this as a background, just to pose the question of the return of these areas to Germany seems like a crime against the Polish people. In fact, it is rewarding the aggressor at the expense of the victim. Not only was Poland devastated by the Germans but she now also would have to reconstruct territories deserted by the Germans for the Germans. That is exactly what it means to raise any doubt about the permanency of Poland's western frontier.

From whatever angle you examine the question of Poland's recovered territories, you cannot help but be convinced of the justice of the decision reached at Potsdam.

Militarily it means that Germany will be deprived of a huge arsenal of war in Silesia. The Junkers, arch proponents of militarism and the "Drang Nach Osten" policy, will be rooted out from their huge estates in Pomerania and Brandenburg. Germany will be deprived of a place d'armes for future aggression. Poland will be provided a defensible frontier based on the Baltic, the Oder, and the Neisse Rivers—a frontier which now will have decreased almost fivefold from 1,180 miles to approximately 250. This is a practical program for the disarmament of Germany.

Historically it will mean the righting of a grievous wrong done Poland. The area between the Oder and the Vistula Rivers was the cradle of the Polish Nation. Poland was deprived of these lands through the aggression of Teutonic hordes. Until the German invasions Silesia was uninterruptedly Polish and from there came several of her kings. Despite many years of the most unmerciful Germanization, the Germans did not succeed in accomplishing their task. From 1919 to 1921 there were three successive uprisings of Poles in this area, only subdued by the greatest brutality. Stettin was Poland's outpost on the Baltic which was seized by conquest together with Pomerania and Brandenburg. These areas are studded with ruins of Polish castles and churches. Historical archives are replete with evidence of the Polish character of these lands. Archeological excavations further confirm Poland's just claims to this area. The cultural ties of this area were never severed with Poland.

Economically, these lands were always a hinterland of Poland. The economic interdependence of Poland and Silesia was freely admitted by the Germans. Except in time of war, Silesia had to rely upon Poland to keep its industries going. Its fields in Pomerania and Brandenburg could not produce without Polish labor. The return of Silesia provides Poland with an industrial base which prewar Poland lacked and as a result fell before the Nazi onslaught. By the return of Stettin and Pomerania, Poland has been provided with broad access to the sea routes of the world, and, with the possibility of developing its foreign trade to record proportions. Its control of the Oder River assures the rapid expansion of Silesia which is indispensable for the task of reconstructing war-devastated Poland. For the first time in its history Poland will have the opportunity to develop a healthy economy which will be further assurance of a peaceful world. If the pledges we made to Poland during the war that we would help in her reconstruction are to be kept, we cannot retreat from our position adopted at Potsdam.

Morally, by supporting Poland's claim to these areas, we recognize the tremendous sacrifices made by the Polish people, both in human lives as well as in material wealth, in the common cause of victory over the Germans. Polish arms played an important role in recovering these areas. Poland won back these lands not in a war of conquest and aggression, but in a just war against a nation which was out to rule the world. Furthermore, this territorial readjustment is not at the expense of Germany. Poland is being rewarded with not one inch of German lands. The policy is one of restoring to the Polish people lands that had been previously stolen from them by German military power.

For the past 1,000 years Germany has followed a policy of brutal military aggrandizement against all of its neighbors and particularly against the Polish nation and the Polish people. The territory east of the Oder and the Neisse Rivers is ancient Polish land which was taken away from them by German military power. It is time to declare an end forever to the German policy of Drang Nach Osten.

The Potsdam agreement has created the basis for an ethnographically homogeneous Poland, uniting all of the Poles within areas clearly Polish. They have also created the conditions for Poland's most rapid recovery and development. They have given Poland safeguards against future German aggressions. Had the Poland of 1939 been a homogeneous nation with a strong economy and based on strategic frontiers rightly hers, then it should be obvious to us that Germany would have found itself confronted by a foe able to withstand its onslaughts. The Potsdam agreement eliminated sore spots and trouble areas which remained after Versailles because of the shortsightedness of the peacemakers. To revise the Polish western frontier is to invite trouble and conflict. Even to raise the question is to create doubt and distrust among the Allies to the benefit of Germany.

Poland was the battleground of two World Wars. Poland was repeatedly the victim of aggression throughout history. One of the deepest desires that the Polish people possess is the desire for peace—lasting peace. On that score the Poles and the Americans think in similar terms. To hear arguments which, in effect, imply that Poland is seeking a peace settlement which would not assure her of peace is simply so much balderdash.

The traditional friendship between Poland and our country goes back to the day of our Revolutionary War of Independence, in which Kosciuszko and Pulaski and their compatriots distinguished themselves. It is natural, therefore, that the Poles look to the United States for support of their sacred cause, a cause which will promote peace.

The Atlantic Charter, signed by our late great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, declared that—

After the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny they—hope to see established a peace which will afford all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries and which will afford all nations assurance that all the men in all lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want.

The signers—

We recognized that principle at Potsdam. All that remains is that it be formally accepted at the Peace Conference which will open at Moscow on March 10. I think we would make a great contribution to the peace negotiations and eliminate a serious source of friction and delay if we were to announce unequivocally that we will live up to our commitment at Potsdam by supporting Poland's just claims to Silesia, Pomerania, and Brandenburg. This would be a serious blow to all those who are already conniving and plotting for another war. It would deprive them of the opportunity of fishing in troubled waters and trying to establish blocs and unholy alliances.

The Prussians, the Junkers are now where they belong—in Germany, on the other side of the Oder and Neisse Rivers. It took a long time to drive the Nazi-Prussian barbarians off of Polish soil. They should be kept out forever from now on.

Mr. PEDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADOWSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. PEDEN. I have listened with great interest to the gentleman's talk on Poland which, in my opinion, during the past few years constitutes the greatest crime on the pages of American history. However, the reasons that are given are ones we should consider, but I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand from what he has stated that he requests aid to Poland now, which is needed. Does the gentleman agree that Poland is now a free country to which aid can be given by this country?

Mr. SADOWSKI. It is a question of aiding the Polish people. The Government of Poland may not satisfy me, it may not satisfy the gentleman—that does not enter into the question. The question of aiding the Polish people is something entirely different from aiding the government. The people must be helped. No people on the face of the earth have suffered as much as the Polish people have for the last 6 years. No people have been so thoroughly despoiled. No nation has been so thoroughly ruined as has Poland. We are not going to let the Polish people continue to suffer merely because the gentleman and others do not happen to like the government that Poland has at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

HOUSING FOR VETERANS (H. DOC. NO. 151)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

A significant contribution to the amount of rental housing so direly needed by veterans and their families at rentals they can afford has been made during the past year by the temporary reuse program under title V of the Lanham Act.

Under this program, Army barracks and other military or civilion wartime structures are converted into temporary dwellings. Many of these are reused on their sites; others are moved and set up on the campuses of universities for the use of student veterans. Still others have been placed on new sites in cities where the housing shortage is desperate.

These educational institutions, municipalities, and other public bodies have used their own funds tc provide sites for these temporary reuse homes. In many cases, also, they have provided the necessary utilities. The Federal Government, through the Congress, made two appropriations, totaling $445,627,000, to finance its part of this program.

Originally, it was planned to convert war structures into 200,000 temporary units under this program. This would, of course, have provided accommodations for many more than 200,000 persons. Rising costs of labor and building materials, as well as rising costs caused by the increased time required for completion due to shortages, have made it necessary for the Government several times during the past year to cut back the temporary reuse program.

Prior to February 1, 1947, allocations had been made for 158,834 units, but the rising costs of building and the scarcity of materials made it necessary recently to suspend 8,357 of these. With cutbacks which had been ordered earlier, it now appears that it will be possible, out of the Federal appropriations, to provide for only about 150,000 units, or approximately 25 percent fewer than was planned. Of these 95,451 units have been completed and around 55,000 including suspended units are under construction.

No more allocations out of the funds available under the Lanham Act can be made. Prior to the time cut-backs and suspensions were ordered, as a result of the approaching exhaustion of funds, however, many local groups such as city governments and educational institutions, already had obligated or spent considerable funds of their own, as required under the Lanham Act. This was done to acquire sites, provide utilities or community facilities to accommodate the housing which they confidently expected would be set up. In some instances they also spent funds on a reimbursable basis, to provide utilities and perform other necessary work in connection with these houses. When it became obvious that some temporary reuse units could not be completed at Federal expense, many local bodies set aside funds of their own in order to bring these units to completion.

The result is that in order for the Federal Government to fulfill its contractual obligations a further appropriation by the Congress of $50,000,000 is necessary.

These obligations fall into four categories:

1. Completion of all units now under contract, including approximately 8,357 units suspended since December 14, 1946.

2. Completion of approximately 4,869 units which were canceled in previous cut-backs.

3. Reimbursement of public bodies for expenditures of their own funds for the completion of approximately 400 units which otherwise would have been canceled.

4. Reimbursement of public bodies for the cost of utility and other on-site work performed by them in connection with veterans' temporary housing on a reimbursable basis.

The Federal Government must carry out contractual obligations accepted in good faith by educational institutions, municipalities and other local bodies.

It is recommended, therefore, that the authorization contained in section 502 (d) of the Lanham Act be increased by $50,000,000 and that the funds subsequently appropriated under the increased authorization be available to meet the four obligations specified above.

Over and above these contractual obligations, we have obvious responsibilities to those who served their country in the armed forces. Under our program about half of the temporary reuse housing is made available to colleges and other institutions of learning to house veterans while they are studying under the terms of the GI bill of rights. The other housing is set up in crowded cities, where otherwise many of our returned servicemen would be unable to find accommodations. Rentals of these temporary structures average $30 per family unit. I am sure I do not need to stress the urgency of the completion of this program to alleviate the stringent housing shortage faced by so many of our veterans.

I urge the Congress to make a further appropriation of $50,000,000 in order that the Government may meet its contractual obligations referred to and in order that this phase of our continuing program of aid to veterans may be carried out.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1947.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PRICE of Illinois, for 3 days, March 3 to 5, inclusive, on account of death in family.

154. Also, petition of the Racine Trades and Labor Council, representing A. F. of L. labor unions in Racine, Wis., disapproving any further reduction in tariffs; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 19, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of Heaven, who hath so lavishly blessed this our beloved land, keep us humble. Forgive our boasting and our pride, and help us to share what Thou hast given. Impress us with a sense of responsibility, and remind us, lest we become filled with conceit, that one day a reckoning will be required of us.

Sanctify our love of country, that our boasting may be turned into humility and our pride into a ministry to all men everywhere. Make America Thy servant, Thy chosen channel of blessing to all lands, lest we be cast out, and our place be given to another. Make this God's own country by making us willing to live like God's people.

We ask these things in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 28, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILL

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on February 28, 1947, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 568) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2157) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], as amended, proposing the addition of certain words at the end of the concurrent resolution.

When the Senate adjourned on Friday last, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had the floor, and he is now recognized.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Overton
Bricker	Holland	Pepper
Brooks	Ives	Reed
Buck	Jenner	Revercomb
Bushfield	Johnson, Colo.	Robertson, Va.
Butler	Johnston, S. C.	Russell
Byrd	Kem	Saltonstall
Cain	Kilgore	Smith
Capehart	Knowland	Sparkman
Capper	Langer	Stewart
Chavez	Lodge	Taft
Connally	Lucas	Taylor
Cooper	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Cordon	McCarthy	Thye
Donnell	McClellan	Tobey

Ellender	McKellar	Vandenberg
Ferguson	McMahon	Watkins
Flanders	Malone	Wherry
Fulbright	Martin	White
George	Maybank	Wiley
Green	Millikin	Williams
Gurney	Moore	Wilson
Hatch	Morse	Young

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a man said to me the other day, "Only America can prevent the end of the world." It is not hard to see what he meant. When we consider the prevailing misery and the economic chaos; when we hear the suggestion of new and more horrible wars; when we see old nations going under and new ones rising; when we note the saturation of populations coupled with the exhaustion of natural resources, it is no wonder that this friend of mine came to the conclusion that today the only force left in the world which is able to counteract these deadly trends was the United States, acting through its Government.

Maybe there was a time, when we were proceeding on the theory of the less government the better, when we could meet with an amused smile the news of inefficiency and cumbersomeness in our Federal Government. But that time has long since passed. The effectiveness of our Government involves the issue of life and death for ourselves and for the world.

How effective is it? It is no exaggeration to say that it is organized in a way that makes efficient, farsighted action difficult, if not impossible. If an army or a navy or a business enterprise or a newspaper office were organized the way the United States Government is, it would incur almost certain defeat at the hands of an enemy or of its business competitors.

For example, I was told the other day that 90 high officials report direct to the President of the United States. I started an investigation of my own, and discovered that actually 150 members of boards and commissions, 15 heads of departments and major agencies, 5 persons in the Executive Office of the President, 7 persons in the White House staff proper, 11 in the emergency agencies which are still functioning, and 3 persons from the Joint Chiefs of Staff have direct access to the President. To this list should be added in the interest of completeness, the Tax Court of the United States, certain officers of the District of Columbia, members of the International Boundary Commission and all ambassadors, ministers, and personal representatives of foreign governments. It may be admitted that some of these officials have a purely nominal amount of reporting to do; but the fact still remains that there are probably some 90 officials whose reporting to the President is not merely routine.

Merely to illustrate the point, do Senators know how many subordinates General Eisenhower had to talk to in order to direct his ground troops in their invasion of Germany? He talked to three men—Field Marshal Montgomery, commanding the northern group of armies; General Bradley, commanding the central group of armies; and General Devers, commanding the southern group of armies. This is one illustration which could be multiplied countless times in military and business life. But President Truman must talk to as many as 90.

Furthermore, it is a well-known rule of good management that fiscal responsibility—that is, the control of funds—must parallel management responsibility. The bureaus of the Government should be involved only in the fiscal affairs of the activities which they control because only thus can the heads of the departments and the Congress be constantly in possession of accurate information; only thus can waste be avoided at its source before it even starts. But we know that the bureaus are not so organized, either within the departments or among the departments, and waste and confusion are the results. We appropriate in a schematic line that proceeds vertically, while the functions of the Government extend horizontally; the result is confusion.

Oftentimes officials of the executive branch tell us—and the statement irritates us—that the cuts which we make will have to come out of essential activities. If we are going to make cuts, we ask: Why cut out essential items? Why cut out airplanes or food or medical care? Why not cut out the waste? Why not eliminate items such as the one that came to light in the House last week, when it was disclosed that one of our armed services was ordering very fancy cut glass and silver finger bowls and salt shakers, at the very same time that the Army and Navy were disposing of thousands of finger bowls and salt shakers through the War Assets Administration? Why cannot savings be made in such items as that?"

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to advise the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not think the purchases have been made. In all, there was involved about a million dollars, of which only $50,000 was for silver-plated finger bowls for the officers' wards, but, in view of the reports which were going around the Capitol and the general feeling of objection, I, on behalf of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, asked the Secretary of the Navy to hold up placing the orders until the committee had an opportunity to examine the request for bids.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator from Vermont kindly speak loud enough so that the Senators on this side may be able to hear what he is saying?

Mr. AIKEN. I was advising the Senator from Massachusetts, who referred to the Navy's asking for bids on chinaware and silver-plated finger bowls, amounting to about a million dollars, at the same time that a great deal of such material, it is reported, was declared surplus; and I was advising the Senator from Massachusetts that in view of these reports I had asked the Secretary of the Navy, on behalf of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to withhold placing the orders for these materials until the committee had an opportunity to examine the request for bids. I have received a note from the Secretary. I have forgotten exactly what he said, but, in effect, I think he is complying with the request.

There was not a million dollars' worth of silver-plated finger bowls requested; the number, I think, was 36,000 or 38,000, and it was anticipated that they would cost $1.20 apiece.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad to have that information. I mentioned the incident as an example.

Mr. AIKEN. The fact remains that the request for bids for about a million dollars' worth of chinaware and silverware and other articles had been sent out, and I think the bids were to be opened the latter part of last week.

Mr. LODGE. I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont for that information. I was bringing that up as one illustration—many others might be given—of the fact that unless management control and fiscal control are made to go along in a parallel way it will be found impossible to prevent such things happening.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is entirely correct in that statement; I agree with him.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator from Vermont very much.

That is why, when I hear some of my colleagues say that officials in the executive branch, in order to prevent the making of reductions by the Congress, are deliberately threatening the Congress by the suggestion that economies proposed will result in cutting out essential items. I doubt whether that is true, because I think that the one reason why cuts are not made in the right places in the executive departments is that in many of them modern management methods do not exist. The result is that those who are supposedly operating the departments actually do not know what their departments are doing, and they do not know how to make intelligent cuts. If modern management methods prevailed, then the Congress should do what it wants to do—keep the essential things, and cut out the waste. I refuse to admit that there are not the brains in this body to set up such a system.

There is, however, another cause for the waste of public funds that can be laid at the door of Congress itself. In the able speech which was made by the Senator from Washington the other day, he referred to the subject of flight pay, which undoubtedly leads to a great many abuses and to a great deal of waste of public funds. In large measure, flight pay is governed by acts of Congress, and the departments are helpless to do away with it.

We badly need a study of obsolete legislation because that is another factor which is forcing the departments into extravagance.

Anyway, the thing is still mushrooming—aimlessly, pointlessly, pleasing no one and frustrating the very causes which the people want served. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], a recognized authority, said recently:

"The conclusion is inescapable that the cessation of hostilities has brought little reduction in the tremendous war expansion of the Government. It is inconceivable that the departments and old-line agencies, expanded to 777 component parts at the height of the war, should now need to expand still further to require 920 principal component parts. There is no justification for having 1,200 Federal offices in New York, 1,000 in Chicago, and over 500 each in Philadelphia and Los Angeles, to mention only a few, as was so recently the case."

He also pointed out that—

"At present the annual pay roll of the executive branch of the Government approximates $6,250,000,000. This is $1,500,000,000 more than the entire Government spent for all purposes in 1933. The executive branch now employs more people than all the State, city, and county governments of the entire 48 States. With the exception of school teachers, this includes, besides the regular State and municipal authorities, all the policemen, firemen, and public-service employees of the entire Nation."

Another great authority on this subject is Representative WIGGLESWORTH, of Massachusetts. He says:

"There has been great duplication and overlapping of functions. The Comptroller General has stated not so long ago that there were no less than 29 agencies lending Government funds, 3 insuring deposits, 34 engaged in the acquisition of land—"

Think of it, Senators, 34 agencies are engaged in activities in connection with the acquisition of land—

"16 in wildlife preservation, 10 in Government construction, 9 in credit and finance, 12 in home and community planning, 10 in materials and construction, 28 in welfare matters, 14 in forestry matters, 4 in bank examinations, and 65 in gathering statistics. There are in many States more Federal employees than there are State employees. Excluding the Army and Navy, there are more Federal employees on the pay rolls today than there were on VJ-day. The Comptroller General of the United States has recently reported the loss of many billions, particularly in connection with cost-plus contracts, renegotiation, and contract termination. He has castigated the procurement agencies of the Government for laxity and lack of ethical standards. He has reported in one instance that the United States Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration have failed to account properly for over $8,000,000,000."

Representative WIGGLESWORTH then refers to increases which are proposed to be made for the next fiscal year. He points out that it is proposed to appropriate $947,000,000 as compared with an actual appropriation this year of $723,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture; $264,000,000 as compared with $194,000,000 this year for the Department of Commerce; $313,000,000 as compared with $272,000,000 this year for the Department of the Interior; $111,000,000 as compared with $99,000,000 this year for the Department of Justice; and $352,000,000 as compared with $295,000,000 this year for the Post Office Department.

He tells us that a similar comparison for some of the independent agencies of the Government shows an increase from $12,000,000 to $12,700,000 for the Civil Service Commission, from $5,500,000 to $7,300,000 for the Federal Communications Commission, from $3,300,000 to $4,200,000 for the Federal Power Commission, from $2,500,000 to $3,900,000 for the Federal Trade Commission, from $9,600,000 to $11,900,000 for the Interstate Commerce Commission, from $1,000,000 to $1,700,000 for the National Archives, from $4,000,000 to $7,900,000 for the National Labor Relations Board, from $4,900,000 to $6,500,000 for the Securities and Exchange Commission. These, he says, are but examples.

I shall not burden the Senate with any more of these gloomy statistics. It is sufficient to sum it all up by saying that 30 years ago the number of executive establishments of the rank of a bureau or the equivalent is reported to have been 158. That figure had increased to 521 in 1932. By 1944 it had reached 1,141. During this same period of time the number of civilian employees of the executive branch had increased from 438,057 in 1916; to 528,542 in 1926; 824,259 in 1936; to about 900,000 in 1939; to the grand total of 2,766,165 in 1946. This means an increase of about 1,400,000 since 1939 which may represent an expenditure of $5,000,000,000. To which can be added the fact that we have a national debt 10 times as large as the maximum debt of World War I.

There we have a brief sketch of the waste and confusion. What are we going to do about it? Remember we do not know much about the details which make up these totals. The New York Times on February 16 said: "There has been no close study, at home or abroad, of what is essential and what is not." How are we going to remedy the situation?

I saw one solution proposed in a newspaper the other day in an exchange before a committee between a Senator and a Mr. Herbert J. Slaughter, chief of the Interior Department's legislative staff. According to the newspaper account, the Senator asked the witness: "How many employees could you fire and still run the Department?" The witness is said to have replied: "That is a very difficult question to answer. I can only say that there are places where reductions can be made." The Senator then had the understandable reaction. He said: "I think that a good way would be to fire about half of these Government people and see if the public complains of poor service."

It is an understandable reaction, but the trouble with such a solution is that undoubtedly the public would complain if such a procedure were followed.

Mr. President, the whole Senate has very recently been put in this same dilemma by being required to approve overall budget figures without knowing the facts. We were completely in the dark. We are determined, for example, as I said before, to get rid of the waste in the Army and Navy—and all of us who were in the service or who know anybody who was in the service are aware that there is much waste. We are also resolutely determined not to weaken our armed forces in any essential respect. But we have no chance to vote on these matters. We have no chance to express our true policy. No; we are given a choice of several over-all figures and the certainty that no matter what we do it will be wrong. We are sure either to cut off too much or not to cut off enough.

I submit, Mr. President, that that is not satisfactory. I believe we can do better than that the next time. I realize that we cannot hope in six short weeks to undo the confusion of 16 years of expanding emergency government, of which 4 years were years at war—and there has been no reorganization since the war.

But we can and we must look to the future. We can turn on the light. We can go through the Federal Government with a fine-toothed comb and find out what its functions are—there is no one book that can be obtained which lists all its functions—lay bare the waste and duplication and make informed and firm decisions. I refuse to admit that we must always remain in the dilemma of either cutting too much or not cutting enough. I contend that we can eliminate the waste and preserve—and indeed, enhance—all the vital functions of government.

To this end I have introduced a bill, a companion to one introduced in the House by Representative BROWN of Ohio. It calls for a study by experts and Members of Congress of the reorganization of our executive branch and to report back to Congress in January 1949, just at the time when the Eighty-first Congress will be beginning. Thus this commission will have a full year and a half to go through the Government with a fine-toothed comb and to throw light into all the musty old corners. The noncongressional members, who would be the ones really to carry the load, should be men of stature, like President Compton or President Conant, Justice Roberts, former Senator La Follette, or Secretary Forrestal, who has done pioneer work in introducing modern management methods into the Government.

I am glad to say that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has kindly promised me an early hearing for my bill in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield briefly, but I am speaking under the 20-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LODGE. I will now take 20 minutes on the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 20 minutes on the concurrent resolution.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. I yield, but I ask the Senator to make the question brief, please.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I noted the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts about the necessity of introducing modern management methods into government. Does not the Senator believe that if we proceed upon that line we shall only come out with a bigger government and more highly concentrated power? Speaking for myself, after having had the advantage of presiding over the Temporary National Economic Committee, I am convinced that what we need is not greater centralization of government, but decentralization of business. The growth of the managerial form of government is a direct result of the development of management in business, which knows no local lines, no county lines, no State lines, and in some cases not even national lines.

The solution to our problem is to open the door of opportunity to small enterprises. Until that is done we may multiply study upon study without getting anything more than a continued growth of big government.

A month ago I had occasion to point out that although the Eightieth Congress was then less than 4 weeks old, 30 bills had already been introduced, some by Democrats and some by Republicans, expanding the powers of the Washington government.

I thank the Senator for his indulgence.

Mr. LODGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Wyoming. He has made a study of the whole question of centralization of economic power, and he is unquestionably correct when he suggests that much may be said for the decentralization of economic activity. Of course, I am not arguing at all for increasing the centralization of government or increasing, necessarily, the power of government. I am asking that whatever we do we do well. I am asking that if we undertake to do certain things through our Government, we do those things economically and effectively.

Mr. President, I shall conclude. We hear much said about why people voted as they did at the last election. I shall not undertake to give all the reasons. I contend, however, that we were not sent here to put back the clock, but to wind it up, get it going again and take the rat's nests and bread crumbs out of the works. The measure to which I refer gives us this chance. Never again must we be caught as we were some days ago—obliged to make blindfolded decisions.

Let me say that there are innumerable precedents for setting up such a commission as I propose. Within my own memory here we have had the Temporary National Economic Committee of 1938, to which the Senator from Wyoming refers, composed of three Senators, three Representatives and one expert each from the Treasury, Justice, and Labor and Commerce departments, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. President, Congress has reorganized and streamlined itself. Let the same be done for the executive branch.

This is not a job which Congress alone, working through congressional committees and using its own staffs, can do. We in Congress have not the time. There is no use deluding ourselves about that. We have not the time to do the job that needs to be done. We would have to leave it to our staffs; and our staffs would not have the standing which the members of this commission would have in their relation to the departments. I envisage full time work for at least a year and a half. All sorts of expert knowledge would be required, possibly, including the services of industrial engineers and management experts. It would take time and money.

I am in no way minimizing the vital importance of setting up proper Congressional staffs to probe for waste and extravagance and to scrutinize the budget estimates for next year. They have a vital task to perform. But they are definitely not set up to undertake the great overhauling which I have in mind.

Let me say that I have no pride of authorship in this bill. If the Senate or the Committee wishes to change its detailed provisions so as to have 5 instead of 12 members or any other detailed alteration, I shall gladly acquiesce. The important thing is to start the job.

Such a study will, I am convinced, make great economies possible. Careful students of the problem have told me that between seven billion five hundred million and eleven billion could be saved in 1 year. This is important.

Overshadowing even this consideration, however, is the fact that it will make our Government an effective instrument for translating into action the aims and the aspirations of the people. In military parlance, it will make the Government operational. This is not only important. In this modern age, it is essential.

The reason for the destruction and disappearance of democracy in so many countries of the Old World is that it did not or could not translate into effective actions the aims and aspirations of the people. Let us keep our system vigorous and alive by making it effective and thereby give what leadership we can toward preventing the end of the world.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a copy of Senate bill 164, which I introduced on January 13.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 164) for the establishment of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote economy, efficiency, and improved service in the transaction of the public business in the departments, bureaus, agencies, boards, commissions, offices, independent establishments, and instrumentalities of the executive branch of the Government by—

(1) limiting expenditures to the lowest amount consistent with the efficient performance of essential services, activities, and functions;

(2) eliminating duplication and overlapping of services, activities, and functions;

(3) consolidating services, activities, and functions of a similar nature;

(4) abolishing services, activities, and functions not necessary to the efficient conduct of government; and

(5) defining and limiting executive functions, services, and activities.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMMISSION ON ORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

SEC. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the policy set forth in section 1 of this act, there is hereby established a bipartisan commission to be known as the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government (in this act referred to as the "Commission").

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 3. (a) Number and appointment: The Commission shall be composed of 12 members as follows:

(1) Four appointed by the President of the United States, two from the executive branch of the Government, and two from private life;

(2) Four appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, two from the Senate and two from private life; and

(3) Four appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, two from the House of Representatives and two from private life.

(b) Political affiliation: Of each class of two members mentioned in subsection (a), not more than one member shall be from each of the two major political parties.

(c) Vacancies: Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 4. The Commission shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

QUORUM

SEC. 5. Seven members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 6. (a) Members of Congress: Members of Congress who are members of the Commission shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress; but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(b) Members from the executive branch: The members of the Commission who are in the executive branch of the Government shall each receive the compensation which he would receive if he were not a member of the Commission, plus each additional compensation, if any (notwithstanding section 6 of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended; 39 Stat. 582; 5 U. S. C. 58), as is necessary to make his aggregate salary $12,500; and they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(c) Members from private life: The members from private life shall each receive $50 per diem when engaged in the performance of duties vested in the Commission, plus reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of such duties.

STAFF OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 7. The Commission shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable, in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

EXPIRATION OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 9. Ninety days after the submission to the Congress of the report provided for in section 10 (b), the Commission shall cease to exist.

DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

SEC 10. (a) Investigation: The Commission shall study and investigate the present organization and methods of operation of all departments, bureaus, agencies, boards, commissions, offices, independent establishments, and instrumentalities of the executive branch of the Government, to determine what changes therein are necessary in their opinion to accomplish the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act.

(b) Report: Within 10 days after the Eighty-first Congresss is convened and organized, the Commission shall make a report of its findings and recommendations to the Congress.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 11. (a) Hearings and sessions: The Commission, or any member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as the Commission or such member may deem advisable. Any member of the Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Commission or before such member.

(b) Obtaining official data: The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics for the purposes of this act; and each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information, suggestion, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the chairman or vice chairman.

PRECEDENTS OF THE SENATE REGARDING RECAPITULATIONS OF VOTES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Chair recognizes Senators further, he wishes to make a statement regarding a parliamentary situation which arose last Friday in connection with the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] for a recapitulation of the vote by which the Taft amendment to the Wherry amendment was ultimately defeated.

The Senate will recall that the situation arose as follows: The preliminary roll call on the Taft amendment stood at 38 to 38, whereupon the Senator from Maryand, before the announcement of the result, asked for a second recapitulation, which the Chair granted. Before the result was announced, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] arrived and was permitted by the Chair to vote. The result was that the Taft amendment was defeated by a vote of 39 to 38.

The Chair was intrigued by the situation to the extent of inquiring into the precedents, because the Chair is exceedingly anxious to keep the precedents straight.

There is no rule in the Senate on the subject. There is at least a very definite practice in the House which does not permit any Member to vote after a recapitulation has been ordered. In the Senate the procedure has been purely a matter of custom. As all Senators know, there is one automatic recapitulation of every yea-and-nay vote. That is a matter of custom. Beyond that, there has been a variety of practice in respect to requests for second recapitulations, the requests obviously being, upon most occasions, parliamentary devices to gain time.

There are some precedents that the granting of such a request is in the discretion of the Chair. There are some precedents that it is a matter of unanimous consent; and of course the Senate can always do as it pleases by unanimous consent. There is some practice that the second recapitulation can be requested at any time prior to the actual announcement of the result and that any Senator arriving in the Chamber prior to the announcement of the result may be permitted to vote. It was under that practice that the Chair, in an anxiety to be scrupulously fair, permitted the Senator from Idaho to vote.

But lest that stand as a precedent, the Chair wishes to say that after a very careful examination of all the precedents it is his opinion that the standard practice of the Senate should be as follows:

That a second recapitulation may be ordered only after the announcement of the result of the vote, on the theory that the recapitulation is to test the correctness of the announcement; that when a recapitulation is thus ordered a second time, since it is only an effort to be sure that the record is accurate, no Senator arriving in the Chamber after the recapitulation has been ordered will be permitted to vote or, except by unanimous consent, to change or withdraw his vote.

Therefore the Chair is simply putting the Senate on notice that hereafter, so far as the present occupant of the Chair is concerned, a request for a second recapitulation will not be recognized by the Chair until after announcement of the vote; and that thereafter, if a recapitulation is granted, no Senator who enters the Chamber can vote, and, except by unanimous consent, no Senator who voted can change or withdraw his vote.

The Chair has felt it necessary to make that statement in order to clarify the record and to establish what the Chair believes to be the standard of proper procedure as well as to put the Senate on notice as to the Chair's expectations hereafter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, suppose a Senator had voted and there were reason to assume that his vote might have been incorrectly recorded. Suppose that during the first recapitulation the Senator stepped out to the telephone and came back after the recapitulation and after the announcement was made. Would he be denied the opportunity to correct his vote—not to change it, but to have it recorded as he intended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He could change his vote by unanimous consent; and the Chair would assume that a statement of such a reason for changing his vote would be accepted by the Chair and by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt of that. But it is conceivable that such a situation might occur, and I have myself observed on one or two occasions that it has occurred. If the Chair were to deny the right of a Senator, except by unanimous consent of the Senate, to correct his vote—not to change it, but to correct it and have it recorded as he originally intended--and were to hold that that could not be done, although there was an obvious mistake, it might sometimes put Senators in a rather embarrassing situation. The object of a recapitulation, whether it be the first or second, is primarily to ascertain whether a correct record has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to the Chair the Senator's statement is very persuasive. Rather than to take snap judgment on it, the Chair would like to inquire into that portion of the Senate's precedents.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, referring to the ruling made by the Chair, I should like to ask a question. Do I correctly understand the ruling to be that after a recapitulation of a vote is taken, before the vote is announced by the Chair, it will be impossible after the first recapitulation for any Senator to vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ruling of the Chair was that after the first recapitulation and prior to the announcement of the vote any Senator who had not voted could vote.

(At this point several Senators submitted items of routine business, which appear elsewhere in today's RECORD under appropriate headings.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will understand that under the present unanimous-consent agreement those now making requests to present routine matters are charged with speaking full time on the pending amendment.

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST AS NEWSPAPER PUBLISHER

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, tomorrow, March 4, is the sixtieth aniversary of William Randolph Hearst as a newspaper publisher.

As we remember this remarkable career we are able to look back at the great advances that have taken place in our country since 1887; and if we look closely enough, we can see that in most of these historic changes a leading champion of what was novel at the time but has proved progressive since has been William Randolph Hearst.

On March 4, 1887, George Hearst, a notable Member of this body, charged his son with the operation henceforth of the Senator's little San Francisco Examiner. The Examiner immediately began to become a great newspaper, but it is now only one of the great newspapers Mr. Hearst has established and fostered and continues to operate throughout the country.

Mr. Hearst has always been a fighting liberal in the real sense of the word. Essentially and basically he has stood for democratic advancement in the United States, which implied, of course, the protection of the United States.

Let us look back upon some of the great progressive steps which we take for granted now, but which were so startling to most of the people when Mr. Hearst began aggressively advocating them. He had not been long in the editor's chair of the San Francisco Examiner before he expressed a principle to which he has adhered ever since—an inflexible enmity for all forces which would destroy the established governmental form of the United States. In the September 1 edition of the San Francisco Examiner in 1887 there appeared and editorial which asserted:

> There is little doubt that the seven Chicago anarchists will suffer the extreme penalty for their atrocious crime. There should be no sympathy for them.

The great anarchist scare of that period is past, but Mr Hearst is no less vigorous in his present-day war against another revolutionary, degrading concept—communism.

It would be a formidable task to list all the great projects which Mr. Hearst advocated from their very earliest inception and which are now accomplished.

He was among the very first to raise his voice and use the influence of his increasing newspapers for woman suffrage.

Expressing the liberalism which has always been characteristic of him, he spoke first and strongest for the initiative, the referendum, and the recall.

When the world was dark for labor, he called for higher wages and better working conditions, declaring them the first essential of something he has always sought, namely, the very highest standard of living for the American people.

He has believed that a militarily strong United States would be the world's greatest safeguard for the peace. So he threw the full force of his newspapers behind the Panama Canal project. In every decade, in every year, he has contested anything and everything that would weaken us and make us the prey of jealous foreign nations. He was the first to campaign for air power.

With all this, he has been perhaps the world's leading pacifist. He has foreseen wars which we might have escaped with full honor, and he has warned against the steps that led us into these wars, following closely the injunction of George Washington that we must not become the victim of foreign entanglements through the machinations of those who would destroy us.

As he warned against the Red menace 60 years ago, so did he warn decades ago against the yellow peril. And, as we have seen the Red menace become a fact, so did we eventually go to war with an aggressive Japan, although many had scoffed at both those warnings.

Beginning when he campaigned against the Chinese opium dens of old San Francisco, Mr. Hearst has been and is today the implacable foe of the illegal narcotics traffic. We find his newspapers fighting it today and speaking for a strong antinarcotics commission within the United Nations so as to stop entirely throughout the world all narcotics production except for the strict requirements of medicine and science. Some of us can recall his great campaign for two laws long on the statute books, the Harrison Antinarcotics Act and the Jones-Miller Act, to regulate the import and export of narcotics.

Mr. Hearst opposed the great bankers when the bankers were wrong. He spoke for municipal ownership of vital utilities. He has always fought monopoly and greed. He crusaded for a Nationwide network of fine roads when the automobile was a freak and when there were no good roads. He wrought great changes for the better in prison administration.

Large or small, minor or important, he and his newspapers, under a personal direction that continues even to this day, overlooked nothing that was to the advantage and the greatness of the United States.

Through it all I find a human factor that especially marks him. Nothing engages his sympathy so quickly as the helpless of the earth, nothing inflames his anger so much as wrong to those who are helpless. Throughout these 60 years he has been the defender of women and children, conducting many a crusade for laws which would protect them from brutality and hardship. And the voice he has raised in behalf of humane treatment of the dumb creatures of the world has been heard by us all.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Inasmuch as the Senator from Kansas is discussing the sixtieth anniversary of the William Randolph Hearst newspapers, I think it is only fitting to say that the foundation of the Hearst fortune was laid in Virginia City, Nev., along with that of the MacKays, the Floods, and the Fairs, much of which was used in building up the first great city of San Francisco. George Hearst, father of William Randolph Hearst, walked into Virginia City in the early days, and later made a fortune through investments in mining property located in that city. It has always been a source of admiration to me that in Nevada was made the fortune which led to the founding of the great string of newspapers which today pay perhaps the largest salaries of any that are paid by any newspaper chain. Such salaries are paid to its leading men, its great reporters, and its great editors, such as Clarence Lindner, of San Francisco, and while its owner, William Randolph Hearst, has been in the newspaper business for more than half a century, he is still his own best editor. I am a great admirer of that chain of newspapers, not because I always agree with them, but because they are fearless and make the people think.

I thank the Senator from Kansas for yielding to me.

Mr. CAPPER. I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. President, Mr. Hearst was a good newspaperman by instinct, and he became a great newspaperman by experience and accomplishment and the constant and indefatigable practice of the standards of news worthiness and accuracy and readability, which are the sinews of good journalism.

It is fitting that Mr. Hearst's name be mentioned in the Senate today. He was a Member of the House of Representatives from New York in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses, having been elected on a ticket which at that time exemplified a new spirit of progress in the United States.

REQUEST TO DISPENSE WITH PRINTING OF HEARINGS ON NOMINATION OF GORDON R. CLAPP

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Public Works, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, that the committee may be authorized to dispense with the printing of the testimony and evidence submitted before it at the hearings on the nomination of Gordon R. Clapp to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The committee has directed me to request such unanimous consent for the reason that there are some 1,580 pages of testimony and several volumes of the printed transcript. Therefore, under the order of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the committee be authorized to dispense with printing the hearings, and that the three copies of the typewritten transcript be used in lieu of the printed record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as Senators are required to pass upon this nomination, which has been reported adversely to the Senate, and inasmuch as it would be impossible for 96 Senators to familiarize themselves with the testimony by passing three copies from hand to hand, I shall for the moment object. I wish to look further into the question, because it involves not only a Presidential appointment but the right of the appointee and also the right of the Senate to know upon what testimony the committee brought in the adverse report. Therefore for the time being I feel compelled to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, in behalf of the committee, let me make this explanation: The request has been made solely for the sake of economy and to save the expense of having the large record printed. I well understand the position taken by the Senator from Kentucky; and, of course, if the transcripts available cannot serve the purpose, the point is well taken that printed copies should be made available. But the committee wished to save the expense of having the record printed, and the committee has asked me to make this request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that. I think I am as much interested in economy as is any other Member of the Senate. I suppose the committee took this position under its view of a duty which it felt called upon to perform; but, Mr. President, it is physically impossible for 96 Senators to absorb, upon hasty perusal of three volumes of typewritten testimony, the information which they should have in order to act on the question involved in fairness to the Senate and to the nominee. So for the time being I object.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, because it bears directly upon the subject of the budget for the next fiscal year which the Senate is now considering, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Will the 'Ceiling' Hold?" which was published in the Greenville News, of Greenville, S. C., on February 28, 1947.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILL THE "CEILING" HOLD?

The Senate's vote for a 1947-48 fiscal year budget of no more than $33,000,000,000 indicates the likelihood that the final agreement of the two Houses of Congress will be to put the "ceiling" on spending at $32,500,000,000.

This rather long-winded argument, which still has to go to a free conference committee, has been merely a move for general congressional agreement on a maximum total for the various separate appropriation bills which are still to be written and passed. This is a new procedure for Congress under the reorganization plan; and it must be said that it yet remains to be seen whether the maximum or "ceiling" now being decided on will actually prevent Congress from adopting a series of appropriation measures whose grand total will exceed the figure now being agreed on. This will be the real test of the value of this reorganization plan budget procedure; and until we see the final result it will still be a question as to whether the "ceiling" decisions now being made mean anything at all.

But if Congress definitely agrees on a ceiling of no more than $32,500,000,000 for appropriations in the coming year, and actually sticks by that decision, it will mean a schedule of appropriations about $5,000,000,000 lower than the President has recommended. And with revenues calculated on present rates at about $39,000,000,000, with the continuation of the wartime exicse tax rates on sales of various goods and services, there should be opportunity to reduce taxes on individual incomes to the extent of around $3,000,000,000 and still leave a surplus of several billions to apply on debt reduction.

The two big questions, of course, are (1) whether revenues will run as estimated in the coming fiscal year; and (2) whether Congress, after having agreed on a budget "ceiling" will really abide by it. And in the light of these questions it seems to this newspaper that it is a pretty good idea to agree with the Knowland proposal that the first three billions of any surplus be devoted to debt reduction, and that tax cutting wait on assurance that taxes can be reduced while still paying that sum on the debt. For our first duty is to start working this debt down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], as amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on the particular procedural question which the Chair has announced, I merely wish to say that I myself am in favor of accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and then I favor having the Senate proceed to final consideration of the resolution itself. I think it is vitally important that we quickly conclude our action on the resolution, which for some 2 weeks has prevented consideration by the Senate of other important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], as amended, adding at the end of the concurrent resolution certain words.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. What amendment was added to the original Wherry amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio was added, but subsequently was stricken out.

Mr. BARKLEY. So the amendment now before the Senate is the original Wherry amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is correct.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as amended [putting the question].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now lays before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 20, which will be read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (H. Con. Res. 20) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the House concurrent resolution will be substituted for the Senate resolution, and the House resolution will be amended by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting the language of the Senate concurrent resolution, as amended.

The question now is on agreeing to House Concurrent Resolution 20, as amended.

Mr. TAFT. On this question, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, have I exhausted the time which I had on the resolution itself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time is exhausted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, the resolution now pending before the Senate, reducing the President's budget by $4,500,000,000, reverses the fiscal policy of the present administration and prior administrations, a policy marked by 17 years of spending and deficits. I believe that a second requirement in our movement toward a sound fiscal policy is the adoption of a program of debt management and debt reduction. It is evident, however, from the debate and from the action which has been taken, with the exception of the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and the purpose is evident in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], that the emphasis of a great many Members of this body is placed upon tax reduction, rather than upon debt reduction.

Much has been said in the Senate in the last few days about tax reduction. It has been urged that it is necessary that taxes be immediately and substantially reduced in order to promote the full flow of capital investment and to relieve burdened taxpayers. I believe that every Member of this body supports these objectives, and desires that tax reduction and tax revision be effected as quickly as is possible, consistent with the circumstances and conditions in which we now find ourselves.

It is my conviction, however, that in this year of continuing transition from war to peace, this year of uncertainty, in which we are seeking to establish the stability of our domestic and international position, this body will act wisely if it does not reduce taxes until a substantial budgetary surplus is assured, and a substantial payment on the public debt made.

It has been urged in some quarters that a mandate has been imposed by the people upon the Congress to make an immediate and substantial tax reduction. With all due regard to that position, I do not believe there is any obligation imposed upon the Congress with respect to tax reduction, other than to take such action as will promote a sound fiscal policy in the present circumstances.

The reasons upon which I base my position that debt reduction should receive emphasis over tax reduction have been stated by many Members of the Senate, and I shall not take time to discuss them fully.

During the war, billions of dollars of the Government's obligations were sold to the banks of the Nation. It was a necessary practice, but it created an inflationary condition, through the manufacture of bank deposits and check-book money. It has been urged that the inflationary condition cannot be aggravated except by increasing the debt. I contend that the base for expansion is still present, and the only safe procedure is to constrict and reduce the base by substantial annual payments upon the debt.

A second danger which is inherent in the public debt is its large fixed annual interest charge of $5,000,000,000, which, as has been stated by the Senator from California, is larger than the total budget of the early thirties, and approximates the average annual budget of the late thirties, the largest budgets in our peacetime history. It is even possible that the interest charge may be increased. In the next 5 years it will be necessary to refund $73,000,000,000 of the obligations of the Government. In a proper program of debt management it will be necessary to readjust the debt, and in this process to move the debt from banking institutions into the hands of individuals and nonbanking institutions. It may be necessary to change the composition of the debt from short-term obligations to long-term obligations. Who can say that under worsened economic conditions, or in a market in which investors demand higher rates of interest, the annual interest charge of $5,000,000,000 may not be increased?

We have already reached into the future, and imposed upon those who will live in the future, a heavy principal sum of debt. It will be inequitable if we, by our failure to make debt payments, project the principal sum of the debt further into the future, and increase the burden by continuing the heavy interest charge of $5,000,000,000.

Another consideration which has been mentioned many times is that this year, above all others, is the year we are able to pay a substantial sum upon the debt. It is certain that in the lean years we will not be able to pay any substantial sum, but if we cannot pay a substantial sum in the fiscal year, with maximum employment and with the largest income in our history, then, I ask, when will we be able to do so?

The chief reason which I advance in support of my argument that debt reduction should be placed above tax reduction grows out of the uncertainties of the year. As was pointed out a few days ago by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], when we make payments upon the debt, we create a kind of reserve; we create a condition, a cushion, which will protect us in the event some emergency arises this year or in the years that lie ahead.

If we reduce the surplus now by income-tax reduction we take away the protection, which we may need this year. I should like to point out that a few days ago the distinguished former President, Mr. Hoover, with his great honesty and clarity, made a report to the Nation in which he pointed out the demands that may be made upon the Nation because of our occupation of Germany. It has been suggested to us that perhaps demands will be made upon us in relation to Greece. I do not know what action may be taken with respect to those demands, but I say they are prophetic, they are symbolic of the uncertainties of this year. For myself, I should like to see maintained a reserve which will protect us against such emergencies. If it should develop in the latter part of the session that emergencies have not arisen, we will have ample opportunity and time to make tax reductions, and I hope that it can be done.

The prosperity incident to the war was not a sound prosperity; it was fictitious. It was not based upon the production of goods which added to the wealth of the Nation; it was based upon the production of destructive goods, which reduced the wealth of the world.

The prosperity of today is a continuing war prosperity based upon deferred demands for goods which could not be supplied during the war years. Industry, labor, agriculture—all of us prospered, and prosper still, because of war. It is obvious that those who have prospered and who prosper today because of war expenditures should help pay the debt and interest today.

I think my position is a sound Republican position. During the New Deal administration, when the prewar debt was being created, attention was brought to the huge debt in every campaign, in every speech made by a Republican leader. Time after time it was said that if the Republican Party could secure control of the administration or of the Congress, the debt would be reduced. Debt payment has been an honest objective of the Republican Party during its entire history. I am glad to be in accord with the historic position of the Republican Party.

It is my conviction every consideration of honesty, equity, and sound fiscal practice demands that we place debt reduction above tax reduction this year, and that we assume the obligations which we brought upon ourselves and which we have contracted to pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the language of the Senate concurrent resolution was substituted for the language of the House concurrent resolution. I make the motion, I say frankly, in order that I may have opportunity to say just a word in regard to the final action on the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to reconsider the vote by which the language of the Senate concurrent resolution has been substituted for the language of the House concurrent resolution. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the question of the adoption finally of the concurrent resolution has been given serious consideration by a number of us in the Senate on both sides of the aisle. There are some Senators who doubt whether we can reduce the budget by $4,500,000,000. I do not know. I have some doubt about it, in view of contingencies. I voted for the $4,500,000,000 reduction, as between that and the $6,000,000,000 reduction. I do not wish to put myself in the attitude of voting against any reductions, because I think it may be possible to make some, and I shall cooperate, as appropriation bills come along, to the extent of my ability, in making reductions where it seems they may be made without serious injury to the public welfare and without serious injury to our national defense. But, on the whole, I have concluded in my own mind to vote for the adoption of the resolution, and I wish also to state to the Senate that if I should be a conferee—which I may be, depending on the number—I shall do my utmost in the conference to maintain the position of the Senate, and I should express the very fervent hope that all Senate conferees will do the same.

I realize that from another quarter there has been a barrage hurled at the Members of the Senate within the last few days, the charge being made that the Senate leadership and the Senate generally are cockeyed, because they wished to reduce the public debt. I do not intend to reply in kind, but I should be willing to suggest that if the Civil Service Commission were authorized to hold an examination to determine who is the most cockeyed Member of the Congress of the United States, I do not think the three highest on the list would come from the Senate.

So, Mr. President, while I do so with some hesitation and some doubt, yet I am voting for this $4,500,000,000 reduction resolution because I want to bring about any wise reductions that are possible, and because I do not wish to be put in a false position where it can be claimed that I am opposed to any reductions that can wisely be made. At the same time I know full well that what may happen in regard to the ultimate reduction, if any, will depend upon the sum total of appropriations that the Congress will pass between now and its adjournment.

Mr. President, I now withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desired merely to make a statement before the Senator withdraws his motion.

My purpose, Mr. President, is to make clear that it will be my intention to vote against the resolution in its amended form. That does not mean that I am voting against economy or for spending because my view is altogether opposed to that. I shall vote for economy, and, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I shall do my best to eliminate waste and extravagance when the appropriation bills are before the Appropriations Committee.

I believe that public spending should be reduced to the utmost, but I recognize the fact, which the whole country ought to know, that this resolution is nothing more than a gesture; it means nothing; it is not a commitment. In fact, the report of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget has said in specific language that it is not a commitment, and I shall not be one to contribute to the perpetration of a deception upon the people of America. They will be entitled to believe, when this resolution is adopted, that there has been a commitment to cut $4,500,000,000 from the budget, but I know, Mr. President, that the whole world, including this country, is now in the midst of a crisis which makes it impossible for any Member of Congress to say how much can be cut.

The Senator from California last week, in discussing his amendment to apply three billion, and then, later, two billion six hundred million, to the reduction of the debt, pointed out the fact that $2,600,000,000 is only 1 percent of the national debt, and that at the same rate it will take 100 years to retire the debt. Are we to go before the public of the United States and convey the impression that we can afford to take 100 years in reducing this debt? Are we going to say to them that we can afford to take 10 years? No man in this body—no man in Congress—can tell what demands will be made upon the country next week, next month, or next year.

So, Mr. President, I want the record to be very clear that the reason I am voting against this resolution is that it is utterly meaningless; and it has been so described by its authors.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point a radio talk which I made last week on this subject.

There being no objection, the radio address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEBT REDUCTION IS THE FIRST ESSENTIAL

Former President Herbert Hoover, returning from a special mission to Germany, has just reported to President Truman that if the United States hopes to see western civilization survive it must undertake substantial expenditures to save Germany.

General MacArthur, who has performed a superlative job in the conquest and the rehabilitation of Japan, has told us that America cannot afford to permit the Japanese to starve.

Senator ARTHUR VANDENBERG, of Michigan, only a few days ago, speaking to a delegation of Michigan citizens, declared in positive terms that he would not support an economy program that would endanger the defense of the United States at a time when, as he put it, "the chips are down in our negotiations for world peace." Senator VANDENBERG made good on this declaration when, in the Senate on Wednesday last, he was one of those to vote against the $6,000,000,000 budget reduction proposed by the Republican leadership.

Almost one-half of the Republican Members of the Senate refused to give their approval to the $6,000,000,000 reduction. These men, like the Democratic Senators who are standing behind President Truman, were not voting against economy; they were voting against jeopardizing the leadership of the United States in the bitter struggle for the establishment of world peace and the preservation of human liberty.

They know, as does every person who gives the slightest consideration to what is going on in the world, that the American philosophy of government is facing its most difficult test.

In the crisis which engulfs the whole world, the totalitarian principle of government and the democratic principle present the choice which must be made by the people of the world. There can be no doubt that if America surrenders its world leadership, if it turns back to false notions of normalcy and isolation, the democratic principle of government cannot survive. This and not any question of economy or tax reduction is the issue involved in the current debate on the legislative budget.

I have no hesitation in saying that short-sighted individuals who are more concerned in saving a few dollars in taxes than they are in saving the American system are now making an effort to mislead the country into the belief that the Republican budget program is designed only to prevent waste and extravagance in government.

I undertake to show that this is not the case and that under the leadership of President Truman there has already been an unparalleled reduction of Federal expenditures and an extraordinarily large payment upon the national debt.

Expenditures for the purposes of war reached their peak in 1945 when there was paid out of the Federal Treasury $100,404,000,000. Immediately after VJ-day, President Truman gave orders to cut unnecessary expenditures even though the war against Japan was still going on. Expenditures for 1946 were reduced below $64,000,000,000 and for the year ending June 30, 1947, it is estimated that expenditures will be less than forty-three billions. That is a total reduction since the end of the war of almost $60,000,000,000, and the President's estimate for the year 1948, namely thirty-seven and a half billions, represents another reduction.

Not only have the expenditures been progressively reduced since VE-day, but President Truman has been applying every dollar that could be secured upon the reduction of the national debt. Between February 1946 and February 1947, the debt has been reduced by more than $20,000,000,000. The record is clear, therefore, that the administration has been reducing both expenditures and the public debt. The issue before the American people now is whether this sound fiscal policy of reducing expenditure and debt shall be continued, or whether, on the contrary, as the Republican majority has proposed, we shall endanger our leadership abroad and reconversion at home by dangerously cutting expenditures so as to provide a 20-percent across-the-board income-tax cut, a reduction which would benefit the rank and file of our people to the extent of only a few cents and dollars, but which would mean a saving of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars for those in the upper income brackets who have profited tremendously from the expenditures of war.

The advocates of tax reduction base their hopes upon the belief that the people will not understand the present need for expenditures approximately thirty-seven and a half billions when they compare that sum with the expenditure of only a little more than $9,000,000,000 in 1939. That it is a huge amount no one can deny. It is four times greater than the expenditures of 1939. No one who has not had an opportunity to study the figures and who, therefore, does not know the appalling cost of the war could be blamed for believing that there must be something seriously wrong with such a tremendous expenditure 2 years after the end of the war, but analysis reveals the fact that almost four-fifths of this total represents expenditures which are the direct result of the war, expenditures which were not incurred in 1939 or in any other peacetime year and which we cannot now avoid.

The National City Bank of New York in its February letter on Government finance in comparing the budget expenditures for 1939 with those proposed for 1948, had this to say:

"It will be seen that five items alone—national defense, veterans' services and benefits, interest on the public debt, international affairs and finance, and tax refunds—come to $29,200,000,000 or almost four-fifths of the total budget."

All of these items thus recognized by the National City Bank as "the cost of the war and its aftermath of debt" have already been substantially reduced by President Truman below the estimates made by the various agencies. If, therefore, you take the $11,250,000,000 for national defense, seven and three-tenths billions for veterans' services, five billions for interest on the public debt, three and five-tenths billions for international affairs, and two and six-tenths billions for tax refunds, which, as the National City Bank points out, make up four-fifths of the President's budget and add to them the civil items contained in the budget expenditures for 1939, the total amounts to almost three and six-tenths billions, or only $1,750,000,000 below the President's budget. This difference vanishes when we realize that the civil expenditures for 1948 contain items like $444,000,000 for atomic energy which was never contained in any peacetime budget; $528,000,000 for the conservation and development of land and water resources which, in 1939, amounted to less than $200,000,000; appropriations for the building of highways, neglected during the war; for the promotion of aviation and the provision of new airports, little of which was done in 1939. The truth is that the budget has already been deeply cut by President Truman and additional reductions will fall on agriculture, on the development of national resources, on the care of veterans, and on national defense.

It was because the Republican program for a $6,000,000,000 slash was made without thought or analysis that Senator MILLIKIN, of Colorado, offered the amendment to cut the Knutson-Taber reduction from six billions to four and one-half billions. But even after that modification was adopted in the Senate, no one on the majority side could say where this cut of four and one-half billions would fall. Indeed, the Republican majority made it clear that it does not have the slightest idea where the saving is to be made, for on page 4 of its report it acknowledges its complete lack of information in the following specific sentence:

"Of course, if the accompanying resolution be adopted there is no commitment as to any reduction in specific items contained in the budget."

The clear purpose of the Republican majority program is to reduce the taxes of the wealthy rather than to pay the debt.

This is the same policy which helped to bring on the depression of 1929.

World War I resulted in a debt of $25,480,000,000.

After the end of that war and before the administration of President Harding began, the Wilson administration reduced World War I debt by about one and one-half billions, so that the Republicans on March 4, 1921, under President Harding, inherited a total debt of slightly less than twenty-four billions. During the succeeding 12 years they passed 5 separate laws reducing income taxes and when the Roosevelt administration took over in 1933 the national debt was still more than twenty-two billions. Income-tax reduction rather than debt payment under the Republican administration left the Nation a legacy of unpaid debts and a depression. Now Republican leadership proposes to make precisely the same mistake.

The national debt at this moment amounts to more than two hundred and fifty-nine billions. We cannot face another depression or another war without concentrating every thought and every effort upon the payment of the maximum reduction of that debt. The annual interest alone amounts to almost $5,000,000,000. That means five thousand millions and it must be paid every single year out of earnings of the American people until we make up our minds to cut the debt. This huge sum is greater than the total amount ever raised in income and profit taxes in any year prior to 1942. It is more than 10 times greater than the entire annual cost of Congress, of all the Federal courts and the executive offices of the President. It must be reduced if the free-enterprise system is to be saved.

The people of America have greater earnings now than at any time in history. Their income in 1946, more than one hundred and sixty billions, was twice the income they received in the most prosperous days of the Harding-Coolidge administrations. Never were they better prepared than now to make a contribution toward the payment of the debt and the reestablishment of peace.

An examination of the monthly earnings record of the great corporations of America as reported by the well-known private statistical publication, Moody's Banks and Finance, justifies the statement made on the floor of the Senate by Senator WALTER GEORGE on Wednesday, February 26, that corporate earnings "are running very high, and in the case of some of the corporations they are running entirely too high, in my judgment. They convince a careful student of affairs that some businesses in the United States are yet perfectly willing to take on all the traffic will bear."

I have before me the figures which show that the earnings of United States Steel, for example, were 31 percent greater in 1946 than they were in 1945; that Bethlehem Steel increased its earnings by 27 percent; and the du Pont Co. by 52 percent; that National Distillers gained 184 percent; and the International Paper Co. 192 percent in the same period.

There were losses, to be sure. General Motors suffered a loss, as did certain other automobile corporations and some mining corporations, but the record on the whole shows that corporate earnings and the national income of the United States were never at a higher level than now.

The minute that income falls, then will fall also the Federal receipts, just as they did during the Hoover administration after the beginning of the depression. When Federal receipts begin to fall it will be impossible to pay the debt and it may be impossible even to pay the interest on the debt.

The national debt is a mortgage on all future production in this country. It is a mortgage beyond the imagination, and if we have any hope of preserving the free-enterprise system we must go busily about the business now of cutting the national debt while we have the money in our pockets with which to do it. Even if we were to pay off $5,000,000,000 every year it would take 50 years to liquidate it.

We have no time to lose. Reduction of income taxes now instead of reduction of the national debt is an invitation to disaster.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY. I withdraw the motion I made to reconsider.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to say only this, in reply to the Senator from Wyoming: When we adopt this resolution cutting the budget four and a half or five billion dollars, whatever it may be, finally, following the conference, where we shall do the best we can, I shall regard it as a promise, so far as I personally am concerned, to see that the appropriations passed by the Senate do not exceed that amount.

I think it is a sound procedure. I think we should, at the beginning of the session, fix an over-all limit of Federal expenditures, and it seems to me from now on in connection with legislative proposals and issues that we must consider whether or not we are keeping what is in effect a promise to the people to reduce the expenses of the Government.

It is suggested that things may happen. Of course, things may happen. If we go to war, all bets are off. So far as the Grecian situation is concerned, I see no reason why it should have any effect on the total over-all figure we may set.

The budget already contains a total of $3,500,000,000 for expenditure abroad in one way or another during the next 12 months, beginning the 1st of July. Certainly, if we need some of these dollars more for one place than another, we can shift them somewhere else. I see no reason why any crisis which is now presented or discussed in the press should in any way increase the over-all amount already in the budget for foreign expenditures; in fact, I should expect such expenditures to be well below $3,500,000,000, including any money that may be requested for Greece, in the present conditions. So that I do not see that that changes in any way the situation.

I believe the adoption of this resolution will constitute a landmark. I believe that for the first time Congress is trying to exercise some thought about the over-all fiscal policy of the Government, and I believe that those who vote for this resolution are bound, as they go through the remainder of this session, to see that our appropriations are cut in every possible and feasible manner, in order that we may comply with what in effect is a promise made to the people of the United States.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I am interested in what the Senator has just said, as I am always interested in what he says. Was the Senator from Ohio one of those who were invited to the White House when the President called in a selected group?

Mr. TAFT. No; I was not at the White House then, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Was the Senator informed by some who were there of the substance of what took place at that meeting?

Mr. TAFT. No; I have not been informed. I have read the newspapers with care and great interest, and I certainly do not reject the proposals as set forth in the newspapers. I only say that so far as any sum has been mentioned, it is a sum that can easily be included in the total over-all foreign expenditures without increasing the total budget.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator. Then what the Senator from Ohio has said, and his recommendations and his convictions, reflect the import of what was stated to the group of Senators the other day by the President, as to the magnitude and the scope of the proposals which were then made?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, as I have read it in the newspapers.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there have been some votes upon the pending measure due to the unusual parliamentary situation now which may be wrongfully construed as to the position certain Senators have taken upon this concurrent resolution and amendments thereto. I voted for the four-and-one-half-billion-dollar cut in the budget, and I did so because I wanted to defeat the proposal for $6,000,000,000. But I took the position then that I could not ultimately support either proposal, in view of the fact that it was admitted by those who proposed a $6,000,000,000 cut in the budget and those who proposed a four-and-one-half-billion-dollar cut in the budget, that both would materially affect the item in the budget known as national defense. I voted for debt reduction. I am certain that such is necessary to a sound economy and a stable Nation. It is an amendment and now becomes a part of the resolution. It may appear that by voting "No" on the resolution, as amended, I am repudiating my vote for debt reduction. That, Mr. President, is not the case. I merely consider the national defense more important than any other items in the budget, or any amendment thereto.

Nothing in the affairs of mankind since the debates started has changed my viewpoint. The fact of the matter is that the affairs of the world, at least in some parts thereof, at this very moment, convince me more today than they did 10 days ago that I was correct in my point of view. In this hour of travail, I cannot under any circumstances, Mr. President, oppose a man like George Marshall or General Eisenhower on the national defense program. For fear that I will ultimately be misunderstood if I should vote for the four-and-one-half-billion-dollar cut, upon the question of defense alone, I cannot support the four-and-one-half-billion-dollar cut, much as I should like to. I hope when the time comes to review the budget as a whole that I may be in a position, when the evidence is before us from the Appropriation Committee, to look at it with a microscopic eye in order to cut down to the bone all waste and extravagance in Government.

Mr. President, no one knows what is going to happen tomorrow or next week or next month, and I disagree violently with those who say that the condition of the world should not have anything to do with our vote at this particular time upon a budget dealing with national defense. I am convinced that if we were to say to the world at this moment that we stand behind the President of the United States upon this one item, that we stand back of George Marshall, and General Eisenhower, and the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, we would do more to promote the best interests of this country and the world than any single thing we could do.

It is not necessary to take the Navy out in the ocean and sink it under the terms of a disarmament conference in order to destroy it as we did following World War I. There are other ways of destroying the Navy as well as the Army. They can be reduced to immobility here in the Senate Chamber or in the House of Representatives if we do not give them the appropriations which are necessary to keep them effective. It may be that a considerable amount of fat can be cut out in due course, but before that is done I want to hear the evidence upon that question. I want to read the reports upon it. I want to hear the arguments that are made with respect to it. I am not going to set myself up at this stage of the game as an economic strategist in the Senate to oppose men who ought to know best what is necessary for our defense, men who have been trained to serve the country in its defense, men who have lived with that question, men who are great Americans, men who did a superb job when the chips were down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution, as amended.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a letter which recently came to me which discusses the Federal budget and tax reduction and kindred matters. The letter is signed by about 35 of my constituents in Hershey, Pa., the majority of whom spent several years in the military service of their country.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HERSHEY JUNIOR COLLEGE,
Hershey, Pa., February 21, 1947.

DEAR SENATORS MYERS, MARTIN, AND REPRESENTATIVE KUNKEL: The economics class of the Hershey Junior College, Hershey, Pa., was discussing the issue of appropriations to the armed forces a few days ago, which is now before Congress. After thoroughly discussing the issues pro and con, we came to this conclusion: The budget should be cut in all spots where the amount of money can be lowered without harm to the Nation. On one occasion we disagreed with the Republican majority in Congress who favored a cut in the appropriations to the armed forces, and here we disagreed with Congress violently. The amount of money claimed to be needed for the Army and Navy should not be cut one cent. We feel that just as you have been chosen to represent our State in Congress because of your ability to make sound decisions and safeguard our Nation, we also feel that General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz have been selected for their positions for the same reason. They have both proven themselves in the recent war, and we heartily urge you to grant them whatever they deem necessary for the defense of our Nation.

The Congress now in session is advocating a reduction in the national debt. In this we heartily concur, but the way in which Congress proposes to make this reduction is a bit puzzling to us. According to the reports published in our local newspapers, Congress plans to cut the national debt by reducing the budget. This is sound economical thinking, but reading further we discover that Congress also proposes to cut taxes at the same time. This does not sound like good economic sense. By reducing the Government's income there is less money available for existing Government business. We realize, of course, that it is possible to still reduce the national debt under these circumstances if the appropriations to the military are drastically reduced, and we consider any cut lower than the amount asked for by Eisenhower and Nimitz to be drastic. The best solution, as we see it, is to reduce the budget wherever possible with the exception of the military, and at the same time retain the present tax rate or lower the rate somewhat less than the 20 percent now proposed.

We understand that by reducing the tax a favorable impression may be created upon the minds of the people in order to promote good will. The Senators and Representatives must be thought of favorably by their constituents or the Congressmen now in office will not be reelected. We know and you know that all politicians give consideration to the coming elections in regard to voting on legislation, but we feel that in so serious a matter as this you must vote for the defense of our Nation, not for the defense of your office.

After World War I the people and Congresses of this Nation were foolish enough to sacrifice our national welfare by cutting our armed forces to the bone—sometimes we feel they even penetrated the bone—and it was this short-sightedness which led to the disaster of Pearl Harbor. We implore you not to make this mistake again. Perhaps the reason for our great concern over this affair is the fact that a majority of us spent a number of years in the military service of our country in the recent war.

Once again we urge you to give the appropriations to the War and Navy Departments which General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz deem necessary for the proper defense of our country. We will be following the newspaper accounts of your activities closely and hope that we will see and hear of your favorable action soon.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, before a vote is had on the concurrent resolution I should like to make a statement. I have not expressed myself on the resolution, but I have arrived at the decision finally that I should not vote for the resolution. I think, as does the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], that the resolution amounts to a deception in that it has already created, and I am sure its final adoption will further create, the impression that if it does not in itself bring about an actual cut now, at least it is a binding promise that the budget must be cut. While I agree that cuts can be made in many departments and agencies of the Government, I do not think that at this time we know enough about the situation, and particularly the developments that are taking place in the world, to bind ourselves to a cut of any specific amount. I think the proposed action is premature, particularly in view of the report of ex-President Hoover and another report which while it has not been made public in all its details, has enabled us to form an impression concerning matters in the Near East.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I only wanted to point out that the figures contained in Mr. Hoover's report are if anything less than those recommended by the budget. They do not represent in any way an addition to the budget already submitted by the President of the United States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not understand that they are less than the amount we had anticipated for Germany.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I understand they are less than the amount we had anticipated for Germany.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The total figure was, I believe, just short of $1,000,000,000, and it was assumed that Great Britain was going to pay half of it. That is another point. The assumption with respect to Great Britain is one former President Hoover may not be warranted in making.

Mr. TAFT. President Hoover's figures were based on 18 months and not on 12 months, the period on which the budget is based. I think the Senator from Arkansas will find that in former President Hoover's statement of need there is absolutely nothing beyond what was originally contemplated. In fact I think his statement of need of the other countries is somewhat less than was already provided for in the budget.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What about the situation in Greece? Assuming that our obligations there would be in the neighborhood of $300,000,000; is that provided in the budget?

Mr. TAFT. The figures for food are already in the budget. That item has already been contemplated. Three hundred and fifty million dollars was in the budget for Greece, Italy, Austria, and for one or two minor requirements.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is the overall figure for those countries. As I understand, obligations with respect to Greece, which are being discussed, relate not only to food, but to economic loans, loans for rehabilitation, and so forth.

Mr. TAFT. The recent figure I have seen in the newspapers is probably $250,000,000 in addition to the food, and over a period probably closer to 2 years than 1 year, as I understand.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not question the Senator's understanding, but he says the figures are "as I understand them." I do not think our information is at all positive and conclusive on any of these matters. The principal point that is persuasive to me is that it has become evident within the last month, the last few weeks, the last few days, that the British Empire is much weaker than was generally supposed. I want to read one statement, by way of background from one of the great newspapers of the country, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I shall read but a paragraph. I have seen similar statements in a great many leading newspapers and also heard them made by commentators. This has given rise to the thought that we are premature in judging a question of basic policy. In other words, we shall be faced with the decision as to what course this country shall pursue, assuming conditions to be as bad as they now appear to be, in that area where the British Empire heretofore, for 150 years, has had great influence. We may differ as to the merits of that influence. Nevertheless, it has been a stabilizing influence; and if they withdraw we shall be then faced with a decision as to what our actions are to be. I think that a vote on this resolution prejudges that decision. It almost announces to the world that we are not going to have anything to do with it. Perhaps that will be the ultimate decision, but I do not think this is the time to make it, in a more or less casual manner, in voting upon our fiscal policy. Certainly that is an important question to be considered.

By way of background, let me read these three paragraphs:

The British predicament in Palestine is symptomatic of a far greater problem. That is the abdication of British imperialism. Whatever one may think of the faults and virtues of British rule, it has been the great factor in world order for more than a century and a half. Now Britain's will to rule is gone, and the world is faced with the vacuum of decaying empire. Complicating the problem is the fact that Britain's economic strength, which also has been a force for world order, is oozing out. What this means and what might be done about it is the subject of a thoughtful editorial in Life magazine, reprinted under the cartoon on this page today.

Britain's mantle would fall naturally to the United States, the strongest military and economic power in the world, but politically and temperamentally Americans are little interested in empire. Yet there is no such thing as a vacuum of power; unless the vacuum of power is filled by a British-American coalition or by a strengthened United Nations, the situation beckons irresistibly to people who have more vigorous purposes and intentions as to what they want the rest of the world to be like. The Russians are such a people.

America is not yet sufficiently awake to the significance of what is happening to the British Empire. It is time to give the matter thought. Mr. Bevin's ill temper of yesterday proceeded, one would think, less from irritation over the Palestine situation than from general anxiety over the terrific problems with which he and Mr. Attlee are having to wrestle. In a sense, they are America's problems, too.

I am not proposing to suggest any solution to that problem today. I do not know what the solution is. I do not think the administration has yet made up its mind, in consideration of all the implications of this situation, what it will recommend, or what it will try to do. But certainly one significant item in that consideration will be what the Congress does. If now, with so little information—practically no authentic information as to what that situation is—we by a large vote adopt this resolution, what will be the effect on the people of the United States and on the people of other countries? I think the first reaction of the people of other countries will be that we are not going to undertake the obligations which we have, in a sense, professed we were going to exercise in various parts of the world. I admit that we are faced with far greater obligations than we anticipated by reason of the apparent crumbling of the British Empire. I confess that I myself have misjudged in the past the ability of the British to rehabilitate themselves. It is evident that their machinery for production is much more obsolete and worn out by the efforts of the war than I had thought. The terrible winter has further strained their resources. I confess that I misjudged the situation even a year ago, in the discussion of the British loan.

However that may be, I think the effect of this resolution is, in a very real sense, for us to prejudge the situation and say that regardless of the conditions which face us, we are not going to spend any money, no matter how bad the situation may be. I do not care to be placed in that position. I agree that I am worried about this vote in the same sense that the minority leader is. It may be misconstrued. I certainly intend to cooperate in cutting down expenses in many of our domestic agencies. I can think of one or two that could be completely abolished with great savings. But I cannot commit myself to this resolution with the implication which I think it carries, that we are not going to exercise any additional influence or assume any additional obligations in the area of the world where the British have formerly operated, and where I think the future of western civilization is involved.

The budget is the first real proposal that has come from the Executive. After the last election we heard a great deal about cooperation. This resolution is a drastic challenge to the proposal of the Executive for a budget. I think it indicates, and will be so construed by the American people and by the people of other countries, the presence of a difficulty which has worried me considerably. I refer to the division of authority between the executive and the legislative, and the difficulty of their cooperating. It is quite true in our history that always following a strong Executive there has been a tendency for the Congress to try to take over, in a sense, the executive functions, to dominate the Executive. That is a tendency which is natural in our system. I believe that our actions in this instance also cause a great deal of uneasiness about the prospects for any effective cooperation between the executive and legislative. For these reasons I feel compelled to vote against the concurrent resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks an editorial entitled "World Crisis," published in the Washington Post of March 1, 1947.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD CRISIS

The canvass of the world crisis that the President and Secretary Marshall undertook Thursday with key legislators seems to have had a sobering effect on Capitol Hill. What Secretary Marshall reported has not been revealed except in respect to Greece. But he who runs can read the import of what Marshall must have said. The forces of disintegration are on the march in all the countries which share our belief in the kind of world order we seek to establish. Of the Big Five, three are obviously prostrate. A raging inflation, coupled with civil war, has China in its grip. Britain and France both are afflicted with an anemia which is disabling them for world responsibilities. Their sickness has made the harsh winter look like a malignant fate applying the last straw. One result is the announcement that the British must quit Greece unless American aid is forthcoming. Other areas of power are now in course of being vacated as these historical states with their far-flung interests seek to trim ends to their straitened means. Britain and France are hard put to it to cope with their internal troubles, let alone the commitments they have abroad. In these circumstances the fate of Europe is looming as an issue between Russia and America.

It is a bad situation when two titans with no common policy hold the keys to world power. But it is our firm belief that there is little to distinguish between the weakness of Russia and the weakness of our other allies. In other words, we are actually the only titan in the modern world. For instance, we reported the other day the first news of a famine in southern Russia of proportions surpassing even the dreadful famine of 1921. The difference between Russia and our other allies is that Russia is shrouded in mystery and held down by the police, but they are all in the same condition of economic weakness. The fact is that for some reason or other only known to Himself, God has limited His favors to America. But you would not realize this unique position we enjoy in the world of nations. We are great, but, as a result of our political set-up, we are great as a nation not as a state. Russia, on the contrary, is a great state but a weak nation. At one period it was sufficient for America to be great in Kansas. Nowadays, if we are to live up to our destinies, if we are not going to see the world fall apart, we must be as strong in western Europe as in Kansas.

That can be done by the exercise of leadership both in Congress and in the Executive. There has been no positive program for winning the peace after the most debilitating war in all history. We have allowed the Russians to block even our puny efforts at reconstruction. But, more importantly, we have concerned ourselves with what we have called our own affairs. The successful campaign to get rid of price controls put an intolerable burden on dollar-poor Europe dependent on buying in America. Last week Congress, in the interests of the candy and soft-drink people, wrung a bigger quota of sugar for America out of the world's supply. In a word, since the Eightieth Congress assembled we have had a run of peanut politics. So the first essential is for our leaders to live up to our greatness. This puts the burden on all the politicians fiddling with their fears about Lilienthal or chipping at the budget to be statesmen. A statesman thinks of the next generation, not the next election. And there will be no next generation if we do not grapple with our world responsibilities, that is to say, unless Congress gives the green light to the Executive to act audaciously.

A plan of action, executed in the spirit of system, would at least call for the protection of the bastions of power in all the accesses to our continent. While the world is sick, let us get over our paralyzing and foolish fears about intervention and about imperialism. Everywhere it must be known that the United States is the natural enemy of aggression. A job has to be done, and we are the only country that can do it. The task includes help for our friends so that they can help us in keeping order and making it stick through the United Nations. The relief program should be legislated swiftly, the World Bank can now attend to the French application for a loan, China should be aided to go back to silver standard, and the British should be so relieved of dollar commitments undertaken in behalf of peacemaking that we can tackle and bring back into full production the key resource of Europe, viz, the Ruhr. The gloom of the legislators on leaving the White House testified to a realization of the gravity of the world crisis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to House Concurrent Resolution 20, as amended. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the extensive debate on the proposed limitation of public expenditures for the coming fiscal year. I think it is a grand thing that we have had this debate. I myself favor a reduction of four and one-half billion dollars. I do so because I believe an attempt to cut Federal expenditures more than that, and indiscriminately, may endanger some of the policies and programs of the armed forces, which are very vital at this particular time. It might also endanger some of our commitments for the support of people who have felt the heel of war upon their necks, and to whom we must extend help and support.

It seems to me that the Reorganization Act intended to accomplish two things. First, it expressed the hope—because it could not be more than a hope, inasmuch as the job could not be accomplished between the 3d of January and the 15th of February—that there would be before the Congress a legislative budget which could be considered in connection with the executive budget. With the new Congress, I think we must frankly admit that that is an impossibility. With a budget as thick as the city directory of many of our large American cities, going into infinite detail, as it must, it is quite impossible for a committee of 102 members, or any number of members, to prepare a detailed legislative budget. I think the committee has done the best job that could be done under the circumstances in following out the second main purpose of the Reorganization Act, namely, to indicate what is to be the policy of the Congress when it considers the cost of government for the next year.

It seems to me that the adoption of this resolution would indicate clearly that the policy of the Congress is to reverse the trend that has been going on for 15 years, and to reduce, instead of to increase, the cost of the Federal Government. It seems to me that the resolution does exactly that, and that Senators who support the resolution indicate to their respective constituencies that it is their purpose and their desire, as well as their hope and judgment, that the cost of the Federal Government shall be decreased, that the trend of increasing debts, deficit spending, and the expansion of all sorts of Government agencies shall stop, and that march in the other direction shall begin.

No doubt many of us have received letters, telegrams, and petitions from the folk back home. I myself have received many of them, and I find in them an earnestness of purpose, a keen desire and apprehension for the welfare of their country which I think is most sincere and most earnest.

I desire to read a telegram which has already been read into the RECORD in the House. It comes from a vice president of the International Silver Co. of Meriden, Conn., one of the largest business concerns in the State of Connecticut. The International Silver Co., just as any other company, is looking for business. It wants to maintain employment. I am frank to say that during the depression years it did a good job, and during the war years it went from the silver business into the production of all sorts of material and equipment for the armed services. It performed patriotically and well.

The telegram, which is addressed to Hon. CHARLES A. HALLECK, House of Representatives, reads as follows:

Following Sinclair Weeks' telegram—

Who is also in the silver business—

Navy request here bid on approximately 140,000 pieces silver-plated hollow ware included in which 38,000 finger bowls and 39,000 plates for same. All in expensive design fluting and piercing and gadroon mounted border adding substantially to cost. Also included 23,000 salts and peppers with cut-glass linings. Cut-glass linings today are very expensive. Other items also. Understand War Assets Administration offering surplus items made for Navy during war apparently good for current use. My guess is that is just sample of operations which makes me believe we can have adequate national defense at less than the cost called for in the budget.

Mr. President, there is a company which was invited to bid on this exceedingly large order, but so earnestly and sincerely does that company believe in debt reduction and tax reduction and in the general reduction of the cost of the Government that it is willing to lay this matter before the Congress, knowing that if the procedure indicated is adopted it will lose business. Nevertheless the company sincerely and earnestly believes that there must be a reduction in the cost of government in the United States.

I believe that Members of Congress who support the resolution are just as earnest and sincere as is this businessman, as are hundreds of thousands, yes, millions, of other American citizens who believe that there must be a change in the trend that has been going on for all these years.

I shall close, Mr. President, by saying that I am aware, as are most other Senators, of our responsibilties abroad. I know that we shall have to spend a great deal of money there. I also know that the solvency of the United States of America is not only vitally important to us, but also to the rest of the world. I think we must take some action now which will indicate that we cannot be bled white. We must establish here a firm going, productive economy out of which to produce the wealth which will make it possible for us to help the unfortunate peoples of the world.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to House Concurrent Resolution 20, as amended.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise without criticism of any Senator for the way he may vote on the pending resolution, or of any of the reasons he may assign for his vote. It is a question on which each Senator must make up his mind. I realize the importance of what has just been said by the Senator from Connecticut and other Senators. One of the greatest contributions we can make to the general welfare is to reduce expenditures. I think that every Member of the Congress, regardless of the side of the Chamber on which he may sit, believes that he would like to reduce every unnecessary expense and eliminate all waste and extravagance, wherever it may be. I agree wholeheartedly with the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] earlier today with reference to efficiency in government. Certainly we all desire that greatly, and will work and cooperate in every way possible to bring about a more effective and a more efficient government.

My objection to the pending resolution is that it does not provide any information whatever as to what expenditures are to be reduced, but calls for a general reduction of $4,500,000,000. It has been said on the floor of the Senate that it is only a "windy" resolution and that it binds no one and that it will not affect appropriations yet to come. That is my objection to it. If I say to the people of America that the expenses of Government are to be cut $4,500,000,000, then, regardless of where that cut may come, regardless of how much it hurts, I shall keep my promise. It may be called a New Year's resolution; it may be called a "windy" resolution; but the unalterable fact remains that the Senate of the United States in adopting this resolution is saying to the people of America that regardless of the necessity for armed forces, regardless of the farm program, regardless of capital investments to be made in the West, regardless of demands now made in connection with foreign affairs, and which may be made tomorrow, and to which none of us can give an intelligent answer today—in the face of those uncertainties we are saying to the American people that regardless of responsibility, regardless of commitments, regardless of duty, regardless of obligation, we shall cut the budget by $4,500,000,000.

Mr. President, I shall make no such promise today or at any other time. I say to the people of America and to members of the majority party who are so anxious to cut expenditures, show me where any reasonable reduction can be made, and I shall vote for such reduction. But I will not promise something which I have no idea whatever that I can perform.

Therefore, Mr. President, regardless of how other Senators may vote or what their reasons may be for so voting, I shall vote "no" on the resolution.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have heard with much interest the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. I arrive at a conclusion exactly contrary to his, and I shall vote this afternoon for the concurrent resolution as it has been amended. As I see it, it does two things which require that my vote should be cast for it.

In the first place, the resolution declares that it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that expenditures during the fiscal year 1948 should not exceed $33,000,000,000. Mr. President, the significance of that declaration of judgment, based upon presently available information, arises in largest part from the fact that the budget of the President of the United States is $4,500,000,000 greater, in point of expenditures, than the figure stated in the resolution. So I submit that it is wholesome, as indicated in the eloquent remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] a few moments ago, that there should be a ringing declaration to the Nation that it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information—the same information as that which the President has before him—that the expenditures of the Federal Government can be cut $4,500,000,000.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I wonder whether the Senator recalls the time, 12, 13, or 14 years ago, when in a political campaign the expenditures of Government and the apparently growing increase in bureaucracy were quite an issue; and I wonder whether the Senator further recalls that at that time the successful Presidential candidate advocated the reduction of taxes by 25 percent and the reduction in the number of Government employees. The point I wish to make is that after that candidate was successful in the election, we saw the national debt pyramid from approximately $16,000,000,000 to approximately $44,000,000,000, and we saw bureaucracy grow to unimaginable proportions. Therefore, does not the Senator think that, instead of giving mere lip service to the desired reduction of the debt, it is high time that we take some positive and understandable and determinable steps toward such reduction?

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator, and I heartily concur both in his recollection and in his declaration of the advisability of the course upon which we are about to embark.

Mr. President, in the second place this resolution comes forward, as amended, through the courage and ability of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], coupled with the unanimous recognition by the Senate of the soundness of his amendment. In that respect, the resolution accomplishes a second purpose, namely, the declaration that—

It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

Mr. President, those two ringing declarations contained in the resolution, as amended, to my mind require that my vote be cast in favor of the amended resolution.

I am not unmindful of the fact that several days ago the Senate had under consideration the so-called Wherry amendment, which declares:

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that all proceeds from the transfer or disposition of property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts should be applied toward reduction of the public debt.

Mr. President, I regard it as a mistake that the Senate did not adopt the Taft amendment to the Wherry amendment, for in my judgment the Wherry amendment provides that whatever may be the amount of the surplus property proceeds so described such amount shall be a cumulative addition to the $2,600,000,000. But, although I think the Senate made a mistake in not adopting the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the Wherry amendment, nevertheless, I do not regard that mistake—if it be one, as I think it is—as being of such a nature or significance as to justify a refusal on my part—I speak for myself only—to vote for the resolution, as now amended, which contains the two declarations to which I have referred, namely, the declaration of judgment that, based upon presently available information, the expenditures should not exceed $33,000,000,000, representing $4,500,000,000 less than the Presidential estimate, and the further declaration that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, I now address myself briefly to the proposition discussed a few moments ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. As I understood his remarks, the Senator from Arkansas said he could not possibly support this resolution because he thinks it is a fraud upon the public. I understood the distinguished Senator from New Mexico to take a somewhat similar and perhaps identical position. He undertook to state that the resolution may be, and has been declared to be, a "windy resolution," and that he is not standing for any "New Year's resolutions."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a moment, although my time is limited.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say that I should like to have quotation marks placed around both those expressions, for they were not mine. I was quoting others.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well; I thank the Senator. He has quoted those expressions; but I do not concur in them. To my mind, no deception whatsoever is practiced upon the people of the United States by the adoption of the pending resolution. To my mind the resolution speaks for itself. I may differ in some respects with some of my brethren on this side of the aisle in their construction of what the resolution does, but the only way I know how to understand language is to consider what the language is. So, Mr. President, let us consider what the resolution is. What is it? It is a recital. This is what the country is being told by the Senate of the United States by means of this resolution:

> That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $33,000,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year.

To that is added the language of the Knowland amendment:

> It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

Mr. President, this resolution, as thus amended, recites all that the Congress could recite. We cannot stand here as prophets and undertake to determine what the needs of the Nation will be during the next fiscal year. We cannot undertake to say here that a great national disaster might require the expenditure of $500,000,000 of additional money, or that no such disaster will occur. All we can do, all that the country can expect us to do, all that any good businessman would do, all that any statesman would do, is to express the present judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information. That is what we have expressed in this resolution. We do not go to the country with any so-called windy resolutions. We do not go to the country with any so-called New Year's resolutions. We express in careful, deliberately chosen and well-chosen language our present judgment, based upon presently available information.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the fact that in the La Follette-Monroney Act it is provided that—

> The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year.

I dare say there is not a Member of this body who regards the expression "fixing the maximum amount" as making it obligatory upon the Congress in all events to confine itself to the figure so fixed.

An illustration was presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] in regard to the possibility of a war. I am not in any sense prophesying war, but pointing out that if we should have war, of course the figure I give would have to go by the board.

I undertake to say that in voting for the concurrent resolution I shall have no qualms of conscience if I should find, during this year, that great internal improvements of some kind shall make it advisable, from the standpoint of the general welfare, to go even beyond the figure we here express as our judgment. I shall have no qualm of conscience for voting for such a measure as I shall deem to be proper and needed for the general welfare of the United States of America.

I say that there is no deception of the public in the language thus used, notwithstanding the provision of the La Follette-Monroney Act which I have read. Congress is interpreting the meaning of that language by going no further than to express its judgment based, as it is, upon presently available information.

Mr. President, it is the earnest desire of the Senate, I believe, to keep within these figures. My judgment is, we will exercise every possible effort, within the confines of good judgment, within the confines of the welfare of our Nation, to keep within the figures. There is nothing "windy," to quote again, nothing in the nature of a "New Year's resolution," however made or even assumed, that exists within the language of the concurrent resolution.

So, Mr. President, I close by a repetition of the two points in the concurrent resolution which, to my mind, make it obligatory that I should vote for it. First, there is the fact that it contains a declaration of judgment based upon presently available information that the expenditures of the Federal Government in the year 1948 shall not exceed an amount four and a half billion dollars below that fixed in the executive budget. Second, that there is an equally clear and unmistakable statement of the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures shall be applied toward reduction of the public debt during the said fiscal year.

Mr. President, with principles such as these, with sound business judgment such as this embodied in the concurrent resolution, I undertake to say that the flag of our Nation will be carried farther, to greater and greater heights, that the duties of patriotism will be the better subserved, by our adhering to the concurrent resolution, by our voting for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution, as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution, as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McMAHON (when his name was called) voted "present."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is necessarily absent on state business. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY.] If present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea," and the Senator from Montana would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. The Senator from New Hampshire is necessarily absent. If present and voting, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], who is necessarily absent, has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea," and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent. If present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is paired on this vote with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If present, the Senator from Washington would vote "nay" and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. If present, the Senator from Montana would vote "nay" and the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. If present, the Senator from New York would vote "nay" and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

I announce further that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 20, voting "present" 1, as follows:

So the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $33,000,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year. It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that all proceeds from the transfer or disposition of property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts should be applied toward reduction of the public debt.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. HAYDEN conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent the following routine business was transacted:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION REVOLVING FUND, VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend paragraph 8 of part VII, Veterans' Regulation Numbered 1 (a), as amended, to authorize an appropriation of $3,000,000 as a revolving fund in lieu of $1,500,000 now authorized, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

A letter from the Administrator of the National Housing Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL DEFENSE HOUSING

A letter from the Administrator of the National Housing Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 301 of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes" (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORT OF OPERATIONS OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

A letter from the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the operations of that bank as of the close of business December 31, 1946 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Joint Memorial 7

"Whereas Oregon agriculture again faces the possibilities of an agriculture depression caused by surplus production; and

"Whereas a program of planned scarcity is neither an economic or sensible solution to the problem; and

"Whereas increased consumption of agricultural products is the sound method of meeting the problem of surplus production of agricultural products; and

"Whereas the Seventy-ninth Congress enacted the Hope-Flannagan Act, Public Law 733, which provides for a marketing research program to develop new and greater markets for agricultural products; and

"Whereas the act authorizes substantial annual appropriations for marketing research; and

"Whereas marketing research is of special interest to the State of Oregon because of the large variety of specialty crops it produces: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be urged to appropriate the funds authorized by the Hope-Flannagan bill for agricultural marketing research at the earliest possible date; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be authorized and directed to forward immediately certified copies of this joint memorial to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the members of the Oregon congressional delegation and the chairmen of House and Senate agricultural committees."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"House Joint Memorial 9

"To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas there are now pending in the Congress of the United States of America certain measures designed to abolish the present method of making in lieu tax payments to States and their local taxing subdivisions on account of national forest lands and other real property owned by the United States, and to substitute therefor a system of annual payments based on equitable percentages of the fair value of such lands; and

"Whereas such payments in lieu of taxes under existing Federal statutes are based on varying percentages of the receipts, if any, derived from the administration of such property, which receipts vary greatly from year to year and provide a very uncertain source of revenue which the local taxing subdivisions of the State of Oregon are unable to anticipate or forecast with any degree of accuracy in order that they may be included in their budgets in conformity with local constitutional and statutory requirements: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and it hereby is memorialized, and this Forty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon does hereby petition that honorable body to enact such remedial legislation and to place in operation a system of payments in lieu of taxes based on the fair value of national forest lands and other real property of the United States as soon as circumstances will permit; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be and he hereby is directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative therein representing the people of the State of Oregon."

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

Two joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Memorial 3

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States that all presently proposed Federal irrigation projects and all such which are proposed in the future, for construction in the State of Wyoming, be continued in all stages under the direct supervision of the United States Bureau of Reclamation

"Whereas the United States Bureau of Reclamation has had many years of, and the only, experience in initiation, construction, maintenance, and development of all Federal irrigation projects in the West, and in such matters has been and is required by laws of the Nation, to comply with all affecting State laws: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Wyoming Legislature (its house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby memorialized, to promptly and effectively enact such legislation as may be appropriate to vest in said Bureau beyond any possibility of judicial doubt or executive direction concerning congressional intent, continued and direct supervision of the initiation, construction, maintenance, and development of all Federal irrigation projects wholly or partially within the State of Wyoming, now or in the future proposed, consistent with objectives of the so-called Pick-Sloan plan and opposed to objectives of such plans as the so-called Murray bill, S. 555, which failed for proper cause in the Seventy-ninth session of the United States Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this joint memorial be sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of the United States Congress and to the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, the Honorable EDWARD V. ROBERTSON, and the Honorable FRANK A. BARRETT, Senators and Representatives, respectively, in said Congress, from Wyoming.

"Approved February 24, 1947.

"LESTER C. HUNT,
"Governor."

"Senate Joint Memorial 4

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to proceed with the development of the Colorado River in the upper basin States

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming:

"Whereas the development of the Colorado River in the upper basin States, consisting of Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, is of foremost importance to the future development and general welfare of said States and of the western United States; and

"Whereas the Upper Colorado River Basin Compact Commission has been appointed and is presently engaged in negotiating a compact for the allocation of the waters of the Colorado River apportioned to the upper basin by the Colorado River compact; and

"Whereas it now appears unlikely that any compact can be executed and submitted to the legislatures of said States for approval during the legislative term of 1947; and

"Whereas it has been recommended to the Secretary of the Interior by the United States Bureau of Reclamation that 'the States of the Colorado River Basin, acting separately or jointly, recommend for construction, as the next stage of development, a group of projects, the stream-flow depletion of which will assuredly fall within the ultimate allocation of Colorado River water which may be made to the individual States'; and

"Whereas the construction of such projects need not await the execution of the compact and may in fact proceed immediately without prejudice to any State or to the writing of a compact: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming:

"1. That consistent with the policy of permitting each State to proceed with the development of the Colorado River and the use of the water so long as that State does not construct projects which will call for a stream-flow depletion in excess of that which assuredly will fall within the amount that will ultimately be allotted to that State from the waters of the Colorado River, the Congress of the United States be memorialized and urged to appropriate funds for the construction of projects within each of the upper basin States to enable each of said States to use beneficially waters which will assuredly be ultimately allocated to each State.

"LESTER C. HUNT,
"Governor."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, identical with the foregoing, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.)

By Mr. CORDON:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Joint Memorial 10

"Whereas the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, provides, among other things, for the readjustment of war veterans of World War II by a plan of education and training which makes available to men who are attending school or receiving on-the-job training a payment from the Federal Government of $65 a month to single men and $90 a month to married men; and

"Whereas Public Law 679, which amended the original act, became effective in August, 1946, and placed a limit on the gross earnings, including the payment from the Government, of a veteran receiving this benefit in the amount of $175 for single men and $200 for married men; and

"Whereas this benefit, especially as it pertained to men receiving 'on-the-job training' and apprentices, was intended to supply a total payment somewhat approaching a journeyman's pay during the training period; and

"Whereas the amounts thus provided are inadequate considering living costs and the reduction has created hardships for those involved in the program; and

"Whereas while a reasonable ceiling should be placed on gross earnings, those as established are too low: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be urged to increase the limit to $250 for single trainees and apprentices and $300 for married trainees and apprentices."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"House Joint Memorial 11

"Joint memorial memorializing Congress to set aside certain tracts, within the present boundaries of Vancouver Barracks, as a national monument under the direction of the National Park Service "To the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, and to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas Vancouver, Wash., is one of the oldest cities of the western part of the United States, having been established by the Hudson's Bay Co., in the year 1825, with Fort Vancouver thereafter becoming the center of all business, government, agriculture, commerce, education, culture, and civilization on the Pacific slope of these United States; and

"Whereas Vancouver Barracks, presently a United States military reservation located in Vancouver, Wash, contains the site of this historic landmark; and

"Whereas the restoration of old Fort Vancouver is now mandatory in order to preserve for present and future generations this shrine of early American history, ranking equally in historical importance with those already perpetuated by the Nation on the Atlantic coast of the United States; and

"Whereas the preservation of this historic shrine transcends local interest and concern and is of historic value and essence to each and every citizen of the United States of America; and

"Whereas the probable cost of the restoration of this landmark is beyond the financial means of local, State, and regional government and rightfully should be borne by all of the citizens of this Nation, they being joint inheritors of the history and civilization here begun; and

"Whereas failure to keep and preserve for all time this historical site would constitute incalculable loss to all citizens of this Republic; and

"Whereas Vancouver Barracks is now surplus to needs of the War Department and is to be disposed of as surplus property, thereby making immediate and effective action imperative: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, do hereby respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States:

"That the following tracts within the present boundaries of Vancouver Barracks be forever set aside as a national monument under direction of the National Park Service.

"1. That area south of what is known as Officers' Row to East Fifth Street and from the present eastern boundary of Vancouver Barracks Military Reservation to McLoughlin Road; and

"2. That area within 200 feet of what is known as the First Apple Tree now enclosed within a chain fence; and

"3. The building known as 'General Grant's quarters,' and

"4. The Military Cemetery; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be placed in the hands of the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, the Members of Congress, and in those of all persons, corporations, groups, or agencies interested in the preservation for posterity of this their rightful heritage."

By Mr. LANGER:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Concurrent Resolution G

"Whereas nine States of this Nation, Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Navada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, and Washington, are so-called community-property States and have laws providing that the income from property and earnings of both husband and wife is community income and belongs to each equally; and

"Whereas in these States each spouse may report one-half of the income to the Federal Government in separate income-tax returns and thus secure the benefit of income-tax savings, thus giving to about 21,000,000 people in the United States a tax privilege which is denied to the remainder of the population; and

"Whereas this situation in these times, when so large a burden of taxation rests upon us, is intolerable; and

"Whereas if this condition be not corrected, many of those in the middle and higher brackets will be lured away from North Dakota to establish their homes in one of the community-property States; and

"Whereas the privileges which the citizens of these community-property States enjoy cannot be taken away because of the laws on their own statute books which the Federal Government recognizes; and

"Whereas the inequality can be cured by a Federal law providing for a Nation-wide method of division of family incomes for income-tax purposes, which method is now under consideration by certain officials of the United States Treasury: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein), That we do hereby protest and condemn the aforesaid unfair condition which exists with respect to Federal income taxes, and that we urge the speedy amendment of our Federal income-tax laws to provide for a Nation-wide method of division of family incomes for income-tax purposes; that we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to do all in their power to secure such an amendment and correct this unfair situation; be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house is hereby authorized to forward a copy of this resolution to each Member of the congressional delegation from the State of North Dakota; also a copy to the Secretary of the Treasury, to the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, chairman of the Finance Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

Two concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"House Concurrent Resolution D

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide funds for the payment of a 30-cent bonus on all wheat produced in 1945, on which a 30-cent bonus has not been paid

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein):

"Whereas the United States Government paid a bonus of 30 cents per bushel on wheat marketed between April 19, 1946, and May 25, 1946, on so-called famine relief wheat; and

"Whereas the payment of this bonus was unfair and unjust to all those farmers who had marketed their wheat prior to the declaration of the bonus, in that:

"1. Government news releases and reports issued during the fall of 1945 and the winter of 1946 indicated that the effective ceiling prices on wheat would be maintained and that there would be no benefit to the farmer in holding his wheat.

"2. The farmers were repeatedly urged by the United States Government, its agencies and representatives, to market their wheat so as to make it available for starving foreign peoples.

"3. The price ceilings, maintained during the time that the farmers were so urged to market their wheat, were below parity as defined by Congress.

"4. The bonus payments on wheat were made to those farmers who needed the bonus the least, and those farmers who had to sell their wheat to live and maintain themselves and their families and pay debts received no bonus.

"5. The farmers who sold their wheat prior to the bonus either because they had to or were induced to do so by propaganda, must help pay for the cost of the 30-cent bonuses already paid through taxation.

"6. Large subsidy payments were made to industry during the war in the form of cost-plus contracts, and contracts based on noncompetitive costs of production.

"7. Industry in this period of rising prices obtained bonuses by the simple method of holding their products off the market and creating shortages.

"8. Retroactive bonuses were granted to labor.

"9. What is in substance retroactive bonuses was granted to industry by the Ruml plan of income-tax payments and the Tax Adjustment Act of 1945: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota respectively memorialize Congress to provide Federal funds for the payment of a 30-cent bonus on all wheat produced during the year of 1945; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the United States Senate, and United States House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of North Dakota in the Congress of the United States."

"House Concurrent Resolution E

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress for Federal appropriations for immediate construction of the Heart River project, including the Heart Butte and Dickinson Reservoirs, the Sheyenne Dam, and other portions of the Missouri-Souris project, all integral parts of the coordinated plan for Missouri Basin development, as authorized by the Congress in Public Law 254

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein):

"Whereas the Congress of the United States in the Flood Control Act passed December 22, 1944, provided for a comrehensive development of the Missouri River Basin; and

"Whereas one of the large reservoirs in connection therewith is located in the State of North Dakota, justifiable primarily for navigation, power, and flood control; and

"Whereas said act provides for the diversion of Missouri River waters from the Fort Peck Reservoir into western, central, and eastern North Dakota for irrigation and reclamation; and

"Whereas such diversion is desperately needed for rehabilitation of Devils Lake and providing for the domestic and commercial needs of such cities, among others, as Jamestown, Valley City, Enderlin, Fargo, Moorhead, Grand Forks, and East Grand Forks; and

"Whereas surveys and other necessary preliminary work have been completed on both the Dickinson and Heart Butte Reservoirs to justify letting of construction contracts on said projects; and

"Whereas the Sheyenne Dam is a part of said basin-development plan and necessary both to effect such conversion and reclamation and to permit of the irrigation of large acreage in eastern Montana and northwestern and central North Dakota; and

"Whereas $200,000,000 have been authorized for initial stages of construction in connection with said Missouri Basin development: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein), That Congress and the Federal agencies having said development in hand be, and hereby are, memorialized and petitioned to provide or make available the necessary funds for immediate construction of the Dickinson and Heart Butte Dams and such portions of the Missouri-Souris project as have reached construction stage, and in particular the Sheyenne Dam, this being the regulatory reservoir effecting diversion to the Devils Lake Basin and the restoration of Devils Lake and the James, Sheyenne, and Red River of the North, where water is sorely needed for human consumption and industrial development, especially in the cities hereinbefore referred to; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Chief of the Corps of Army Engineers for this district, and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, as well as the chairmen of the Appropriations, Irrigation, and Rivers and Harbors Committees of the House and Senate of the United States. That copies be likewise sent to the secretary of the National Reclamation Association and to North Dakota's delegation in Congress."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"House Joint Memorial 5

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas the Congress, in furtherance of the prosecution of World War II, enacted the War Powers Act granting to the President of the United States extraordinary powers, which powers are wholly unwarranted in peacetime; and

"Whereas the said War Powers Act among other things provided that the President of the United States might by Executive order transfer the duties of Government agencies from one to another, but expressly provided that the powers granted therein could be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the war; and

"Whereas the President of the United States on January 16, 1942, promulgated Executive Order No. 9024 whereby there was created a Government agency known as the War Production Board; and

"Whereas by Executive Order No. 9040, promulgated on January 24, 1942, the primary duty of the said War Production Board was to "exercise general direction over the war procurement and production program," and said order further provided that the chairman of said board may exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by such order and in such manner as he might determine, and that his decisions are final; and

"Whereas on October 4, 1945, long after the unconditional surrender of our enemies, the President of the United States promulgated Executive Order No. 9638 whereby he abolished the said War Production Board, and created another Government agency designated as the Civilian Production Administration, and conferred upon it all the extraordinary war emergency powers theretofore possessed by the said War Production Board; and

"Whereas the said Civilian Production Administration has since purported and is now purporting to exercise power and authority over every person and corporation throughout the United States who undertake to erect or repair a building or structure at a cost of even a nominal sum, and among other things has decreed all such construction to be unlawful unless first authorized by such Civilian Production Administration; and

"Whereas government by such Executive fiat is wholly contrary to the American system of constitutional government, and is not within the powers delegated to the Federal Government by the several States of the Union, and such exercise of authority by a Federal agency over the lives of the people of this State has not increased housing facilities, but on the contrary has created more chaos and confusion, and the assertion of such authority by said agency, and the exercise of such extraordinary powers by the President of the United States should be promptly terminated: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and it hereby is memorialized and requested, and this forty-fourth legislative assembly of the State of Oregon does hereby petition that honorable body, to abolish the said Civilian Production Administration, and to promptly terminate all the functions and activities assumed by said agency pursuant to the aforesaid Executive order, or any other order or statute; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be and hereby is directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress and to each Senator and Representative therein representing the people of the State of Oregon."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Joint Memorial 2

"Joint memorial to the President and the Congress of the United States to extend the present Commodity Credit Corporation purchase program to cover the entire 1947 domestic wool clip, and to enact such legislation as will provide a long-range price-stabilization plan for domestic wool

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Twenty-ninth Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby respectfully represent that—

"Whereas the present supply of wool within the United States greatly exceeds the stocks normally required to supply the commercial demands of the trade; and

"Whereas this surplus has been created through the cumulation of a large war stock pile and through the heavy importations of foreign wools; and

"Whereas this importation of foreign wools continues to aggravate this situation, and tends to reduce the consumption of present stock piles of wool and the current domestic clip, and causes an unstable economy within the industry; and

"Whereas a continuing policy on the part of the State Department extending the program of the reciprocal trade agreements will further reduce the tariff protection given the industry by the Congress of the United States and cause further economic hardship and hazard within the wool industry, and facilitate the importation of foreign wools: Be it therefore

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, That the Congress of the United States enact such legislation as is necessary and instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to extend the present Commodity Credit Corporation purchase plan to cover the entire 1947 domestic wool clip; and be it further

"Resolved, That the President and the Congress of the United States enact a long-range wool-price-stabilization program to preserve the interests of the domestic sheep-growing industry on a plane commensurate with the American standard of living and to effectuate this program; that there be established a wool branch within the Department of Agriculture to study, prepare, and administer such program; be it further

"Resolved, That the President of the United States instruct the Secretary of State to cease the present reciprocal trade-agreement program relative to importation of wool."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.)

By Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

S. 445. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, by providing for the certification of batches of drugs composed wholly or partly of any kind of streptomycin, or any derivative thereof, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 45).

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—REPORT ON FEDERAL SUBSIDIES AND FEDERAL GRANTS-IN-AID TO STATES (S. DOC. NO. 13)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, transmitting, pursuant to law, an additional report of the joint committee on the subject of Federal subsidies and Federal grants-in-aid to States.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like the RECORD to show that the information included in the report is based upon research and compilations conducted over the past year by the committee with the assistance and cooperation of the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget.

In presenting the report I invite public attention generally, and congressional attention in particular, to the following summary of the contents, and I shall take the liberty of interposing a few personal observations of the chairman which are outside the formal text.

THREE AND ONE-HALF BILLION DOLLARS A YEAR

As chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures I am submitting to the Senate today an additional committee report on Federal Subsidies and Federal Grants-In-Aid to States which shows that we are subsidizing business, agriculture, States, and individuals with more than $3,500,000,000 a year in Federal money.

Federal subsidies to business and agriculture totaled $13,000,000,000 in the years from 1934 to 1946. Federal grants-in-aid to States and payments within States totaled $35,000,000,000 in the same period. With allowances for overlapping items, the total Federal subsidy bill since 1934 amounts to $43,000,000,000, an average of about three and a third billion dollars a year. The amounts for the past 2 years have been in excess of the average, and there are indications of pressure for continuation of high-level subsidies which, once on, usually become standing commitments.

FOUR TYPES OF SUBSIDIES

Federal subsidies fall generally into four categories: Business, agriculture, grants-in-aid to States, and payments within States, which usually are in the nature of relief to individuals frequently passing through State or local channels.

The 287-page report includes a complete listing of all subsidies to business and agriculture for the years 1934 through 1946 along with estimates for 1947 and 1948, with the annual totals of these two types aggregating $311,162,000 in 1934, $727,976,000 in 1935, $595,865,000 in 1936, $516,968,000 in 1937, $366,171,000 in 1938, $725,053,000 in 1939, $997,978,000 in 1940, $869,947,000 in 1941, $748,029,000 in 1942, $1,114,608,000 in 1943, $2,044,373,000 in 1944, $2,124,284,000 in 1945, $2,468,506,000 in 1946.

Subsidies through grants-in-aid to States and payments within States rose continually until reduced by the exigencies of war, and now that shortages in requirements for State projects are easing, a rise in these categories threatens again. A summary of the report's tabulations in these two categories shows annual totals aggregating $1,826,012,000 in 1934, $2,221,313,000 in 1935, $2,171,861,000 in 1936, $3,743,175,000 in 1937, $2,952,068,000 in 1938, $4,420,564,000 in 1939, $3,922,290,000 in 1940, $3,476,396,000 in 1941, $3,225,636,000 in 1942, $2,729,651,000 in 1943, $1,762,110,000 in 1944, $1,353,427,000 in 1945, $1,290,107,000 in 1946.

In consideration of these figures, together, allowance must be made for overlapping among them, probably to the extent of about 10 percent. This is necessary, because there is a lack of standardized definitions within the Federal agencies having to work with them.

STATE OF THE STATES

Supplementing its information on grants-in-aid to States, the report shows that the States are able to carry a greater portion of the expenditures for State functions which are now shared with the Federal Government.

In 1940 the total gross debt of the States was $3,642,000,000. The latest available figures for 1945 show this total debt was reduced to $2,471,000,000, or 32 percent. Along with the debt figures the report shows that in 1945 the States had a combined total of $1,188,000,000 in their general fund balances. Yet there is no indication that the Federal Government intends to return to the States more control over matters which are essentially of State and local concern.

EXPENDITURE CURTAILMENT POSSIBILITIES

The report itself is strictly factual. In view of the apparent need by both the legislative and executive branches of the Government for all data suggesting expenditure curtailment possibilities, publication of the report was expedited to the exclusion of recommendations which customarily accompany the committee's reports.

However, as chairman of the reporting committee, I am taking the liberty of making some personal observations at this time which may be considered for those who may be interested.

1. LACK OF APPORTIONMENT UNIFORMITY

Under examination the various methods of apportioning subsidy aid are revealed to be so lacking in related uniformity as to cry for reappraisal.

2. EXAMINATION OF SUBSIDY POLICIES URGENT

The report indicates conclusively that the need is urgent for a thorough examination of any or all Federal subsidy policies which may exist and their effect upon the basic economic maladjustments.

3. PERTINENT BUDGET REDUCTION DATA

The wealth of data contained in the report constitutes a vast field of pertinent information which would aid in efforts to reduce Federal expenditures.

4. APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEES' JOB

It occurs to me that the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate could profitably spend the time in the current deliberations on appropriation bills necessary to develop fundamental information with respect to Federal subsidy policies and, if possible, eliminate or reduce nonessential Federal subsidy expenditures. If this could not be done in some cases without additional legislation, I would hope that the committees would recommend the necessary legislation through proper channels. Such a course by the Appropriations Committees would afford a means of a practicable and immediate beginning on the problem, and the information they develop would be a good beginning for a more complete study which I hope will be started immediately.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed as a Senate document, as requested by the Senator from Virginia.

PRINTING OF REPORT RELATING TO DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN AIRPORTS (S. DOC. NO. 14)

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Department of Commerce, transmitted to the Senate under date of February 28, 1947, dealing with the program for class 4 and larger airports under the enabling legislation of last year be printed as a Senate document. The program for classes 1, 2, and 3 airports comes under a different provision. I think it has already been printed as a Senate document. Senators should bear in mind that inquiries regarding airports may require reference to the two documents before an adequate answer can be given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 749. A bill to amend the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands of the United States to provide for a Resident Commissioner from the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bill and joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. 235. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to convey to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., an easement for construction and operation of a storm drain in and under certain Government-owned lands situated in that city;

S. J. Res. 33. Joint resolution to amend the act of August 9, 1946 (Public Law 711, 79th Cong.), for the purpose of allowing the Philadelphia National Shrines Park Commission additional time in which to prepare and to submit its report to the Congress; and

S. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution to authorize the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district, Arizona, to drill, equip, and acquire wells for use on the San Carlos irrigation project.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes.

SELECTIVE SERVICE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 162)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1622.)

RULING ON REFERENCE OF BILL PROPOSING UNIFICATION OF ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the previous unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, the Chair now lays before the Senate the President's message and the bill relating to the Army and Navy merger. The Chair also now rules that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Armed Services. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, after the reference of the so-called merger bill to the Committee on Armed Services last Wednesday, and after the agreement to the unanimous-consent request that the bill and the decision of the Chair lie upon the table until the disposal of the budget resolution, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments met and discussed the situation. It appeared to us that this bill was a reorganization-of-Government bill of great importance and, under the Legislative Reorganization Act which was passed at the last session of Congress, it clearly should be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

However, we recognize the fact that there is a great deal in the bill referring to the common defense generally; that there is much matter in it that is of a military nature which in the ordinary course of events might well be considered by the Committee on Armed Services. Therefore we proposed to the Committee on Armed Services that unanimous consent be sought to have the bill referred first to the Committee on Armed Services, which would conduct hearings on it. We requested that a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be authorized to sit in on such hearings and to report back to the full committee. We then proposed that when the bill was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Armed Services it be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, so that our committee could perform its duties as required by the law.

Our proposal, however, was not received with favor by the Committee on Armed Services, but was rejected. In view of that fact we feel that we must appeal from the ruling of the Chair in referring the bill to the Committee on Armed Services, and leave it to the Senate to decide to which committee the bill shall be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont appeals from the decision of the Chair. Therefore the pending question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The Senator from Vermont is further recognized.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, let me say at the outset that no one can deny that we have a problem relating to the achievement of maximum coordination among our armed services or that the strengthening of our defenses is necessary until such time as the nations of the world can agree upon a general disarmament program.

It is entirely probable that legislative action is required in order to effect such maximum coordination.

The problem confronting the Congress is one of determining what kind of legislation is necessary and whether such legislation should pertain to the military branches of government alone or should reach out into other agencies of government and into our entire national economy itself.

Evidently the framers of the proposed so-called merger bill believe that legislation designed to strengthen the military branches of our Government alone is insufficient to meet the problem which national security involves.

Therefore, they have incorporated in this bill provisions which involve radical reorganization, not only of the armed services branches of the Government, but provisions which are only a short step from a radical departure in our concept of government itself.

Such being the case, the question arises here as to whether such proposed legislation should be referred to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, on the ground that it is a matter relating to the "common defense generally," or whether the bill should be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, on the ground that it is—and I quote from the law—a "reorganization in the executive branch of the Government." That is the basis, Mr. President, on which I understand the Senate will vote on the reference of the bill. The Senate will decide as to whether there is greater weight on the side of common defense generally, in which case the bill would be referred to the Committee on Armed Services, or whether the greater weight should be given to the bill as a reorganization in the executive branch of the Government, in which case it would automatically under the law have to go to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There is one more matter referred to the Committee on Armed Forces:

7. Size and composition of the Army and the Navy.

It seems to me that is proper to add to the Senator's explanation.

Mr. AIKEN. I think that item No. 7 would be subordinate to the common defense generally, and if I recall correctly the Chair made his reference on the ground of the provisions referring to the common defense generally, although I am not sure as to that.

It is the contention of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments that the provisions of the bill relating to reorganization of government are of such momentous importance that they outweigh the provisions relating to the "common defense generally."

No one can question the fact that if the bill were enacted into law as written, it would constitute a reorganization of government of paramount importance; in fact, it would be the most far-reaching step in the reorganization of our Government during the last 150 years.

A cursory reading of the bill will indicate that it abolishes two Cabinet posts and establishes one new one to be known as the National Defense Establishment, which shall consist of a Department of the Army, a Department of the Navy, and a Department of the Air Force.

A single Secretary of National Defense is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and under him shall be a Secretary of the Navy, a Secretary of the Army and a Secretary of the Air Force.

Although subordinate to the Secretary of National Defense, the bill provides:

That nothing herein contained shall prevent the Secretary of any such department from presenting to the President, after first so informing the Secretary of National Defense, any report or recommendation relating to his department which he may deem necessary.

This would appear to give each of these three secretaries and his department a considerable degree of importance, and independent action. However, such is not the case.

The Secretary of National Defense can exercise virtually complete control over the three subordinate departments by either of two methods which are provided for in the bill.

Nowhere in the bill is there a definition of the functions of these three subordinate departments.

According to a letter written to the President under date of January 16, 1947, by Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal and Secretary of War Robert Patterson, it was evidently contemplated that the functions of these three departments should be set forth by the President by the issuance of an Executive order, and I quote from that letter as follows:

We are agreed that the proper method of setting forth the functions (so-called roles and missions) of the armed forces is by the issuance of an Executive order concurrently with your approval of the appropriate legislation. We attach for your consideration a mutually agreed draft of such on order.

However, the bill itself makes no reference to any authority for setting forth the functions of these three departments of the National Defense Establishment and to all appearances leaves the definition of these functions to the Secretary of National Defense.

This is an unprecedented power to lodge with a Cabinet officer and would permit the Secretary of National Defense to weaken or virtually abolish any one of these three departments through the simple procedure of minimizing its functions to the vanishing point.

It would enable him to concentrate virtually all the functions of any or all of the three departments in a single department which he might deem best suited to exercise these functions.

In any case, the definition of the functions of the departments of armed services which have heretofore rested with the legislative branch of the Government are now seemingly transferred to the Secretary of National Defense.

This in itself constitutes a wide departure from the exercise of controls over the armed services departments by the legislative branch of the Government.

The other method by which controls over the Department of the Army, Department of the Navy, Department of the Air Force could be exercised by the Secretary of National Defense will be found in section 102 (a) which vests in the Secretary complete control over the military budget.

Section 102 (a) reads as follows:

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretary of the National Defense shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Under the direction of the President, he shall establish policies and programs for the National Defense Establishment, and for the departments and agencies therein; he shall exercise direction, authority, and control over such departments and agencies; he shall supervise and coordinate the preparation of budget estimates by the departments and agencies of the National Defense Establishment, which shall be submitted to him at such time and in such manner as he may direct; he shall formulate and finally determine the budget estimates of the National Defense Establishment for submittal to the Bureau of the Budget; and he shall supervise and control the budget program of the National Defense Establishment under the applicable appropriation acts: Provided, That the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force, under the direction of the Secretary of National Defense, shall be administered as individual units by their respective secretaries: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the secretary of any such department from presenting to the President, after first so informing the Secretary of the National Defense, any report or recommendation relating to his department which he may deem necessary.

That clearly gives the Secretary of National Defense control over the budget for all the departments within the national defense establishment; and certainly control over the budget would constitute virtually complete control over the operations of any department of the National Defense Establishment.

Inasmuch as it is proposed to spend more than one-third of the entire cost of Government on national defense and inasmuch as control over the expenditure of these funds is vested solely in the Secretary of National Defense and thereby constitutes a tremendous increase in power given to a single department head, it would appear that the granting of such power should be of great concern to everyone.

By exercising control over the budget, the Secretary of National Defense could easily select one branch of the National Defense Establishment which could dominate all the others.

Such a radical grant of power to a single department head should be considered not by a committee dealing with armed services alone, but by a committee which is concerned with the structure of government itself.

How can the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be expected to perform the duties which rest upon it by virtue of law if there is removed from its purview expenditures exceeding one-third of the total expenditures of government?

I now wish to discuss briefly title II of the bill—Coordination for National Security.

There is set up under this title a National Security Council to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of National Defense and other representatives of departments directly controlled by the Secretary of National Defense; also a Central Intelligence Agency and a National Security Resource Board.

I call attention to the functions of this Board. Paragraph (c) of section 203 reads as follows:

(c) It shall be the function of the Board to advise the President concerning the coordination of military, industrial, and civilian mobilization, including—

1. Policies concerning industrial and civilian mobilization in order to assure the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the Nation's manpower in the event of war.

Of course the mobilization of manpower for industrial purposes has been in the hands of the War Labor Board, the War Production Board, and other boards set up by executive order during the last war.

I read further from paragraph (c) of section 203:

2. Programs for the effective use in time of war of the Nation's natural and industrial resources for military and civilian needs, for the maintenance and stabilization of the civilian economy in time of war, and for the adjustment of such economy to war needs and conditions.

It will be seen that under this paragraph recommendations for conducting the civilian economy of the country in time of war would be turned over to the military.

3. Policies for unifying, in time of war, the activities of Federal agencies and departments engaged in or concerned with production, procurement, distribution, or transportation of military or civilian supplies, materials, and products.

That turns over that part of our economy to the military.

4. The relationship between potential supplies of and potential requirements for manpower, resources, and productive facilities in time of war.

5. Policies for establishing adequate reserves of strategic and critical material, and for the conservation of these reserves.

That is not confined to times of war.

6. The strategic relocation of industries, services, Government, and economic activities, whose continuous operation is essential to the Nation's security.

That is all of paragraph (c) of section 203.

This section of the bill clearly cuts across the functions of many, if not all, the civilian agencies of Government, both those established by acts of Congress and those established by Executive order.

This section is apparently written with a view to the assumption of military control of the entire civilian economy in time of war or even in time of preparation for war.

American industry and American labor set an all-time record for production of war materials during the late war. They did things which no one thought American industry and American labor were capable of doing. The production was simply stupendous. The War Production Board was the Government agency primarily responsible for the production of war materials.

It is common knowledge that friction existed almost throughout the duration of the war between the War Production Board and the War Department, although close cooperation was generally achieved between the War Production Board and the Navy and the Maritime Commission. In substantiation of the statement that friction existed all during the war between the civilian agencies of the Government and the military agencies of the Government, I wish to read several excerpts from the book Arsenal of Democracy, written by Donald M. Nelson, former head of the War Production Board.

I read from page 358 of the book by Mr. Nelson. Speaking of the division of authority in connection with materials, he states:

As far as the Navy was concerned, this delegation of authority and division of responsibility worked out extremely well. The Navy, from my observation, is a smart organization; it knows how to fit itself and its requirements into the framework of civilian control needed to conduct a war economy.

But the case was different with the Army. The Army's Services of Supply was not satisfied to tell us what its requirements were and when these had to be met; it also insisted on telling us how to get what it wanted. This, I hasten to add, was not true of what may be called the working branches of the Army. As I have said, our relations with the Quartermaster Corps, the Ordnance Department, the Signal Corps, the Medical Corps, and the Engineer Corps, which were the chief procurement agencies, were always splendid. But above this level we always had trouble. The difficulty arose over a question of policy; from the beginning I had made it a practice to pare down the less essential part of the civilian economy whenever this action became necessary in order to insure the production of munitions. The top men in the Army's supply set-up, however, consistently opposed giving any consideration to even the most essential civilian needs. For example, they fought against allocating material or machinery for the production of farm machinery, insisting that the farmer could use his old equipment and did not need anything new.

On page 360, I quote further from Mr. Nelson:

One of our bitterest, most long-drawn-out arguments with the Army was over the allocation of newsprint to newspapers, especially for Sunday editions. Since the demand for paper was so much greater than the supply, we had to limit each publisher to a certain amount of newsprint—and this extremely difficult situation was very well met by the group of newspaper publishers who lent their services to WPB. But reducing the amount of paper which a publisher may have is one thing and telling him what he may do with it is quite another. The Army vigorously maintained that we should adopt the latter course. Time and again I heard Judge Patterson argue that the production of comic strips and Sunday "funny papers" entailed a waste of critical material which should be stopped, and on innumerable occasions I was sharply attacked by the Army for permitting the use of newsprint for this purpose. But I fought back, for I felt that if we attempted to dictate the use to which publishers should put the paper they were authorized to buy we would be paving the way for Government control of the press in its tightest and most acute form, no matter what name we gave it. A government that uses its control of newsprint to forbid the printing of comic strips is in the publishing business. If it can stop the printing of comic strips, it can—and inevitably will—forbid the publication of cartoons and other material, perhaps, ultimately, of certain classes of editorial matter which, in its opinion, represents a waste of newsprint. That is precisely the situation which the Army people tried to create; it is, indeed, the situation in which the Government would have found itself if the Army had made good its attempt to control our wartime economy. By no stretch of the imagination could this be called a minor issue.

On page 361 Mr. Nelson says:

Very soon after I had made, and stuck to, that decision, articles began appearing in the press stating that 1,500 plants making munitions of war were going to have to shut down because they could not get materials. War Department officials in high places were feeding out those stories, which quite openly conveyed the implication that the production program was in a mess, and that, because of indecisive control at the top, American lives were likely to be lost and we might even lose the war. Of course, what they were protesting against, was not indecision, but a decision which they did not like; nor did the 1,500 plants have to shut down, as predicted. Production was not in a mess; rather, it was being pulled out of a mess and put on an even footing. But that barrage of scare publicity, guaranteed to appeal to the fears and to the patriotism of readers in every section of the country, was the sort of thing the Army could and did turn on whenever it wished to do so. I had a great deal to experience with it during the war—and I can assure you that when the Army turns loose a blast against you it is deadly.

I now turn to page 391 of Mr. Nelson's book. I shall not quote very extensively from it. I am doing this for the purpose of indicating the friction which existed between the civilian agencies of Government and the high command of the military during the war, because that is involved in the bill which we have before us. On page 391 Mr. Nelson writes as follows:

The long and bitter controversy with the military over control of America's civilian economy came to its climax in the summer of 1944, with the fight over our reconversion program. To a large extent this battle was lost. To a large extent, the military took control over the economy, and many of the reconversion difficulties which arose later, after Germany and Japan had finally been knocked out, can be traced directly to that fact.

On page 402 Mr. Nelson says:

The Army cannot be blamed for its determination to protect war production. However, this determination ought to have been linked to some degree of understanding of American economy and American psychology, but if such understanding existed on the top echelons of our Army's supply services I saw not the faintest indication of it.

For the Army was, quite openly, out to protect war production by the simple means of creating pools of unemployment. The issue was as simple as that, and I have heard it stated just so bluntly.

On page 403 Mr. Nelson further says:

Furthermore, there were many reasons for these spotty, localized shortages. Many were attributable to the Army supply services, which had grievously misjudged their requirements. Most of the military programs which were behind schedule in the summer of 1944 were programs which the Army had cut back very sharply some months previously, only to find that it had made miscalculations and would have to raise its sights again. Very large increases, consequently, had to be ordered, but production could not be obtained overnight. As a result, schedules would run ahead of production, and for a few months the situation would look very bad indeed and would call for the most strenuous efforts. But a shortage of manpower was seldom the cause of such a situation, and the remedy seldom lay in merely finding more men. Instead, the solution had to be worked out on a case-by-case basis.

Take a case in point: In that summer of 1944 we needed foundry workers very badly, for some of our most urgent war programs. Foundry work is, as they say, hot, heavy, and dirty. Wages are low, in comparison with those in many other industries. For the most part, semiskilled labor is required. It was nothing less than absurd to insist, as some of the Army people did insist, that if dollar-and-a-quarter-an-hour machine-tool operators in their fifties were thrown out of work by cut-backs they would gravitate toward the foundries.

Mr. President, I have read these extracts from Mr. Nelson's book simply to show the additional difficulties which occurred between the high military command and the civilian agencies of government during the war, with both the civilian agencies and the military departments believing that they could procure production faster. I have given these quotations from Mr. Nelson's book simply to point out this difference of opinion not only during the war but during the reconversion period as well.

I do this because it seems to be the clear intent of the bill now before us to transfer to the military the functions and controls exercised by civilian agencies of government during the late war.

Clearly, it is the intent to transfer to the military complete controls over manpower, production, procurement, distribution, and transportation, not only of military supplies, but of civilian supplies as well.

It is true that paragraph (e) of section 203 states:

(e) In performing its functions, the Board shall utilize to the maximum extent the facilities and resources of the departments and agencies of the Government.

But, Mr. President, it is clearly apparent that civilian agencies of government are to be subordinated to the National Defense Establishment, which, in turn, can be completely dominated by a single administrator.

Perhaps the time has come when national security demands that such great power be vested in the military department of government.

It may be that the civilian economy of the Nation should be subordinated to military control, although it has always been the American concept that the military is designed to protect civilian economy, rather than to dominate it.

But regardless of whether the military department of government should be granted such immense powers, it seems perfectly clear, Mr. President, that the delegation of such powers by the Congress is a matter to be considered in the light of its effect upon all departments of government; and, therefore, a bill on that subject should be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments rather than to the Committee on Armed Services, which deals with matters concerned with the armed services alone.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. He has been referring to section 203 and he has been stating that certain powers are delegated or turned over to the military. If I read subsection (c) correctly, it provides that it shall merely be the function of the Board to advise the President concerning these things in time of war, and to be ready to prepare for the Nation's security, but not to take over anything.

Mr AIKEN. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct about that. The Board simply takes over the advisory capacities which the civilian agencies of government had during the late war.

Mr. President, it occurred to the staff of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments that those who wrote the Reorganization Act would be in the best position to know what was meant by the provisions of that act. Therefore I now wish to read from a letter which I received from Dr. George B. Galloway, who is assumed to be the author and the actual writer of the Reorganization Act. He was the staff director of the La Follette-Monroney committee. In a letter addressed to me, under date of January 20, 1947, Dr. Galloway stated the following:

It was the intention of the joint committee that all proposed legislative measures, and so forth, relating to reorganization of the executive branch of the Government, including the consolidation and transfer of departments, bureaus, and agencies, should be referred to and handled by the Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The joint committee felt that the machinery of government at all levels needs continuous study and frequent readjustment to fit the changing conditions of the modern world. It felt, further, that Congress is the logical and responsible place where such continuing study of our governmental machinery should be carried on, and it recommended that this important task be assigned to the standing Committee on Expenditures.

Mr. President, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments now has had referred to it many bills relating to reorganization. I wish to cite a few of them, as follows:

Senate bill 28, introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], to supersede the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946 by reestablishing the offices of registers of land offices, and providing for appointment of the Director and Associate of the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes;

Senate bill 79, introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], to create an executive department of Government to be known as the Department of Peace. That measure could have been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee had it not been a reorganization bill;

Senate bill 164, introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], for the establishment of a Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government;

Senate bill 352, introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], for himself and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], to provide for the reestablishment of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission with the same functions it had prior to the time when Reorganization Plan No. 2 became effective. That measure might have been referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, but inasmuch as it was a reorganization bill it was referred, very properly, to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments;

Senate bill 493, introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], for himself and myself, to provide for the coordination of agencies disseminating technological and scientific information, and for the more efficient and orderly administration of a program to make the discoveries of engineers, inventors, scientists, and technicians more readily available to American industry and business, and for other purposes. That measure conceivably could have been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; but because it was a reorganization bill it was required, under the law, to be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments;

Senate bill 585, introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], to amend the Reorganization Act of 1945 to require that reorganization plans submitted thereunder be accompanied by statements of the economics and increases in efficiency, if any, to result from the taking effect of such plans;

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 3, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and so forth;

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 9, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], to amend section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946; and

A bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], establishing a Department of Health, Education, and Security. It would create a new Cabinet post, with a Secretary who would take his proper place in the Cabinet.

So, Mr. President, up to this time the measures which have for their purpose reorganizations in the executive branch of Government have been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It seems to me that if we deviate from the law at this time we shall weaken the ground upon which every committee of the Senate stands.

Mr. President, I have read in the newspapers that a statement has been made that if this bill is referred to the Committee on Armed Services, prompt hearings will be held by that committee. I quote from an article appearing in the New York Times of one day last week, as follows:

> Senator GURNEY indicated today that if jurisdiction is awarded his committee, hearings will be arranged quickly and the bill will be reported out at the earliest possible date. Senator AIKEN has indicated his belief that because of the confidential nature of the unification issue, the hearings might require considerable time.

I say now that if the bill is referred by the Senate to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, no time will be lost in holding hearings, but ample opportunity will be given to opponents as well as proponents to testify on the measure before our committee. The bill is of such vast importance that it should be considered carefully and should be carefully deliberated. That can be done without unnecessary delay.

As I said in the beginning, I do not question the need for greater coordination or possibly the unification of the armed services; but when they involve, also, potential control of the civilian economy of the Nation, they should be considered not simply by the committee which has jurisdiction over military affairs or the armed services, but by a committee which has general jurisdiction over the reorganization of the Government as a whole.

With that statement, Mr. President, I conclude what I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I shall not take long to discuss this question, for I feel that it is unthinkable that a measure with these objectives should be referred to any committee except the Armed Services Committee. I say that because I believe that the reference of such measures is provided for not only generally but specifically in the Reorganization Act, which Congress passed last year, as well as by action taken previously by the former Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs.

A further reason for reference of the bill to the Committee on Armed Services is that there are now on that committee six Senators who formerly were members of the Military Affairs Committee and six Senators who formerly were members of the Naval Affairs Committee, all of whom have had previous and long experience with such legislation. In addition to them, there is one new member of the committee. As I understand, on the other committee are two Senators who formerly were members of either the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GURNEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I merely wanted to say, while the Senator from South Dakota is dealing in sixes, that 6 members out of the 13 who compose the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments have been in command of the national guard units of their respective States.

Mr. GURNEY. That is fine. All honor to them.

Mr. President, I believe we could talk on this subject from now until doomsday, and certainly we could talk the remainder of this week, and could not any better describe the situation in which the Senate finds itself regarding the kind of legislation involved than was set forth in such detail last Wednesday by the President pro tempore. He pointed up the arguments in two columns of the RECORD, and I do not believe we could do better if we talked all week.

Legislation of the kind proposed should be referred to the Armed Services Committee generally, and, under the Reorganization Act, specifically—specifically because under the functions of our committee as set forth in the law we are to deal with "the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment generally," with items having to do with "Pay, promotion, retirement, and other benefits and privileges of members of the armed forces," with the "size and composition of the Army and Navy," and so forth. These are specific duties which our committee is to attend to. Then there is maintenance and operation of all forts, ammunition depots, and what not. Lastly and specifically, we are to consider matters having to do with "strategic and critical materials necessary for the common defense."

Therefore, Mr. President, the National Resources Board proposed to be created by the bill comes directly under the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. President, I might say that the bill does not seek to do one solitary thing which was not done in a haphazard manner during the war. The Army, Navy, and Air Forces were put under the combined Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I shall yield if the Senator will excuse me until I finish this thought.

There was also placed under the combined Chiefs of Staff, subject to the President, war planning, not only as to men, but as to materials, resources of all kinds. They all were at the beck and call of the Army and Navy. A central intelligence agency was also under the combined Chiefs of Staff.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely wish to inquire if anything provided for by the so-called merger bill could not have been done during the war, and whether or not what is proposed in the bill could not be done without legislative consent. Is there anything of that kind in the bill?

Mr. GURNEY. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. What are the items?

Mr. GURNEY. I may mention combining the budget for the services under the Secretary of National Defense.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is that the only item?

Mr. GURNEY. No.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator name other items?

Mr. GURNEY. Not at the moment. We are not debating the merits of the bill. I do not want the Senator even to intimate that the Senator from South Dakota is in complete agreement with every specific line and paragraph in the bill. I am merely arguing that the proposals in the bill, and other proposals which will naturally come from Senators and from other sources all over the land, should be considered by the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it true that an identical bill has been introduced in the House and has been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments?

Mr. GURNEY. The Senator knows, and he could have made a statement to that effect.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is a fact. How does the Senator account for that, if the powers and the duties of the two committees are identical?

Mr. GURNEY. The Senator from South Dakota is not going to take on the responsibility of accounting for what was done in another body.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator whether in his opinion the proposed legislation is a reorganization under the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. GURNEY. Of course, all agencies outside the legislative come directly under the President, and especially do the Army and the Navy. I would say, however, that that is under the President's function as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, not in the same way that he might exercise control over the Treasury Department, which is a fiscal agency of the Government.

I may say to the Senator, while he is on his feet, that I am sure that when Senators voted on the Reorganization Act they were thinking of the bills that had come before the Congress during the past 4 or 5 years, giving the President authority to reorganize fiscal branches of the Government, and also other executive departments, such as the Department of Labor, and what not. At the time we passed the Reorganization Act we were not thinking that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would handle such a matter as the big subject of national defense, which had for 150 years, I believe, been in the jurisdiction of the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs.

Mr. President, that about ends the argument, so far as I am concerned. I am in complete agreement with the statement made by the Senator from Vermont that he approached me as to whether or not our committees should act jointly on the bill. I agreed readily that members of his committee could sit in with our committee while we were holding hearings, and I may say that we would be glad to have any Senator sit in with our committee and ask questions and receive answers.

I do not feel, however, that after our committee has taken the responsibility and the time to hear all the testimony and gather all the information we can possibly get which might affect the national defense, we should then be requested to let some other committee take over, after we have reported the measure to the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator believe that the word "reorganization," as used in paragraph B under the provision relating to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, relates only to those reorganization measures which are sent to the House and to the Senate which have to be acted upon within 60 days or become law? Is that what the Senator contends that word means?

Mr. GURNEY. No; I do not. I do not even suggest it.

Mr. FERGUSON. The law enacted at the last session does not apply to those cases?

Mr. GURNEY. No. If the Senator will remember my words he will recall that I said that I was sure that when we passed the bill Senators were thinking of such items as had come up from the President in which he said the reorganizations should be made, most of them by Executive order.

Mr. President, if there are no further questions, I have concluded.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have just a few observations to make in regard to the question before the Senate.

My interest is as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I am under no illusions. I do not believe prolonged debate on this question will change the result of the vote. I do believe, however, that it is incumbent upon us at the outset of the experimentation, if I may so call it, under the Reorganization Act, to establish quite clearly what the avenues of reference should be under the act.

I turn to the powers of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as set forth in the Reorganization Act, and for the RECORD I read section g (1):

> Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to consist of 13 Senators, to which committee—

I call attention to the fact that there is no equivocation about this language—> to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation—

I call attention to the word "all"— > all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following subjects:

>
> * * * * *
> (B) Reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government.

Perhaps one of the most important and far-reaching reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government is the proposed consolidation of the national defense agencies. I, therefore, am firmly of the opinion—and I shall not undertake to read the bill itself or extensive portions from it, because the subject has been ably covered by the Senator from Vermont—that the bill itself cuts across many lines, involves the activities and the provinces of many departments of government, and, while it is denominated a national defense measure and refers with greater emphasis perhaps to the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps than to other departments that are brought in, yet the bill itself is ample evidence that it will reach its fingers into many other departments of a nonmilitary nature, in spite of any interpretation that may be put on it. It therefore comes squarely, in my opinion, under the all-inclusive reference contained in the Legislative Reorganization Act to measures which are allocated to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. Would the Senator from Iowa have any objection to the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee of which the Senator from Iowa is a member, that the Committee on Armed Services consider the bill and hold such hearings as it normally would hold, and that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments appoint a subcommittee to sit with the Committee on Armed Services, such subcommittee to report back to the full Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, allowing that committee to decide whether or not further hearings are wanted?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I not only approve that proposal, but I so expressed myself in the committee. I was about to discuss that phase of it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would appreciate it if at some time during the debate the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] would tell us what, if any, objection he has to such a procedure.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. In answer to the query put by the Senator from Wisconsin, I may say that many bills are passed on by many committees of the Senate, in which some other standing legislative committee of the Senate has an interest. In other words, the Committee on Foreign Relations might hold hearings on a treaty with another country, and might approve the treaty. The treaty might in some manner affect the ability of our defense forces to undertake its enforcement. The Committee on Armed Services might like to have a reference of the treaty to it, but it would be unthinkable that we should suggest to the Committee on Foreign Relations that they send all treaties to our committee. We have the chance on the floor of the Senate to state our case, suggest amendments, have them thoroughly debated, and then have a vote on the amendments. In this case, if the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments wants to have some of its members sit in with our committee—I venture to say they will not, but if they do, they will have full opportunity to take all our hearings into their committee, discuss them freely in their committee, work out an amendment or substitutes, or even at a subsequent time come before the Senate and say, "The bill has not yet had sufficient consideration, and we ask the Senate to vote to send it to our committee."

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. For the benefit of the Senator from South Dakota, and for the benefit of the other Members of the Senate, let me say that our committee felt, almost to a man, that there was a great deal of ability represented by the members of the committee of which the Senator from South Dakota is chairman, and that the Senator from South Dakota had had much experience with this line of legislation, but, in view of the fact that the Legislative Reorganization Act definitely provides that this type of legislation shall be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, that committee should at least be given the courtesy of having a subcommittee sit with the Armed Services Committee, and then, after the hearings were completed, if the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments felt that the matter required further investigation, it could be referred to our committee, for a limited period of time, not exceeding 2 weeks.

I frankly cannot conceive of any reason why the Committee on Armed Services can object to that very sensible procedure, especially in view of the fact that the so-called merger bill involves such a complete reorganization. The bill proposes to establish a new Cabinet post—a Secretary of National Defense—and I can see no reason why, for an additional 2 weeks, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which, after all, is primarily concerned with efficiency and economy, should not be allowed to consider the measure, after the Committee on Armed Services concludes its hearings.

It is my belief that, unless the Senator's committee agrees to the proposal, we should then make an all-out fight and argue this question at very great length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that when the Committee on Armed Services reports, if it receives jurisdiction, the report will be entirely within the jurisdiction of the Senate; if the Senate wishes to do so, it can send it to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments at that time.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. Will the Senator yield to permit an answer to the question asked by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield first to the Senator from South Dakota, and then I will yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. GURNEY. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that in his opening question he stated that his committee voted on the basis of the feeling that this kind of legislation was definitely assigned to that committee. Of course, we feel similarly that it is definitely assigned to the Committee on Armed Services, under the general provision; and, in addition to that, it is assigned specifically for 12 other single, separate, and distinct reasons.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, what we sought from the Committee on Armed Services was a unanimous agreement that after that committee had had hearings on the military phases of the bill, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments might have the bill sufficiently long to examine the relationship of the proposed new department to the general structure of the Government. We felt that the Committee on Armed Services should be willing to agree to the unanimous-consent request that the bill be referred to our committee for a reasonable length of time. Nobody wants to hold up the bill any longer than it is necessary for the Members of this body to familiarize themselves with it.

I call attention to a statement prepared by counsel for our committee:

A similar situation involving interpretation of provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, defining the jurisdiction of committees, arose on the floor of the Senate only a few days ago in connection with the reference of Senate Joint Resolution 61—offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]—

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution—

Mr. TYDINGS, who introduced the resolution for himself and Mr. BRIDGES, explained that the amendment, if adopted, would provide an automatically balanced Federal budget in peacetime. He asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations before it was referred to the Judiciary Committee, "to which committee," the act provides, "shall be referred all proposed legislation and other matters relating to constitutional amendments."

He claimed that, in considering the matter, it would be necessary to make a great many financial computations based on the experience of the Appropriations Committee, and that a report from that committee would be most helpful to the Judiciary Committee.

The President pro tempore ruled that "because of the clear language of the Reorganization Act, the Chair has no authority to refer the joint resolution anywhere except to the Committee on the Judiciary."

I agree thoroughly with that decision of the Chair.

At the suggestion of the President pro tempore, however, Mr. TYDINGS requested unanimous consent that the resolution be first referred to the Committee on Appropriations for examination and report and thereafter to the Judiciary Committee for final action. There was no objection to the request, and the order was entered accordingly.

Here was a case where a resolution fell within the general field of the Appropriations Committee, in that it affected appropriations, and within the field of Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, in that it was a budgetary measure, and yet it was held that the specific language of the act giving the Judiciary Committee jurisdiction over constitutional amendments made reference to that committee mandatory upon the presiding officer.

The provision that measures relating to reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government shall be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is equally specific and, it is submitted, equally requires reference of the armed forces unification bill to that committee.

I have been reading from an opinion given by the counsel of our committee.

It seems to me that we now confront a situation which is analogous to the one before us a few days ago when a bill which fell within the general field of the Appropriations Committee had to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary because of a requirement of the law. Now we are discussing the reference of a bill which many might claim falls within the general field of the Armed Services Committee, but there is an equally specific provision of law which states that reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government shall be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. If I correctly understood the statement made by the President pro tempore a few moments ago it was to the effect that when the bill is reported by the Armed Services Committee and again reaches the floor of the Senate any Member of the Senate may rise to a point of order and ask the Chair to rule, subject to an appeal to the Senate, on the question whether or not, under the rules, in his opinion, this measure should then properly be referred to a second committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair made a different statement. The Chair said that when the Committee on Armed Services had reported the bill to the Senate, and the bill was placed on the calendar, any Senator would be free to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. And when a Senator makes such a motion if a point of order is raised, it then becomes the duty of the Chair to rule on the motion. Am I not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order would lie against such a motion. The motion is in order under the rules.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. For what purpose?

Mr. HILL. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. In other words, the bill would be in no different position than any other bill reported by a committee which has been placed on the calendar. Any bill on the Senate Calendar is subject to a motion by any Member to be referred to any committee of the Senate. Is that not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I am in complete agreement with the statement of the Chair on that question and that is the very proposition I am discussing. In the very few minutes I shall take on this matter, I should like to cite two or three or four provisions of the bill. In the first place, under section 113 (c) there is a provision that the new board within the National Defense Establishment shall take charge of matters regarding industrial matters, including the procurement, production, and distribution plants of the establishment.

Then after reciting a number of military matters, we find, in subsection (8), that it is given authority "to maintain liaison with other agencies for the proper correlation of military requirements with the civil economy."

In section 201, among the functions the new department has is the organization of a National Security Council, which shall examine into the coordination of the policies of the departments and agencies of the Government, and perform other functions relating to the national security, thus clearly cutting across the lines outside the Military Establishment.

In subsection 202, paragraph (c), the bill refers to the creation and the functioning of the Central Intelligence Agency, which presumably goes into far greater fields than the military alone, although it may point up the national defense.

Section 203 establishes a National Security Resources Board, and an examination of that section will show that it goes into industrial activities which may eventually be connected with the national defense.

The bill contains a number of provisions of that kind.

I wish to conclude my remarks. In my personal view it would be a mistake—and I would not advocate such a course of procedure—to bring the bill to the floor of the Senate for final action unless it had the measured and considered judgment of the Armed Services Committee, the combined committee composed of members of the former Military Affairs Committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think it would be a mistake for the bill to be taken up on the floor without their consideration of it, because in the past the members of those committees have had much experience in military matters, and those relating to the national defense. But I also say to the Senate that the experience of the members of that combined committee has been limited to matters of national defense, military or naval matters. Here we have the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments whose exclusive duty it is to examine into and pass upon consolidations, the unification of the departments of Government. That is a duty specified in the new act. I believe we will flagrantly disregard the act unless the desirability from an economic standpoint and from a governmental unity standpoint of this great merger proposal is submitted to this committee for action and for determination. That undoubtedly involves a consideration of the bill by two committees. Certainly I think no one will say that this is an unimportant piece of legislation. It does involve national defense. It may involve a complete revolution of the control of our national defense policy from a military and naval standpoint. I say in all frankness, Mr. President, that I think the committee of which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] is chairman, should pass upon the technical and professional matters involved which are so intimately wrapped up with national defense; but by the same token, because it is a merger of great size and magnitude, and because the Reorganization Act has specifically placed in the hands and under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments the very subject of the consolidation of great departments of Government, I think that phase of the question must, if the law is not to be wantonly and wilfully disregarded at the very outset, be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, as I understood the proposal submitted by the Chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, it was that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments believed that the Committee on Armed Services, because of its technical background and experience, should be given the opportunity—in fact the obligation—of passing on the military phases of this proposal, but that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments wished to send a subcommittee to sit with the Committee on Armed Services, not as voting members, but recognized in their capacity as representatives of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. After the Committee on Armed Services had canvassed the bill and held its hearings, the subcommittee from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would have the recognized right to make a report to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That subcommittee might report that no further action by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was desirable, whereupon the subject would be closed, and the bill would be reported to the Senate by the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

Mr. GURNEY. Will the Senator yield at that particular point?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Let me say one further word, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

If the subcommittee felt that there were phases of the unification involving the efficiency of the reorganization in government, rather than the technical or professional phases of military activity, for a limited time, under its jurisdiction as clearly laid down by the law, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would have the recognized right to examine into the phases of reorganization involving efficiency, economy, and desirability as related to the proposed reorganization of government.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. It seems that Senators opposing the ruling of the Chair now feel that the Committee on Armed Services should first consider the bill. I shall try to state my understanding of the Senator's statement. He believes that there is a distinct possibility that the subcommittee from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments which might sit with the Committee on Armed Services might report back to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments that no further action was necessary. Then why decide at the moment that after the Committee on Armed Services is through with the bill and has reported it to the Senate it should automatically be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator in a moment.

The only time the jurisdiction can be fixed is now. It would be a useless and vain thing to say that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments shall now abandon its jurisdiction, subject to the tender mercies of a vote at some time in the future, when perhaps Senators will have many other things to do, and may disregard the rights, privileges, and jurisdiction of this committee.

The question before us involves the making of a record at this time, and the statement at this time by members of the committee that we do not abandon our jurisdiction, and have no intention to be understood as abandoning it.

I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Iowa is entirely correct in the conclusions which he draws. The reason an agreement must be reached now, if at all, is that as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I gained the distinct impression that the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services would oppose reference of the bill to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments at any time.

We simply ask for the same kind of an agreement as was reached in regard to Senate Joint Resolution 61, I believe, introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] the other day. It was agreed by unanimous consent that the joint resolution should be referred to the Appropriations Committee, and after examination and report by that committee, should then be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee is clearly entitled to consideration of the joint resolution under the law. That is exactly what we requested from the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. It was a perfectly fair request. We asked that a subcommittee from our committee be permitted to sit with the Committee on Armed Services during the hearings. The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services readily agreed to that request. The reason the subcommittee desired to sit with the Committee on Armed Services during the hearings was to avoid delay in acting upon the bill ourselves, or bringing our own recommendations before the Senate after the bill had been considered by the Committee on Armed Services. We do not wish to go through this argument again after the Committee on Armed Services holds its hearings and makes its report. We wish to know now that the bill will be referred to us after being considered by the Committee on Armed Services, so that we can perform our functions as a committee, as required under the Reorganization Act.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator from South Dakota, who does not agree with me. I thank the Senator from Vermont for his contribution. But I wish to conclude.

The parliamentary situation at this moment is this: The Chair has made a ruling. I find myself in agreement with the ruling so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough, and, therefore, I must disagree with it. The action we must take today is either to sustain or overrule the ruling of the Chair. As I understand, there can be no amendment to the ruling of the Chair. There is nothing we can do except to vote for or against the ruling.

A moment ago I stated that I believed that the Committee on Armed Services should pass upon the military phases of this question, because of the technicalities involved and because of the experience of members of the committee; also because of the high personal regard I have for each of the members of that committee, and for their integrity and zeal in these matters. But I also feel that there are important precedents involved in connection with the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. There are rights and jurisdiction that may be overridden if the ruling of the Chair stands, limited as it is to a reference only to the Committee on Armed Services.

I give notice that, so far as I am concerned, this question is no precedent as affecting the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Today when I vote against the ruling of the Chair I do so with great humility and with profound respect for the judgment of the President pro tempore and for rulings of the Chair generally. I do so because I conceive the ruling to be limited, and not subject to amendment. It involves something which we must either take or leave. Therefore, in the interest of maintaining the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and in the interest of not permitting a precedent to be established if I can prevent it, I shall be forced to vote not to sustain the ruling of the Chair. I hope the ruling will not be sustained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, at this time I should like to make a request of the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. He has stated that he objects to reference of the bill to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments after the Committee on Armed Services shall have held hearings on it and considered it. Would the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services be willing to help to get a unanimous-consent agreement—and that is the only way it can be done—for a concurrent reference of the bill to the two committees?

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield I will make reply. I think it would be very inefficient for the Senate to act in that manner. I believe both committees are responsible, and certainly I should not want to consider any piece of legislation simultaneously with the Senator's committee, which had been given original jurisdiction. I would rather wait to see what the conclusions of the Senator's committee were, and then undoubtedly I would agree with the report of the committee. Certainly, I do not feel that it would be an economical use of time to have two committees considering the same measure at the same time.

Mr. AIKEN. Am I to understand that the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services is proposing that the bill be referred first to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments?

Mr. GURNEY. Not yet.

Mr. AIKEN. He objects to its being referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments after being reported from the Committee on Armed Services. Therefore it is clear that the inference which I drew that the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services objects to the consideration of this bill by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments at any time is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. By all means, no. Any committee of the Senate can at any time consider any subject it wishes to consider. It may consider an amendment to a treaty that is being handled by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and may offer an amendment on the floor of the Senate as committee action. The reference of the bill to the Committee on Armed Services does not in any way prevent the Senator from Vermont from considering any phase of this proposed legislation or any other proposed legislation that may be presented to the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. That is entirely true. Any Member of the Senate has a right to propose amendments or substitutes to any bill. But a proposal by a Member does not have the force which it would have if it were supported by a legal reference to a committee.

I wonder if the Senator from South Dakota would join me in asking unanimous consent that after the Committee on Armed Services has held hearings on this bill and considered it, it may then be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with instructions to report it back to the Senate within 2 weeks.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything on this subject. I have a very definite feeling that the ruling of the Chair is correct and that it ought to be sustained.

I think it is something entirely novel in the way of parliamentary procedure to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to refer a single piece of legislation to two or three or more committees of the Senate for consideration. Of course, after a committee has reported legislation to the Senate, in many instances we have referred it to a second committee for the considered judgment of the second committee. I should not have any objection if, after the Committee on Armed Services made its study and report, it were proposed that the Senate should then make a second reference of the bill either to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments or to some other committee. But I think it would be decidely unwise and would lead us into many embarrassments if the Chair were to rule that two or more committees had jurisdiction and that the legislation should be referred to two or more committees to consider at the same time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I was asking recognition of the Chair at the time the question was put. I did not know the Chair was going to put the question so quickly. May I ask that the Chair put the question again? I ask unanimous consent that the Chair put the question again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the announcement which the Chair just made may be set aside and the vote be retaken. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.]

The "ayes" have it, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. GURNEY subsequently said: Mr. President, now that the Senate has resolved the question of reference of the unification bill, I wish to introduce the bill submitted to the Senate by the President. I do so merely in order that the bill may have a number and in order that it may be in readable form, making for efficiency in the committee during the consideration of the bill.

I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill and that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). The Chair understands that under the rules it will be printed as a matter of course.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 758) to promote the national security by providing for a National Defense Establishment, which shall be administered by a Secretary of National Defense, and for a Department of the Army, a Department of the Navy, and a Department of the Air Force within the National Defense Establishment, and for the coordination of the activities of the National Defense Establishment with other departments and agencies of the Government concerned with the national security, introduced by Mr. GURNEY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 27, which is number 31 on the calendar, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 27) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it was my understanding that following the disposition of the appeal from the ruling of the Chair the calendar would be called. Is it the purpose now to call the calendar?

Mr. WILEY. I yield to whatever may be the judgment of the majority leader, but I propose to move that the joint resolution be made the order of business after the call of the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I assume that what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is seeking to do is to make the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution the unfinished business; but if he has no objection, I ask that consideration of such motion be deferred at least until we have disposed of some other matters, such as the Legislative Calendar, and perhaps the Executive Calendar. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to proceed with those matters and then either proceed to consider the joint resolution or let it go over until the next session?

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy to agree to that method of procedure. As I understand, there will be a call of the calendar, and then House Joint Resolution 27 will be the order of business after the calendar is disposed of.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

The clerk will state the first order of business on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 27) to provide for suspending the enforcement of certain obligations against the operators of gold and silver mines who are forced to cease operations because of the war was announced as first in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FIREARMS ACT

The bill (S. 502) to amend the Federal Firearms Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of Senate bill 502.

Mr. PEPPER. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will withhold that request, let me say there has been a great deal of misunderstanding about this bill. The first bill on the subject, which I introduced at the request of the Attorney General, has been withdrawn. That is the bill regarding which most Senators have received numerous communications.

Let me state the sum and substance of this bill. All it does is to include in the language embodied in the existing statute the word "robbery," which is thus included in the list of crimes set forth. It was the opinion of the Attorney General and it was the consensus of opinion of the members of the Judiciary Committee that the bill should pass. It has nothing to do with the registration of firearms, as the previous bill did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me make an inquiry: Is it correct that the only change provided by the bill is the inclusion of the word "robbery" among the list of crimes covered by the act?

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have on my desk a copy of the bill, and I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say, in explaining it, that it does not affect the registration of firearms or the payment of taxes on firearms.

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

I shall be glad to explain the bill: In the existing law, the term "crime of violence" is defined as meaning murder, manslaughter, rape, mayhem, kidnaping, burglary, housebreaking; assault with intent to kill, commit rape, or rob; assault with a dangerous weapon, or assault with intent to commit any offense punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year. However, robbery was not included in that list. The measure now under discussion would include robbery, so as to make that part of the statute read as follows:

> The term "crime of violence" means murder, manslaughter, rape, mayhem, kidnaping, robbery, burglary, housebreaking; assault with intent to kill, commit rape, or rob; assault with a dangerous weapon, or assault with intent to commit any offense punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year.

I wish to make it clear that this bill has nothing to do with the registration of firearms. It will be noticed that in the report it is stated that—

> Need for enactment of the bill arises from the apparent oversight of excluding "robbery" in the definition of "crime of violence," although the lesser offense of assault with intent to rob was included.

I also call attention to the letter of the Attorney General, which is included in the report. I trust that this explanation will suffice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 502) to amend the Federal Firearms Act was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1, subsection 6, of the Federal Firearms Act of June 30, 1938 (52 Stat. 1250; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 901 (6)), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The term 'crime of violence' means murder, manslaughter, rape, mayhem, kidnaping, robbery, burglary, housebreaking; assault with intent to kill, commit rape, or rob; assault with a dangerous weapon, or assault with intent to commit any offense punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year."

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATING TO LARCENY IN INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN COMMERCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

The bill (S. 363) to amend section 3 of the act of July 24, 1946 (Public Law 534, 79th Cong.), was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. May we have an explanation, Mr. President?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the bill would amend section 3 of the act of July 24, 1946. If the bill is passed, section 3 of that act will read as follows:

> To establish the interstate or foreign commerce character of any shipment in any prosecution under this act the waybill, or other shipping document, of such shipment shall be prima facie evidence of the place from which and to which such shipment was made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 363) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of July 24, 1946 (Public Law 534, 79th Cong.), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"To establish the interstate or foreign commerce character of any shipment in any prosecution under this act the waybill, or other shipping document, of such shipment shall be prima facie evidence of the place from which and to which such shipment was made."

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN STATE LAWS TO FEDERAL OFFENSES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

The bill (S. 487) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 2, in line 1, after the word "on", to strike out "January 1" and insert "February 15," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 289 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 468), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 289. Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or district, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 272 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 451), shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any laws of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or district in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof in force on February 15, 1947, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing, would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 503) to establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MOORE. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate return to Senate bill 503, Calendar No. 27, a bill to establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes. I should like to say a few words in relation to it, to see whether it can be passed today.

Mr. BARKLEY. It cannot be passed today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma objected to consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILEY. I wish to ask him whether he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to the bill, but I do not have it ready now. Therefore, I must object to present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma continues to object.

The bill (H. R. 597) to protect American agriculture, horticulture, and livestock by prohibiting the importation of garbage derived from products originating outside of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIM OF SWISS GOVERNMENT

The bill (S. 240) to authorize the payment of $425.88 by the United States to the Government of Switzerland was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to the proper representatives of the Government of Switzerland, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $425.88, in full settlement of all claims against th United States for the loss of food and other items stored aboard the Japanese vessel Awa Maru, when that vessel was sunk in western Pacific waters.

INCREASE OF PAY OF CADETS AND MIDSHIPMEN

The bill (S. 321) to amend section 17 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 so as to increase the pay of cadets and midshipmen at the service academies, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 (56 Stat. 368; 37 U. S. C. 117), is hereby amended by striking therefrom the figures "$780" and substituting therefor the figures "$936."

SEC. 2. The increases in pay provided by this act shall become effective on the first day of the first month following its enactment, and no increase in pay for any period prior thereto shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this act.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

The bill (S. 591) to amend the act of January 5, 1905, to incorporate the American National Red Cross was announce as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may be permitted to make a brief statement, the following is submitted by way of explanation: This measure changes the basis of incorporation of the American National Red Cross in only two particulars. In one particular, it increases the national governing body from 18 to 50, so as to broaden its democratic scope. In the other particular, it increases the authority of the local chapters of the American Red Cross, so as to enable them to exercise a substantially increased authority in the choice of the general management. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 591) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended by inserting the following paragraph immediately following the second paragraph of the said act:

"Whereas the said treaty has been revised and extended by a treaty or convention for the amelioration of the condition of the wounded and the sick of armies in the field, signed at Geneva, July 27, 1929, and adhered to by the United States of America, effective August 8, 1932; and."

SEC. 2. The fourth paragraph of the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Whereas a permanent organization is an agency needed in every nation to carry out the purposes of said treaties, and especially to secure supplies and to execute the humane objects contemplated by said treaties, with the power to adopt and use the distinctive flag and arm badge specified by said treaties, on which shall be the sign of the Red Cross, for the purpose of cooperating with the 'Comité International de Secours aux Militaires Blessés' (International Committee of Relief for the Wounded in War); and."

SEC. 3. Section 2 of the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the name of this corporation shall be 'The American National Red Cross', and by that name it shall have perpetual succession, with the power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity, State or Federal, within the jurisdiction of the United States; to have and to hold such real and personal estate as shall be deemed advisable and to dispose of the same, to accept gifts, devises, and bequests of real and personal estate for the purposes of this corporation hereinafter set forth; to adopt a seal and the same to alter and destroy at pleasure; and to have the right to have and to use, in carrying out its purposes hereinafter designated, as an emblem and badge, a Greek red cross on a white ground, as the same has been described in the treaties of Geneva, August 22, 1864, and July 27, 1929, and adopted by the several nations acceding thereto; to ordain and establish bylaws and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States of America or any State thereof, and generally to do all such acts and things as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and promote the purposes of said organization; and the corporation hereby created is designated as the organization which is authorized to act in matters of relief under said treaties and under any other treaty or convention similar in purpose to which the United States of America may hereafter adhere. In accordance with the said treaties, the delivery of the brassard allowed for individuals neutralized in time of war shall be left to military authority."

SEC. 4. Paragraphs "First" and "Second" of section 3 of the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"First. To furnish volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war, in accordance with the spirit and conditions of the conference of Geneva of October 1863, and also of the treaties of the Red Cross, or the treaties of Geneva, of August 22, 1864, and July 27, 1929, to which the United States of America has given its adhesion, and also of any other treaty or convention similar in purpose to which the United States of America may hereafter give its adhesion.

"Second. And for said purposes to perform all the duties devolved upon a national society by each nation which has acceded to any of said treaties or conventions."

SEC. 5. The act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section 4a to read as follows:

"SEC. 4a. That membership in the American National Red Cross shall be open to all the people of the United States, its Territories, and dependencies upon payment of the sums specified from time to time in the bylaws.

"The chapters of the American National Red Cross shall be the local units of the corporation within the States and Territories of the United States. The regulations with respect to the granting of charters to the chapters and the revocation of the same, the territorial jurisdiction of the chapters, the relationship of the chapters to the corporation, and compliance by the chapters with the policies and rules of the corporation shall be as determined from time to time by the board of governors. Such regulations shall require that each chapter shall, in the election of the governing body of the chapter and in the selection of delegates to the national convention of the corporation, adhere to democratic principles of election as specified in the bylaws."

SEC. 6. Section 5 of the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the governing body of the corporation in which all powers of government, direction, and management of the corporation shall be lodged, shall consist of a board of governors numbering 50 persons, to be appointed or elected in the manner following, namely:

"(a) Eight governors shall be appointed by the President of the United States. Of the governors so appointed, one shall be designated by the President of the United States to act as the principal officer of the corporation with such title and such functions as may from time to time be prescribed in the bylaws; and the remainder shall be officials of departments and agencies of the Federal Government, whose positions and interests are such as to qualify them to contribute toward the accomplishment of Red Cross programs and objectives. Of these at least one and not more than three shall be selected from the armed forces.

"(b) Thirty governors shall be elected by the chapters. The governors so elected shall be elected at the national convention under procedures for nomination and election which shall be such as to insure equitable representation of all the chapters, having regard to geographical considerations, to the size of the chapters, and to the size of the populations served by the chapters.

"(c) Twelve governors shall be elected by the board of governors as members-at-large. The governors so elected shall be individuals who are representative of the national interests which it is the function of the Red Cross to serve, and with which it is desirable that the corporation shall have close association.

"The term of office of all governors shall be 3 years, except that the term of office of any governor appointed by the President of the United States (other than the principal officer of the corporation) shall expire if and when such governor shall retire, prior to the date on which his term as governor would otherwise expire, from the official position held at the time of his appointment as governor.

"Of the first board of governors to be selected hereunder, those governors to be elected pursuant to subsection (b) of this section 5 shall be elected at the first national convention following the enactment of this act, those governors to be elected pursuant to subsection (c) shall be elected as soon as practicable following such first national convention, and those governors to be appointed pursuant to subsection (a) shall be appointed so as to take office at the same time. The governors so elected pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) shall be divided by lot into three classes, the terms of which shall expire at the end of 1, 2, and 3 years, respectively, so that thereafter one-third of the members of the board of governors elected pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) will be chosen at the time of each national convention, and shall take office at such time or as soon as practicable thereafter.

"The President of the United States shall fill as soon as may be any vacancy that may occur by death, resignation, or otherwise in the office of the principal officer of the corporation or in the membership of the board of governors appointed by him. Any vacancy that may occur in the governors elected by the chapters pursuant to subsection (b) or in the governors-at-large elected by the board of governors pursuant to subsection (c) shall be temporarily filled by appointment made by the board of governors, such appointees to serve until the next national convention.

"The board of governors shall have power (i) to appoint from its own members an executive committee of not less than 11 persons, who, when the board of governors is not in session, shall have and exercise all the powers of the board of governors, and (ii) to appoint and remove, or provide for the appointment and removal of, all officers and employees of the corporation, except the principal officer designated by the President of the United States.

"The annual meeting of the corporation shall be the national convention of delegates of the chapters, which shall be held annually on such date and at such place as may be specified by the board of governors. In all matters requiring a vote at the national convention, each chapter shall be entitled to not less than one vote. The number of votes which each chapter shall be entitled to cast shall be determined according to allocation by the board of governors, which shall be established on an equitable basis, giving consideration both to the size of the membership of the chapters and to the size of the populations in the territories served by the chapters. Such allocations shall be reviewed at least every 5 years.

"Voting by proxy shall not be allowed at any meeting of the board of governors, or at the national convention, or at any meeting of the chapters: Provided, however, That in the event of any national emergency, which in the opinion of the board of governors makes attendance at the national convention impossible, the board of governors may permit the election of governors by proxy at the national convention."

SEC. 7. Section 8 of the act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the endowment fund of the American National Red Cross shall be kept and invested under the management and control of a board of nine trustees, who shall be elected from time to time by the board of governors under such regulations regarding terms and tenure of office, accountability, and expense as the board of governors shall prescribe."

SEC. 8. The corporation now existing as the American National Red Cross under the act of January 5, 1905, as amended, shall continue as a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia. The first national convention after the enactment of this amendatory act shall be convened and held under rules and regulations prescribed by the governing body of the corporation as presently constituted. After such first national convention the board of governors of the corporation from time to time shall constitute the associates and successors of the incorporators named in the said act of January 5, 1905, and neither the said incorporators nor any associates or successors theretofore designated by them or by their successors shall have any powers or duties.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, let me inquire about Calendar No. 31, House Joint Resolution 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House Joint Resolution 27, Order No. 31, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of the office of the President, will, as the Chair understands, be taken up when the remainder of the calendar is called.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me inquire about Senate bill 70, Calendar No. 32.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 70, Calendar No. 32, exempting employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, was recommitted.

APPOINTMENTS TO CIVIL SERVICE OF PERSONS WITH PHYSICAL HANDICAP

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 459) to amend the Civil Service Act to remove certain discrimination with respect to the appointment of persons having impaired hearing to positions in the classified civil service, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendments, on page 1, in line 8, after the words "because of", to strike out "his or her impaired hearing" and insert "any physical handicap"; on page 2, in line 3, after the word "with", to strike out "impaired hearing" and insert "such a physical handicap: And provided further, That his or her employment will not in any way endanger the health or safety of fellow employees"; and in line 7, after the word "with", to strike out "impaired hearing" and insert "a physicial handicap", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," as amended (22 Stat. 403), is amended by adding at the end of paragraph "Second" the following new subparagraph:

"Ninth, that no person shall be discriminated against in any case because of any physical handicap, in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, or removal, with respect to any position the duties of which, in the opinion of the head of the agency concerned, may be efficiently performed by a person with such a physical handicap: And provided further, That his or her employment will not in any way endanger the health or safety of fellow employees."

SEC. 2. On and after the date of enactment of this act, any person with a physical handicap who shall have served at least 1 year in the postal service and whose separation from the service is involuntary and without prejudice shall acquire, upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examination as the Civil Service Commission shall prescribe, a classified civil-service status.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Civil Service Act to remove certain discrimination with respect to the appointment of persons having any physical handicap to positions in the classified civil service."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 565) to amend section 3539 of the Revised Statutes relating to taking trial pieces of coins was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 566) to amend sections 3533 and 3536 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PREPARATION OF REVISED EDITION OF ANNOTATED CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) to prepare a revised edition of the Annotated Constitution of the United States of America as published in 1938, as Senate Document No. 232 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, in line 8, after the word "Office", to strike out "as a Senate document" and insert "Three thousand copies shall be printed, of which two thousand two hundred copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and eight hundred copies for the use of the Senate," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress is hereby authorized and directed to have the Annotated Constitution of the United States of America, published in 1938, revised and extended to include annotations of decisions of the Supreme Court prior to January 1, 1948, construing the several provisions of the Constitution correlated under each separate provision, and to have the said revised document printed at the Government Printing Office. Three thousand copies shall be printed, of which 2,200 shall be for use of the House of Representatives and 800 copies for the use of the Senate.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the provisions of this act, with respect to the preparation but not including printing, the sum of $35,000 to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1968) making appropriation to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

PROHIBITION OF PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY SUITS

Mr. WILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. What became of Order of Business No. 32, Senate bill 70?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary earlier in the day.

Mr. LUCAS. By unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin when he expects to have the bill before the Senate, since it has been returned to the committee.

Mr. WILEY. At the request of the chairman of the subcommittee which had charge of the bill, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], this morning the committee agreed that the bill should go back for some corrections or slight modifications which the chairman of the subcommittee thought were proper. The committee is to have a meeting Wednesday, and the understanding is that the bill will be reported to the Senate and placed on the calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LUCAS. Will there be hearings on the bill or have the hearings been closed?

Mr. WILEY. Although I am not definitely informed, I understand there are merely some slight changes in language to be made, which were requested by the chairman of the subcommittee. So the action of the committee was that the request should be granted. I made the request on the floor of the Senate today, and the bill was ordered recommitted to the committee.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin renew his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 31, House Joint Resolution 27?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield in order that I might ask him a question in regard to a bill on the calendar?

Mr. WILEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand the situation, Order of Business No. 27, Senate bill 503, relating to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, was called in regular order and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] objected to its present consideration. I think the Senator from Oklahoma stated that he merely desired to offer an amendment. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma does not now have his amendment ready. I do not know what the amendment is. I do know something about the general nature of the bill. I think it is a commendable measure, which the Senate should pass. However, if a Senator desires to offer an amendment, and needs time to prepare it, I respectfully submit that there is no immediate urgency for action on the bill, which has been pending before the committee at least a year or 2 years, to my knowledge, and I suggest that the Senator wait until the Senator from Oklahoma can prepare and offer his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is speaking of an entirely different bill.

Mr. HATCH. I may be, but I am asking for information.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from New Mexico is confused. What the Senator from Oklahoma had in mind was Order of Business No. 27, but I have asked that Order of Business No. 31 be made the unfinished business.

INVESTIGATION OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wisconsin persists with his motion, will he yield for the consideration of a resolution I wish to offer?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin does not hold the floor. He has made a motion, and the Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask the attention of the leader of the majority and the leader of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada submits a resolution, which the clerk will state for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 90) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the subcommittee established on January 20, 1947, by the Committee on the Judiciary (to continue the investigation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Post Office Department, authorized by Senate Resolution 35, Seventy-ninth Congress, as extended) shall be deemed to have been established on January 2, 1947; and the functions, powers, and duties imposed on the subcommittee in existence on January 1, 1947, by such Senate Resolution 35, shall be deemed to have been transferred on January 2, 1947, to the subcommittee established on January 20, 1947.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in explanation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, does the resolution refer to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. A resolution was offered during the Seventy-ninth Congress by both Senators from the State of Florida, requesting that the Committee on the Judiciary or a subcommittee thereof make certain investigations as to the acts of agents of the Post Office Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Pursuant to that resolution a subcommittee was appointed to make the investigation. We made the investigation, except as to one witness whom we were unable to subpena until the early part of this year, and two other witnesses whom his testimony indicated we should hear.

During the latter part of the Seventy-ninth Congress the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] submitted a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, providing that all subcommittees and special committees then empowered to hold hearings and proceed might go forward with their hearings until the 1st day of February of this year. Pursuant to that resolution a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary held hearings after the third of January this year. At the present time the financial clerk of the Senate refuses to pay $209, or thereabouts, because the hearing was held after the 3d of January.

The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, in order to continue the hearings, appointed a new subcommittee, which is now in existence, and which will go forward with the hearings to a conclusion, which will be worked out very shortly.

The financial clerk of the Senate, in order to satisfy the requirements as he sees them, thinks the resolution I am now offering should be adopted. The legislative counsel, who drew the resolution, deems it necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ALLOCATION OF HIDES FOR EXPORTS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Office of Export Controls has just reduced by 15,000 the allocation of hides for export from the February figure of 60,000 to 45,000 for March. This reduction has caused an immediate break in the hides market, and further weakness is indicated. Since hides are the most important byproduct of cattle slaughter, there is no doubt that this price collapse will be reflected right back to the farmer.

Just recently it was necessary for some of us to protest very strongly to the Office of Export Controls in order to secure permission to export any hides at all. Until recently there was an absolute embargo on the export of hides, in spite of the fact that domestic hides were in good supply, and the domestic price was barely half the price being charged by Argentina and other export countries.

In my opinion, this matter of hide exports gets at the very heart of the question of whether we are willing to extend some assistance to the devastated countries abroad. I am told that in Poland, for example, the shortage of hides and leather is so great that a pair of shoes costs as much as an entire month's salary for the average man. This is due, in part, at least, to the world shortage of hides and the exorbitant prices that are being charged by a few other exporters.

We can do our part toward granting some assistance to these impoverished nations overseas by breaking down this monopoly war price and making just a few of our domestic hides available for Europe. For these reasons, I have protested very strongly to the Office of Export Controls and the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion against the reduction in the export quota.

While we are on the subject, Mr. President, it occurs to me that we might well consider wiping out entirely this export control on hides, in connection with all the other unnecessary war-time restrictions that we are abolishing. It is clear to me that there is no drastic urgency for retaining this control on the export of hides. I believe we have here another case of a regulation which is retained simply for the purpose of regulating. Incidentally, if the State Department is as interested in expanding our export markets as it always pretends to be, it might take this opportunity to permit expansion of exports of a farm product, for a change, and use its influence to have the controls on hide exports abolished.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 27.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 27), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

CONDITIONS IN THE COAL-MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I have recently interested myself in a matter which I feel certain is also a matter of interest to the Congress and, I know, to the American people. I find this unusual situation today, namely, that the coal mines of the country are being operated, technically speaking, by the Government. The American people and I think the Senate will be interested in four or five questions:

First. Are we going to have another coal strike?

Second. When are the mines going to be returned by the Government to their rightful owners?

Third. Why have not the mine owners and the union made a new contract, or at least made an effort to make a contract?

Fourth. Why has not the Government insisted that the mine operators take back their mines?

Fifth. What has happened to the so-called miners' welfare fund?

I think we should interest ourselves particularly in the last question.

To try to obtain information and to get some enlightenment on this subject, I addressed a letter to Mr. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America. I should like first to explain the letter, and then I shall ask unanimous consent to have a copy of my letter printed in the RECORD. In the letter I asked Mr. Lewis four specific questions:

1. What steps has the Government taken concerning returning the mines to the mine owners?
2. When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?
3. What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund, and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent, and for what purposes?
4. Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of my letter inserted in the RECORD at this point, so that I may not have to read the entire letter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 27, 1947.

Mr. JOHN L. LEWIS,
President, United Mine Workers of America, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LEWIS: We have a number of coal mines and many coal miners in the State of Indiana, and I am vitally interested in the subject of coal and employment for our Indiana miners.

I am hopeful that a strike can be avoided when your contract with the Government expires next April 1, and would appreciate very much your position on the following:

1. What steps has the Government taken toward returning the mines to the mine owners?
2. When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?
3. What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund, and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent and for what purposes?
4. Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?

I am likewise dispatching a letter today to Mr. Julius Krug, Secretary of the Interior, along similar lines.

While I hope I am wrong, nevertheless I am fearful that the matter of returning the coal mines to their owners is one that very little thought, if any, is being given at the moment by the Government or the operators themselves.

Sincerely,

HOMER E. CAPEHART.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, on the same day I wrote to the Honorable Julius A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior, asking him the same questions, except that I added one question, as follows:

5. Why has not the report of the Government health department concerning the necessity for welfare for the miners been released to the public?

In order to save time I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my letter to Mr. Krug be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 27, 1947.

Hon. JULIUS KRUG,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KRUG: We have a number of coal mines and many coal miners in the State of Indiana, and I am vitally interested in the subject of coal and employment for our Indiana miners.

I am hopeful that a strike can be avoided when the Government's agreement with the miners expires on April 1, and would appreciate very much your understanding of the following:

1. What steps has the Government taken toward returning the mines to the mine owners?
2. When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?
3. What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent and for what purposes?
4. Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?
5. Why has not the report of the Government health department concerning the necessity for welfare for the miners been released to the public?

While I hope I am wrong, nevertheless I am fearful that the matter of returning the coal mines to their owners is one that very little thought, if any, is being given at the moment by the Government or the operators themselves.

Sincerely,

HOMER E. CAPEHART.

Mr. CAPEHART. I received a reply to both letters, one from Mr. John L. Lewis; the other from Capt. N. H. Collisson, United States Naval Reserve, who is the Coal Mines Administrator. I read from the letter from Mr. Lewis:

Hon. HOMER E. CAPEHART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPEHART: I will undertake to answer categorically the four questions set forth in your letter of February 27.

I am now reading from the letter of John L. Lewis:

No. 1. What steps has the Government taken toward returning the mines to the mine owners?

That was my first question. John L. Lewis' answer is that there has been "none."

My second question—I am reading from Mr. Lewis' letter—is:

When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?

His answer is as follows:

This depends solely upon the Government and the mine operators. Since December 7, last, the United Mine Workers have been publicly on record as willing to negotiate a new wage agreement for the bituminous industry, either with the Government or with the associated coal operators. During the period from December 7, last, to date, no overtures of any character on this subject have been made to the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. Lewis goes on to say:

I attach formal statement on this subject, issued December 7, 1946, in verification.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the statement of the president of the United Mine Workers of America, addressed "To all members and all local unions in the bituminous districts of the United States, United Mine Workers of America," printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1946.

To All Members and All Local Unions in the Bituminous Districts of the United States, United Mine Workers of America, Greetings:

The administration "yellow-dog" injunction has reached the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court of the United States is a constitutional court. Its powers are derived from the Federal Constitution. The Supreme Court is, and we believe will ever be, the protector of American liberties and the rightful privileges of individual citizens. The issues before the Court are fateful for our Republic. It may be presumed that the verdict of the Court, when rendered, will affect the life of every citizen. These weighty considerations and the fitting respect due the dignity of this high tribunal imperatively require that, during its period of deliberation, the Court be free from public pressure superinduced by the hysteria and frenzy of an economic crisis. In addition, public necessity requires the quantitative production of coal during such period.

Each member is therefore advised as follows:

All mines in all districts will resume production of coal immediately until 12 o'clock midnight, March 31, 1947. Each member is directed to return to work immediately to their usual employment, under the wages, working hours, and conditions of employment in existence on and before November 20, 1946. Each mine committee, in cooperation with the officers of each bituminous district, will enforce these employment conditions at each mine. Further advice and instructions will be sent from time to time as authorized by the national policy committee or the responsible and authoritative officers of your organization.

During the working period thus defined, the negotiating committee of the United Mine Workers of America will be willing to negotiate a new wage agreement for the bituminous industry with such parties as may demonstrate their authority so to do, whether it be an alphabetical agency of the United States Government or the associated coal operators. If, as and when such negotiations ensue, your representatives will act in full protection of your interests, within the limitations of the findings of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Let there be no hesitation upon the part of any individual member with respect to the effectuation of the policy herein defined. Complete unity of action is our sole source of strength. We will, as always, act together and await the rendition of legal and economic justice.

I salute you, beside whom I have been privileged to fight.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. LEWIS.

Mr. CAPEHART. My third question to Mr. Lewis was:

What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent, and for what purposes?

His answer is as follows:

Accrued moneys in the welfare and retirement fund, created under the agreement of May 29, 1946, between the Government and the United Mine Workers of America, amounted to $13,472,848.78 as of the close of business on January 31, 1947. As an ad interim arrangement pending the selection of trustees to administer the fund, this money is in possession of Rear Adm. W. A. Buck, SC, USN. During the 9 months of the contract there have been no disbursements from the fund nor expenditures of any kind for any purpose.

My fourth question was:

Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?

His answer is as follows:

Under the agreement, the Government is to appoint one trustee, the United Mine Workers one, and these two to select a third. The Government has recently designated Capt. N. H. Collisson, USNR, Coal Mines Administrator, as its trustee of the fund. The United Mine Workers of America has designated the undersigned. The undersigned has submitted to Captain Collisson a list of 11 eminent and qualified Americans for possible selection as the third trustee. We now await the Government's decision in the premises.

Mr. Lewis goes on to say further:

You will appreciate, I am sure, that the undersigned is obliged to talk with restraint on this subject. The decision of the Supreme Court is not yet forthcoming as affecting the yellow-dog injunction issued by Judge Goldsborough.

That is signed by John L. Lewis.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of the letter from Mr. Lewis printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1947.

Hon. HOMER E. CAPEHART,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPEHART: I will undertake to answer categorically the four questions set forth in your letter of February 27.

1. What steps has the Government taken toward returning the mines to the mine owners?

Answer. None.

2. When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?

Answer. This depends solely upon the Government and the mine operators. Since December 7, last, the United Mine Workers have been publicly on record as willing to negotiate a new wage agreement for the bituminous industry, either with the Government or the associated coal operators. During the period from December 7, last, to date, no overtures of any character on this subject have been made to the United Mine Workers of America. I attach formal statement on this subject, issued December 7, 1946, in verification.

3. What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent and for what purposes?

Answer. Accrued moneys in the welfare and retirement fund, created under the agreement of May 29, 1946, between the Government and the United Mine Workers of America, amounted to $13,472,848.78 as of the close of business on January 31, 1947. As an ad interim arrangement pending the selection of trustees to administer the fund, this money is in possession of Rear Adm. W. A. Buck, Supply Corps, United States Navy. During the 9 months of the contract there have been no disbursements from the fund nor expenditures of any kind for any purpose.

4. Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?

Answer. Under the agreement, the Government is to appoint one trustee, the United Mine Workers one, and these two to select a third. The Government has recently designated Capt. N. H. Collisson, United States Naval Reserve, Coal Mines Administrator, as its trustee of the fund. The United Mine Workers of America has designated the undersigned. The undersigned has submitted to Captain Collisson a list of 11 eminent and qualified Americans for possible selection as the third trustee. We now await the Government's decision in the premises.

You will appreciate, I am sure, that the undersigned is obliged to talk with restraint on this subject. The decision of the Supreme Court is not yet forthcoming as affecting the "yellow dog" injunction issued by Judge Goldsborough.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN L. LEWIS.

Mr. CAPEHART. Now, Mr. President, I have a letter from Capt. N. H. Collisson, Coal Mines Administrator, on the same subject, answering the same five questions. I shall read his letter:

The Honorable HOMER E. CAPEHART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of February 27 addressed to the Secretary of the Interior has, in his absence from the city, been referred to me for reply. Both the Secretary and I share your interest in the production of bituminous coal and in uninterrupted employment in this industry.

I should note, by way of preliminary comment, that I consider your statement that "the Government's agreement with the miners expires on April 1" to be mistaken. The present Krug-Lewis agreement does not contain any termination date.

That was a matter of controversy, of course, between the union and the Government, as Senators will remember, some few months ago, and I shall not comment on that, except to say that in the present situation the Government and the miners are working under an agreement which has no expiration date. I will have something to say about that in a moment. Then Captain Collisson continues:

I am glad to answer each of the specific questions set forth in your letter:

1. What steps has the Government taken toward returning the mines to the mine owners?

2. When will negotiations start between the mine operators and the miners' union with respect to a new contract?

Those were two questions which I put to Captain Collisson, Mr. Krug's representative. Captain Collisson answered them as follows:

On September 11 last, the then Coal Mines Administrator convened a meeting of the union representatives and the coal operators' negotiating committee.

That was on last September 11.

At this meeting differences developed between the so-called northern and southern operators, and Mr. Lewis declined to enter into negotiations on other than a national basis.

On October 19 Mr. Lewis stated his willingness to attend any conference with the operators which might be called. However, during the period November 1 to November 15, and until December 7, the union refused to negotiate with the operators.

On the other hand, representatives of the operators, including the southern operators, assured the Secretary of the Interior of their willingness to negotiate with the union.

On December 7, Mr. Lewis published his letter to his union membership, in which he stated the willingness of the union "to negotiate a new wage agreement for the bituminous industry with * * * the associated coal operators."

On December 13 a group representing a substantial segment of the operators assured the Secretary of the Interior that they were prepared to advise the union of their willingness to open negotiations.

Upon urging of the Coal Mines Administrator, the National Bituminous Coal Operators' negotiating committee met in Washington on December 19 with a view to opening negotiations with the union. From statements made public at the close of that meeting, it appeared that the southern and far western operators refused to join in negotiations with the union on a national basis at that time. I am informed that for all practical purposes the operators' national negotiating committee was dissolved at that meeting by adjourning sine die.

Since that time I have been constantly engaged, through talks with numerous operators, representative of all groups, to bring about a negotiating conference between the operators and the union. These efforts have been fruitless. According to my best information, the causes for the unwillingness of the parties to enter into contract negotiations are: The desire for a decision in the case pending in the Supreme Court; the lack of a representative national negotiating organization on the part of the operators; the divergent interests and attitudes of the operators; and the uncertainty with respect to labor legislation pending before the Congress. It is my personal view—that these considerations present no valid basis for the failure of the parties to meet for the purpose of negotiating a new contract. In these circumstances, I cannot give categorical answer to your inquiry as to when negotiations will start between the mine operators and the miners' union. You may, however, be assured that it is a primary objective of this Administration to bring about such negotiations at the earliest possible date.

That is, the personal view of Captain Collisson, the Coal Mines Administrator—

My third question was as follows:

3. What disposition has been made of the miners' welfare fund and how much money is in the fund at the moment? How much money has been spent and for what purposes?

Captain Collisson's answer to that question is as follows:

Pending selection of trustees pursuant to section 4 (a) of the Krug-Lewis agreement, by arrangement with the union dated June 27, 1946, the Paymaster General of the Navy, as custodian, is collecting payments to this fund. Such payments are made from day to day and I am informally advised that the fund now aggregates approximately $15,500,000. Under the arrangement referred to, the custodian is not authorized to make any disbursements except to turn the fund over to the trustees when appointed. No money has therefore been spent from this fund for any purpose.

My fourth question was:

4. Who are the trustees of the welfare fund?

To that question Captain Collisson replied as follows:

The Krug-Lewis agreement provides for the appointment of one trustee by the United Mine Workers of America and one trustee by the Coal Mines Administrator, these two to select a third. On December 30 I received a letter dated December 26 from the United Mine Workers of America advising, for the first time, that the union's international executive board had on June 19, 1946, designated Mr. Lewis as its trustee.

At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, I, as Coal Mines Administrator, appointed myself one of the trustees pursuant to the Krug-Lewis agreement nd advised the union of this appointment under date of January 22, 1947.

On February 26 I received from Mr. Lewis, as trustee, a letter enclosing a list of the names of 11 persons for consideration as the third trustee. The appointment of the third trustee is now being given the thorough consideration which it deserves.

My fifth question was as follows:

5. Why has not the report of the Government health department concerning the necessity for welfare for the miners been released to the public?

Captain Collisson replied to my fifth question as follows:

The survey of medical and sanitary facilities undertaken by the Coal Mines Administrator under section 5 of the Krug-Lewis agreement was carried out by naval medical officer personnel and was started in June 1946. It has required detailed inspection of, and collection of data regarding, mining communities widely spread throughout the Nation. The field work of this survey was completed in late October 1946—

That is 4 months ago—and the task of assembling, digesting, and correlating the statistics and information collected was immediately commenced. By virtue of excessive overtime hours on the part of the survey staff, the final report has been largely completed and it is estimated that a minimum of 30 days will be required for proofreading, printing, binding, and release of the final report.

Captain Collisson's concluding paragraph is as follows:

Let me assure you that whatever may be the varying attitudes of the operators and the union from time to time, the return of the coal mines to their owners has at all times been and will continue to be a primary objective of the Coal Mines Administration.

Sincerely yours,

N. H. COLLISSON,
Captain, United States Naval Reserve,
Coal Mines Administrator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
COAL MINES ADMINISTRATION,
Washington 25, D. C., March 2, 1947.

The Honorable HOMER E. CAPEHART,

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of February 27th addressed to the Secretary of the Interior has, in his absence from the city, been referred to me for reply. Both the Secretary and I share your interest in the production of bituminous coal and in uninterrupted employment in this industry.

Let me assure you that whatever may be the varying attitudes of the operators and the union from time to time the return of the coal mines to their owners has at all times been, and will continue to be, a primary objective of the Coal Mines Administration.

Sincerely yours,

N. H. COLLISSON,
Captain, USNR, Coal Mines Administrator.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, after hearing read the letters I wrote and questions I submitted to both Mr. Krug and Mr. Lewis, and after listening to the answers of both, I think my colleagues must be about as much confused as I am, and about as much confused as are the American people. I am not only somewhat confused, but I am likewise a little frightened, because, from a technical standpoint, we have at the moment nationalized our coal mines. We have a situation in which our Government is operating the coal mines under an agreement between it and the miners, and yet the coal operators are taking the profits. We have a situation, as is brought out by the two letters which I have just finished reading, in which it appears to me that the coal operators, meaning the mine owners, have made no effort to take back their own property. We have likewise the situation that, while Mr. John Lewis states that he has been ready at all times to sit down and negotiate with the Government or with the operators, yet Captain Collisson in his reply, it will be noted, states on one or two occasions that Lewis evidently was not willing to sit down and negotiate. It is a very serious situation. Someday the Government will have to return the coal mines to their rightful owners, or the Government will have to continue to operate them forever, either on the basis of the owners keeping the profits, or the Government taking over the coal mines and nationalizing them, to which I am 100-percent opposed.

So far the Government has been unable to get the mine owners to take their mines back. So far the Government has been unable to get the mine owners and the miners' union to sit down and negotiate a contract. In other words, collective bargaining in this instance has completely failed. I shall not discuss the merits or demerits of the welfare fund, or the coal strike which occurred about a year ago. I shall not discuss the merits or demerits of the question whether the miners should have more pay or less pay. I have my own opinion on that subject. I do not rise today to uphold Mr. Lewis' position, the Government's position, or the position of the mine operators. I do rise to point out to the Senate and to the people of America the situation which actually exists today, and to say that so far as I am able to learn, no effort is being made—or at least no progress is being made—in respect to returning private property which is now technically in the hands of our Government. To me the situation is serious and dangerous.

The able chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. WHITE] has told me that he feels that the Government, the mine operators, and the miners' union should be called before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to give testimony on the exact status of the situation which exists. I understand that no legislation is necessary; but I call the attention of the Senate to the situation so that Senators may know that I am hopeful that the able chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will call the various interests together in order that we may get the answer as to what Congress and the American people may expect in the future.

Mr. President, if this question is not settled the Congress will be called upon some of these days to enact legislation in an effort to untangle what today, in my opinion, is a very serious situation. As I understand, the decision of the Supreme Court has absolutely nothing to do with what we are talking about. In closing, I express the sincere hope that the Congress of the United States will take some action. In my opinion that action should be a hearing on this subject.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to discuss very briefly a matter which I think is of considerable concern to the American people and to the Government of the United States.

Late in January there came into my hands information from an unimpeachable source relative to the treatment of prisoners of war. I refer to enemy prisoners of war in the European theater of operations. I wish to call attention to the fact that it is generally understood that 2,000 calories are considered necessary to maintain a decent standard. However, the information which I have shows that approximately 1,700 calories will result in slow starvation, and that there are many thousands of prisoners of war being held who are receiving 1,500 calories or less.

I immediately dispatched a letter to both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of State, to see just what the situation might be relative to the prisoners held in custody by the Government of the United States. First, I wish to read my letter to the Secretary of War. I may say that my letter to the Secretary of State was in similar language. My letter to the Secretary of War is as follows:

JANUARY 27, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Would you please furnish me with information as to the number of prisoners of war the United States turned over to the French or other Allied powers who are still being held by those powers; also information as to the number of prisoners of war, if any, by nationalities, which the United States is now holding?

I would also like to have information as to the return of prisoners of war that were held by this country to their respective nations of origin, by months, since VJ-day.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the reply from the Secretary of State, which I received on February 10.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 10, 1947.

The Honorable WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I refer to your letter of January 27, 1947, requesting certain information concerning the disposition of prisoners of war captured by the American forces.

In connection with your inquiry regarding the number of such prisoners of war turned over to the French and other Allied Powers, you are informed that approximately 674,000 German prisoners of war were transferred to the French, Belgian, Netherlands, and Luxemburg Governments. Of this number, approximately 620,000 were turned over to the French authorities. As you are no doubt aware, this Government recently approached the four Governments concerned asking that these prisoners of war be repatriated under a graduated program to be completed by October 1, 1947, at the latest. Negotiations are now under way with these Governments to set in motion this program.

With respect to the number of enemy prisoners of war still under the direct control of American military authorities, the following is submitted, based on most recent figures received from the War Department:

1. In the United States: Of the total number of enemy prisoners of war formerly held in this country, only 147 Germans and Italians now remain. These are confined in disciplinary or medical institutions. There are no Japanese prisoners of war presently held in the United States.

2. In Europe: Approximately 58,000 German military personnel are now held under the direct control of the American authorities in Europe. It is expected that all of these will have been repatriated by July 1, 1947, at the latest. There are no Italian or Japanese prisoners of war held by us in Europe.

3. In the Far East: The repatriation of Japanese prisoners of war held under the direct control of American authorities in the Far East has been completed with the exception of those held in connection with war crimes.

Since the repatriation of enemy prisoners of war is carried out by the military authorities, your request for repatriation data by months since VJ-day is being referred to the War Department for reply direct to you on that portion of your inquiry.

Sincerely yours,

G. C. MARSHALL.

Mr. KNOWLAND. On February 14 I received a reply from the War Department, which I desire to read:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIAL STAFF,
LEGISLATIVE AND LIAISON DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate,

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: The Secretary of State has transmitted to the Secretary of War a copy of your letter dated January 27, 1947, requesting certain information concerning the disposition of prisoners of war captured by the armed forces.

The information transmitted to you by the Secretary of State is basically correct with the principal exception being in regard to the number of enemy prisoners of war still under the direct control of American military authorities in Europe. As of February 3, 1947, 24,834 German prisoners of war remained in the United States custody in the European theater of operations, approximately 2,216,000 prisoners having been discharged.

With regard to your request for information as to the return of prisoners of war held by this country to their respective nations of origin, by months, since VJ-day, it is regretted that this information is not presently available since the final disposition of prisoners of war is made by the theater commander concerned and at present the War Department has yet to complete over 1,000,000 prisoner-of-war files as required by the provisions of article 77 of the Geneva Convention. However, of the 435,788 prisoners of war interned in prisoner-of-war camps in the United States, all were returned to the theater in which they were captured for rehabilitation between November 1945 and July 1946 except approximately 175,000 British-captured prisoners who were returned to the British, and 150 prisoners still in the United States in penal institutions, held for trial, in hospitals, etc.

It is regretted that specific information you request is not available, but trusted that the information contained herein will be adequate for your purpose. However, if additional information is desired, please do not hesitate to ask us.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN C. PITCHFORD,
Colonel, GSC.

It is my understanding, Mr. President, that the Government of the United States turned over to the French approximately 600,000 prisoners of war who were captured by the American forces, and it seems to me that we have a serious obligation, under the Geneva Convention, to make certain that the prisoners of war captured by the American Army and turned over to a foreign power shall receive the treatment required to be given prisoners of war under that convention. From the unimpeachable source from which I have received the information, I have reason to believe that the prisoners of war who are now in the hands of the French Government are not receiving the minimum requirements under the Geneva Convention.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Committee on Armed Services, if that be the proper committee of the Senate, and certainly the War Department, which is responsible for the capture of the prisoners, have a moral responsibility to see to it that such prisoners receive the treatment required by the Geneva Convention.

I sincerely hope, for the future of the Government of the United States in our dealings with matters of this kind, that the War Department is conducting a continuous survey of every prisoner-of-war camp in which men who have been turned over to the French by the American Government are incarcerated. If we are not very careful there may arise to embarrass us in later years a situation in which it can be shown that some prisoners captured by American forces are being treated not a great deal better than were some other prisoners who were thrown into concentration camps in Nazi Germany.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks just made by the Senator from California, because I think he has raised a point which calls for immediate consideration by an appropriate committee of the Senate. I agree with him, speaking as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, that that committee is the appropriate committee to consider the subject.

The Senator refers to the number of calories being made available to prisoners of war, and he points out quite accurately that 1,550 calories, which I think is the present number allowed, are certainly not sufficient to maintain the human body in health. Of course, it should also be pointed out, I may say to the Senator from California, that under our military government in Germany, that is all we have thus far been able to allow the civilian population of Germany. When one has traveled through Germany, as I did last fall, he comes to the conclusion by personal observation that that amount of food is not sufficient to enable a people as a people to maintain the condition of health which is so necessary if Germany is to reconstruct itself and eventually become a self-supporting nation.

Along the line of the comment made by the Senator from California I wish to offer for the RECORD an article by Miss Dorothy Thompson on the question of war prisoners which was recently published in the newspapers. With the consent of the Senate I should like to have the article incorporated in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ON THE RECORD

(By Dorothy Thompson)

The crisis in which the world finds itself today—a crisis unparalleled in the history of the white race and western civilization—is a moral crisis. It is marked by the almost universal break-down of morality and law. The war has not been won and it is impossible to make peace because the moral crisis, which—we thought—culminated in the murderous regime of Adolf Hitler, has not been resolved. We are in a state of progressive moral anarchy, and add to our confusion by calling progressive disintegration progress.

In Nuremberg a Herr Sauckel was condemned and hanged because he brought foreign workers to Germany and impressed them into slave labor. Slave labor is labor performed against consent and without free contract.

In sentencing Herr Sauckel, the Allies departed from a time-honored principle of western law, that a crime is not a crime unless it has been previously so defined in law. The moral justification for branding as a crime an act justified as wartime necessity and clearly not defined and subject to legal sanctions in international law was that it was, in fact, a crime before the conscience of mankind. The test of such justification is, however, that the prosecutors, as guardians of that conscience, should henceforth recognize it as a crime—whenever and by whomever committed—subject to the same conscience and the same sanctions.

There is no law except that which its codifiers, prosecutors, and judges agree to live under themselves.

However, on the day following the execution of Herr Sauckel newspapers reported that Russia had repulsed German protests against the exportation of Germans for labor in Russia on the ground that the "Germans had unconditionally surrendered and therefore had no voice in the matter." No conscience of mankind was involved. A certain American major in Munich, who directed a German paper, had previously expressed a similar opinion regarding the forced deportations of Germans from the East. Since then a Soviet newspaper in Irkutsk has stated that 5,000,000 prisoners of war are being retained in Siberia for labor on railroads, in mines, and on public works projects.

The Soviet Union is not the only country who thus, nearly 2 years after the end of hostilities, is employing what was defined at Nuremberg as slave labor. The Soviet Union was never a signatory to the Geneva Convention respecting prisoners of war. But the United States and France were. The United States held to that convention during the war, when American prisoners of war were in the hands of the Germans. But when our own and French prisoners were released, so that there was no possibility of reprisals, the United States turned over German prisoners of war to France. That country, thereafter, with our consent and connivance and in defiance of the Geneva Convention, has been employing them ever since as slave labor under the same definition of slave labor as that used against Herr Sauckel in Nuremberg.

The general attitude of the public in Allied countries is that "it serves the Germans right." Few care to recall that President Roosevelt, in his foreign-policy speech of September 1944, gave a specific pledge to the German people: "The Allies do not traffic in human slavery."

Whoever raises his voice today in behalf of the application of the new Nuremberg law to all, including ourselves, is promptly castigated as pro-German.

But do only a handful of people see that we are therewith deepening the moral anarchy which is developing into physical anarchy?

Do only a handful of people see that we cannot possibly achieve universal peace unless we can put universal foundations under our political life?

Do only a handful of people see that if, having defeated Germany, we accept for ourselves Hitler's standards and Hitler's methods, Hitler has conquered?

The only way peoples and governments can establish moral foundations under their national and international life is by the acceptance and application of the Golden Rule. It is to do to no one what you would not want done to yourself under similar circumstances. That is the essence of justice—the capacity to put oneself, one's nation, one's class, one's race, one's society in the dock on the charges preferred against another, and ask: Were I in this position—I, my Nation, class, or race—would I accept this judgment as just?

That question is the basis of morality and law. And until we accept this foundation we shall have neither international peace, social peace, nor peace of mind. We shall simply go on going crazy, in a split-personality division between our avowed moral standards and our actual behavior.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, Miss Thompson does well to raise, as did the Senator from California, the question of the treatment of German prisoners of war who have been turned over to the French by the Americans. She also points out, as has the Senator from California, that we have an obligation in regard to those prisoners. But there is another body of war prisoners not mentioned by the Senator from California, whom I would mention, and for whom I admit we are not directly responsible, but in regard to whom I think we must show some interest in the coming Moscow Conference. They are the German prisoners held by the Russians. How many thousands of them there are I do not know, but I think, as participants in the Geneva Conference, we have an obligation to see to it that the principles of the Geneva treaties, insofar as the treatment of war prisoners is concerned, are lived up to by an ally as well as by ourselves, because, after all, the Allies have like responsibilities in regard to the treatment of war prisoners.

In this article Miss Thompson uses the term "labor slaves" as applied to war prisoners, in calling the matter to our attention. I think we need to give due consideration to the subject.

I close this part of my remarks with this conclusion. We are not going to have permanent peace, Mr. President, unless in the Moscow Conference and other conferences—because there will be many additional conferences—we as signatories to the San Francisco Charter make it perfectly clear to the world that we propose, through the United Nations, to see to it that the objectives of that Charter become the policy of the world, and that we propose to find out whether all the signatories to the San Francisco Charter, including all our allies, have the same objectives in mind.

It means also, Mr. President, that if we wish the objectives of the San Francisco Charter to become the objectives of the world we must be able to see into all the countries of the world, including Russia. I hope that question will also be discussed at Moscow because, to me, peace is a living and dynamic thing, not a matter of form, under which we can escape obligations once we put our signatures on a document of peace such as the San Francisco Charter. If we are to make it a dynamic thing, I think as a nation we need to make it perfectly clear at the Moscow Conference that we have a humanitarian interest in the treatment that prisoners of war are receiving from any nation in the world, I care not what the nation is. There are too many American boys buried as a result of this war who sacrificed themselves to establish the type of humanitarianism for which I am pleading this afternoon for us to disregard our obligations insofar as writing a fair and just peace is concerned. We cannot write a fair and just peace on the basis of the principle of national sovereignty which gives to any nation, including our own, and also including Russia, the right to determine what treatment shall be given to prisoners of war.

DEPORTATION ORDERS AGAINST BASQUE SHEEPHERDERS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, the wool-growing industry of the State of Idaho is being greatly embarrassed and troubled by the actions of the Department of Justice in bringing deportation orders against law-abiding people who by their skill and industry have made themselves extremely valuable to our great sheep and wool industry. I refer to the numerous deportation cases which now are being brought against our Basque population. Many of these people entered the country legally as seamen, but overstayed their visit illegally in order to take up residence in our State, where their native skill in handling sheep has been a blessing. For many years they lived in peace as useful and law-abiding citizens. Then Congress passed a law requiring registration of aliens. They complied with the law by registering. But when their registration papers were examined technical defects were found. At great expense to the Government, Justice Department investigators have investigated each of their cases and have chased these people into the far corners of our grazing lands. I do not blame the Department of Justice for this, because under the statute the Department had no choice. The law is mandatory; it leaves no discretion whatever to the Justice Department.

The Department must hold hearings at great expense, and then it must arrange, at further great expense, to deport these people.

I have received hundreds of complaints, not from the Basques themselves, but from the employers who find their services so valuable. I have also had complaints from their neighbors, who have found them to be excellent people of good character and of unimpeachable habits and reputations. Their moral conduct has never been subject to reproach.

The Department of Justice does not like this unpleasant duty, but it has no choice.

From time to time my colleagues and I have introduced special bills for the relief of individual Basques. Frankly, that is no real solution to the problem. Last year when we passed the Congressional Reorganization Act we were almost unanimous in our condemnation of special bills of all sorts.

The problem is one, therefore, which certainly should be handled on the basis of general legislation.

Today I have introduced a bill to limit the time within which proceedings may be instituted against aliens subject to deportation on technical grounds. We already prescribe time limitations against the prosecution of criminals and against the institution of stale lawsuits in the civil courts of the land. The courts have time and again noted that deportation proceedings are civil in nature. Nevertheless, we do not even afford law-abiding aliens the same protection against prosecutions which is accorded to common criminals. The purpose of my bill is to prescribe a 10-year statute of limitation barring the deportation of aliens who merely have technical defects in their immigration papers.

The bill would also redefine the term "entry." Under existing interpretations, this term has been held to mean any entry, no matter what the purpose or duration of the absence which precedes it. This results in numerous exclusion and deportation proceedings in cases where lawfully resident aliens depart to Mexico or Canada for a day, an evening, or even an hour. It has resulted in many capricious and inhumane rulings.

In the Seventy-ninth Congress, a House subcommittee conducted a thorough and painstaking investigation of our immigration laws, and held hearings throughout the United States. Many witnesses who appeared before that subcommittee urged the enactment of legislation of this nature. The House subcommittee and the full House committee favored its enactment. A bill introduced by Representative GEORGE MILLER, of California, embodying these points, is presently before the House Judiciary Committee. I believe that the provisions of this bill should be enacted into law so that the injustices of existing law may be corrected, and in order that law-abiding aliens may no longer be threatened with or subjected to useless and unnecessary deportation proceedings after the expiration of the period of limitation.

I am also introducing a companion bill the purpose of which is to give the Attorney General discretionary power in these cases. Very often alien residents of many different races have rendered signal service to this country in war, and yet they are subject to deportation. I know of some who were sent abroad as translators during the war, who rendered extremely valuable service, and yet on their return they find themselves subject to deportation orders. These are cases which, if individually called to our attention, would excite our deepest sympathy. We do not, however, have the time to hear them. The Attorney General does; and I think he should have the power, after investigating these cases, to use his discretion in withholding the sanctions of the immigration laws in instances where special consideration is merited.

I wish to point out one other circumstance. Not only do these sturdy sheepherders make an appeal because of their value to the wool-growing industry, but I think it would be particularly callous to deport them because in so doing we would be forcing them to return to the tyrannical oppression which we all know exists in Fascist Spain. The Basques, who come from the hills of the Pyrenees, are freedom-loving people. They were the last to submit to the yoke of the tyranny which was imposed by the German, Italian, and Moorish armies which fought under Franco. They share the burning memory of the merciless bombardment of their capital, Guernica. We all remember how Goering waited until market-day, when the farmers and the sheepherders from the surrounding country came to town for the fair, and then unleashed his Luftwaffe to destroy them, their families, and the products of their fields which they had driven to market in their little carts. That was the first major atrocity of the late war. The Basque people will never forget it. It is hard for me to believe that Congress wishes to force the Justice Department to take these Basque sheepherders from their new-found happiness and usefulness in the hills of Idaho and the other Western States and to return them to such brutal oppression.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a few remarks on the subject about which the Senator from Idaho has spoken. I rise to do so because I do not see on the floor of the Senate at this time any other member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, in connection with this subject, I wish to say that the Judiciary Committee spent the whole morning giving it very serious consideration. I desire to add my voice to that of the Senator from Idaho, because in the section of the country from which I come we are interested not so much in the raising of sheep as in the product which comes from sheep. The people to whom the Senator from Idaho has referred support our great woolen industry. Many of those men and women were brought here deliberately by our Government, during the war, and they have made a tremendous contribution to the maintenance of the sheep industry in the great western part of the United States.

On behalf of the Judiciary Committee, I wish to say that representatives of the Department of Justice, who appeared before the committee this morning, expressed their great sympathy in regard to this problem.

I believe that the Department itself intends to offer some remedial legislation on the subject. I am quite certain that if the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary had been present at this moment, he would have expressed these thoughts himself, and that he will approve of my having done so in his absence.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of the Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Lewis W. Douglas, of Arizona, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain; and Warren R. Austin, of Vermont, to be the representative on the United Nations Commission for Conventional Armaments.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herman B. Baruch to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Netherlands.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that that nomination be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry other nominations in the diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the other nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REDEVELOPMENT LAND AGENCY

The legislative clerk read sundry nominations to the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gordon R. Clapp to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which had been reported adversely.

Mr. WHITE. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of all confirmations of today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. WHITE. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until Wednesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Wednesday, March 5, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 3 (legislative day of February 19), 1947:

Edward A. Dent to be a member, for a term of 2 years. (Appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.)

Richard R. Atkinson to be a member, for a term of 1 year. (Appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O spirit of the living God, we praise Thee for the abiding assurance that Thy mercy never faileth. Eternal love is in Thy heart and Thy children of every realm are ever before Thee. We beseech Thee to bring our people under Thy blessed ministry, making our land the evangel of our Elder Brother.

Grant that we may not, as a people, be slaves of the flesh, eating and drinking and given to idle luxury, but look to the Good Samaritan as our model—feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, destroying inequalities, and setting the prisoners free. Fill our land with hearts undaunted, eager to break down barriers of race, creed, and color, and to prove to the world that we are in deed and in truth a Christian nation, heeding the Macedonian call for help. O America, harken and heed!

"To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will!"

We pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 28, 1947, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes.

NEWSPRINT INVESTIGATION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 58, Eightieth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the select committee to conduct a study and investigation of all matters related to the need for adequate supplies of newsprint, printing and wrapping paper, paper products, paper pulp, and pulpwood the following Members of the House: Mr. BROWN of Ohio, chairman; Mr. WOLVERTON; Mr. SHAFER; Mr. VURSELL; Mr. BECKWORTH; Mr. HARLESS of Arizona; and Mr. SIKES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and include in each a memorial from the Oregon State Legislature.

POTATO DAY ON CAPITOL HILL

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the thousands of farmers who grow potatoes throughout the Nation, the men who market and distribute potatoes, and the manufacturers who use potatoes either principally or incidentally in their production, I take pleasure in announcing to my colleagues that today is Potato Day on Capitol Hill.

As all of my colleagues now know, potatoes are not good for food only as potatoes. They are used in a variety of ways by many types of American business, not the least of which is the American baking business. An increasing amount of the Nation's potatoes are going into the manufacture of potato culture, which in turn is used in baking potato bread like our mothers used to make.

Today, when you go into the House restaurant to eat, you will see plenty of potato bread on the table waiting for you. There is plenty over in the Senate dining room, too. Also, you will be served cake which was made with potato culture. Both the cake and bread will be served fresh, but if it were necessary that you had to keep either one for several days, you would find that each one retains its freshness much longer than does bread or cake made without potato culture.

In addition, you will find plenty of potato chips, furnished by the alert executive secretary of the National Potato Chip Institute, which maintains executive headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, although my interest in potatoes is an abiding one and although I thought I knew a lot about potato marketing and potato uses in general, I must admit that I was somewhat surprised to learn the other day that my own State of Michigan is the leading producer among all States of potato chips. In Detroit alone, there are 19 automatic potato machines which peel, wash, and slice potatoes. These machines use 16 100-pound sacks of potatoes per hour, during which they produce 400 pounds of potato chips.

It requires 4 pounds of potatoes to make 1 pound of potato chips. Last year, the potato-chip industry converted 924,832,764 pounds of potatoes into potato chips, so you can understand how important this industry is to the potato grower, not only in Michigan but in Maine, Idaho, California, and, indeed, throughout the Nation.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues on the order of Dr. I. Q.: "Let's have a spud, bud, and I promise it won't be a dud."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. TWYMAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEYER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. PLOESER (at the request of Mr. BAKEWELL) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include an article by David Lawrence and a letter.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

WHAT DETERMINES FOOD PRICES

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, during the past few days there has been an evident attempt to show that the advances in wheat and hog prices are due to the death of the OPA. There are no calories in the OPA.

Saturday night Mayor LaGuardia called attention to the meat prices in Canada with 45 cents per pound for steak.

Now is the appropriate time to see what the left hand is doing as well as the right hand.

The Department of Agriculture must assume its part of the responsibility for the agriculture prices. The Department January 14, 1947, press release asked the American wheat producer to plant over a million acres less wheat in 1947 than 1946. The Department of Agriculture on January 14, 1947, asked the American hog producer to reduce the number of brood sows. The Department has recently asked for a reduction of beef cattle on United States farms. The Department of Agriculture has, on January 14, 1947, asked for an increase of over 400,000,000 pounds in United States milk production, even though last week they put a floor price of 10 cents per pound on powdered skim—4½ cents less per pound than the OPA ceiling. The fact that powdered skim with its 35 percent digestible protein has had only a 10-cent per pound support, indicates that our Agriculture Administration may find itself giving the American consumer dairy prices comparable to the 30-cent pork prices.

The old witch, Mrs. Scarcity, has been seen by so many for so long by the Department of Agriculture that the Department appears incapable of providing a constructive food program.

Anyone trying to deceive the American people into believing that the death of OPA has determined or will determine wheat and pork prices can well obtain the facts before they become too deeply involved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a concurrent resolution passed by the North Dakota Legislative Assembly.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT OF GREECE

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, according to press reports over the week end the State Department has agreed in principle to help Great Britain carry the burden of maintaining the present government in Greece. It is reported that the total financial aid under consideration for the program of assistance will be approximately $350,000,000 and that possibly $250,000,000 will be required during the first year.

I wish to go on record as complimenting the Department of State on this show of firmness and realism in our foreign policy. It will serve the interests of the United States to halt the march of communism to the west. It will serve the interests of the United States to prevent the control of Greece by the Communists who take orders from Moscow. It will serve our interests to prevent the Soviet Union from becoming a Mediterranean power.

In 1945 I visited Vienna, Prague, Budapest, Belgrade, and Athens. From what I saw and from the information received I was convinced that Greece and Greece alone is the only hope for democracy in the Balkan area. Greece is the one country in this section where Anglo-American ideals and principles have a chance of surviving and spreading. It is the only country in which Great Britain and the United States have an opportunity to make their influence felt.

I hope that the United States will do everything in its power to aid Greece. I hope it will do everything in its power to assist Great Britain in Greece. I hope it will do everything in its power to prevent communism from controlling a strategic Mediterranean country.

THE FISCAL POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, Senate action in reducing from six billion to four and one-half billion, the House proposal to cut spending, and then earmarking more than one-half of the proposed reduction for application to the public debt is a curious piece of business. For one thing, it would indicate a lack of confidence in the revenue committees of both House and Senate, and, secondly, it might jeopardize a reduction in taxes, no matter what form a tax bill might finally take.

Equally important is the strange hypersensitivity that has been expressed toward economy. It may be that the spending bug bit so deep these many years that there is today a confirmed allergy toward saving money for the taxpayers. It takes such interesting forms. It is whispered that the budget cannot be cut—that this is only a gesture, that military needs will not permit, that peace is in the balance, that foreign obligations will rapidly increase. These folks better call it the "bulg-et," rather than the budget.

We better get over our cynicism about this thing.

It is the arithmetic of folly to suppose that 60,000,000 American producers can carry the burdens of the whole world. Certainly we can supply some food and medicines to alleviate hunger and suffering. But the economic heresy persists that we can rehabilitate the world.

In June of this year, we observe the second anniversary of the United Nations Charter. Who can confidently assert that real progress has been made. Red fascism marches on despite American food, cash, and credit. The largest beneficiaries of our aid are in the arms of communism. We are rapidly expending our own resources. We better begin thinking about the survival of America in this mad world.

The cynics who believed that we must continue the shell game—shelling out that is—for every purpose both at home and abroad are playing with fire. There is an end to the resources of any country where one-third of the whole national income is taken for local, State, and Federal taxes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on each of the next three legislative days I may extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to incorporate a radio address by Mr. Sam Pettengill, a former Member of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

AMERICA FIRST

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] had made that speech a year or two ago, William Powers Maloney, if he had not at the moment been before the local court for disorderly conduct, might have had him down before a grand jury charged with being a seditionist, for in those days being a loyal American was in some folks' opinion a crime.

This idea that Americans should begin to think about their own country, look after their own interests, think of their country's future, has been out of the picture for some time. Since November 5 it is not quite so dangerous to talk Americanism. As an isolationist I am glad to see that I am again privileged to speak up for my own country.

I call attention to the fact that this tax matter is just a minor affair. It is but part—a small part—of the picture. After we have given all the money and all the munitions of war and supplies in support of Great Britain, the next thing we will be asked to do is to draft American youth to go over and settle the troubles in the Balkans, Greece, in China, all over the world. That is just what is coming if we keep on the road now opening before us. That is the thing I do not like and I do not intend to do anything to promote that policy. Our dollars, our supplies, our munitions of war, our youth—millions of them—will for the third time be the pawns, the cannon fodder, in the game played by the internationalists, the one-worlders, by United Nations. Today I warn the mothers of America—I warn our youth of the gateway opening before them.

THE SCHOOL-LUNCH PROGRAM

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House this morning the serious danger that is threatening the school-lunchroom program. March 15 will find this very worth-while program bankrupt and so far as the records of the Eightieth Congress reveal there has not been any action taken to prevent this from happening. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MORRISON] has introduced a bill calling for the appropriation of $15,000,000 to continue the program through the fiscal year 1947, but no action has been taken on the bill.

I would like to call to the Members' attention a table inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 17 by Senator AIKEN which is very informative on this subject. All States participate in the program and health authorities agree that it is a fine investment which makes for better health conditions in the future. Four and one-half million children ate these balanced lunches this year.

How can he reconcile sending three hundred and fifty millions to occupied countries and deny this vital program to our youth?

The people of America want this program continued, and what the masses want we should provide, so long as it is consistent with our ability to provide it.

If this program dies during this session, its death will go down to our everlasting discredit.

THE LAST SPEECH OF ARCHBISHOP STEPINAC

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, the freedom-loving world watched with amazement and chagrin the trial and persecution of Archbishop Stepinac. I have had the good fortune to procure the official text of the defense speech delivered by Archbishop Stepinac at his so-called trial at Zagreb, Yugoslavia. It is not only an historical document, but it is also one of the finest statements ever made by a man who loves liberty and who would not retreat even though his own life and freedom were at stake.

I recommend that every Member of this House read the archbishop's words that appear in the Appendix of the RECORD, page A769, so that you may have a better understanding of the question and at the same time realize the patriotism and sanctity of the archbishop.

PROTECTING GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this day a bill to prohibit the appropriation for any unofficial purposes of certain documents by officers or former officers of the United States.

The bill specifies that no officer of the United States, while holding or upon leaving office shall appropriate for any unofficial purpose any document or portion thereof, or any copy of such document or portion thereof, which is in his possession or subject to his control by reason of his office.

The passage of this bill would prevent the fiasco of a former Cabinet officer's taking with him on his retirement from office official documents and placing them in 900 private volumes.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time we declare there is no private ownership in any official documents. Anyone violating the provisions of the act would subject himself to a fine of $1,000.

The mere offering of this bill should be warning to all officials in the Government that they cannot lift, take, and appropriate official documents and use them for their own private interests or for their own private profit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

FINAL LIQUIDATION OF THE FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 124, Rept. No. 82), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 2102) to provide for a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm-labor supply program, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower at St. Louis on February 24.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter he received from the Lithuanian Legation.

Mr. CARROLL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Times.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

DEBT REDUCTION

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised and shocked this morning to read a United Press dispatch quoting one of the most distinguished Members of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, regarding the unanimous action of the other body in earmarking $2,600,000 for retirement of the public debt in the legislative budget as cockeyed. If that is the attitude of the Republican Party, which he presumes to represent, then I am sure the people that I represent do not appreciate such a careless attitude toward the important subject of reduction of our record-breaking public debt.

My people prefer to have debt reduction rather than tax reduction and it certainly is not cockeyed to vote for debt reduction when we have the most staggering debt in the world's history.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman going to vote to cut down all of these appropriations that are not essential? In other words, is he going along with the idea to determine whether we are going to have any money at all to pay for the things which the gentleman and many Members of the House voted for?

Mr. MONRONEY. I will vote to reduce every nonessential item. I will do that, but I still say we have to reduce this public debt and to reduce it is not cockeyed action by the Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OBLIGATION TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS, MUNICIPALITIES, ETC.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, the other day the President of the United States sent a message to Congress in which he strongly urged the Congress to increase the authorization in the Lanham Act by $50,000,000 in order that the Federal Government might fulfill its contractual obligations to educational institutions, municipalities, and other public bodies, arising under that act. Today I have introduced a bill to achieve that end.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity that the Members of the Eightieth Congress have had to do something specific for veterans in connection with the housing program. This is only the first step, but it is of vital importance that we take this first step quickly. Other housing bills will come before this Congress which, too, are of great importance. I should like to emphasize that this Congress cannot devote itself to any legislation more important than meeting the problems, the evils, and the shortages resulting from our failure to properly act in the housing field. We have been in session 2 months. A third of the legislative time of this body has passed and, notwithstanding the importance of housing legislation, nothing has been done.

We all realize that the increased costs of production and labor have caused the condition complained of in the President's message. We must go forward with this program. This is the responsibility of the Federal Government. Educational institutions and municipalities have spent considerable money clearing land and installing public utilities and they have incurred great expense under the original provision of the Lanham Act. I repeat, the Federal Government cannot shirk its responsibility now. Moreover, there is desperate need for the speedy fulfillment of the intent of the Lanham Act. Veterans and their families need homes now and we must not spend our time upon legislation which is relatively unimportant. I ask that all veterans in Congress and those interested in the plight of veterans give this legislation their immediate attention.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address he delivered before the Wildlife Bureau of South Carolina.

Mr. HEDRICK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the Charleston Gazette.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Hon. Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, before the Veterans of Foreign Wars on February 22.

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include in each editorials.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it is a great thing for me to sit here now and listen to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], and many of the Members on that side of the House, when they talk about how much they are for economy and what they are interested in doing in trying to get this country on its feet financially. You know, I have sat here for a good many years, and I asked the question years ago, "Where are you going to get the money?" That was when the New Deal started to spend the money, to squander our resources, when you tried to do everything for everybody, without doing anything for it, and increased this debt. I saw this debt grow from $21,500,000,000 under the New Deal to $270,000,000,000. I know who the Members were that voted for all these expenditures—most of them on that side of the aisle—and now that the Republican Party is trying to cut down the national debt, that those fellows on that side of the House created, they are the very same people that should now come in and say, "Gentlemen, we are going to do everything we can to cut this debt down and eliminate these expenses and try to pay something on the public debt, even if we have to have increased taxation." But oh, no; that is not the case; oh, no; they criticize the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Well, you spenders do something to help, not retard this gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Follow him, and we will cut out unnecessary spending. We will balance the Budget, and we will pay more than two and one-half billion on this New Deal-created debt. We, as Americans, must assume that responsibility, even though we are not responsible for creating the debt. You Democrats who created it should stop your criticizing our desire in trying to pay your debt. You should be mighty glad you have a party now that believes in sound government, a sensible budget, basing our spending on our ability to pay, with some realization of the taxpayers' ability and his wishes in the matter. Be wise and economize.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Masachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix.]

FOREIGN COMMITMENTS

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that before the administration commits the American people to the spending of two or three hundred million dollars in Greece, that this House and the people have a full and genuine opportunity to discuss and appraise the merits and demerits of this adventure.

We have sent a good many hundreds of millions of dollars into France in the last 2 years, between half a billion and a billion dollars, yet who is there that will say that France is further away from communism now than it was 2 years ago?

We have sent hundreds of millions of dollars into Yugoslavia in the last 2 years, yet who is there that will say that Yugoslavia is further away from communism today than it was 2 years ago?

We have sent many hundreds of millions of dollars into China, yet who is there that will say that China is further away from communism today than it was 2 years ago?

It was Lenin himself who declared that the surest way to overturn the existing social order is to debauch the currency. This attempt to control Greece by hand-outs will accelerate the debauching of the American money system.

It is a real question whether we are not in fact playing into the hands of Stalin and the Communists when we keep spread out over the world with spending activities that bleed our taxpayers and create continuous inflation.

Soon we may find that in the economic field, we have repeated the mistakes made by Napoleon and Hitler in the military field with reference to Russia. Both of those men became militarily overextended when in conflict with Russia, and their overextended position defeated them.

Today, with economic adventures two-thirds of the way around the world, America is in critical financial position. We must contract our hand-out activities, or we will have an easy victim for totalitarianism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter from the Strob-Lappan-Klem American Legion Post, of Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

OCEAN TRANSPORTATION SERVICE TO AND FROM ALASKA

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out "with American-citizen operators deemed by the Commission" and insert "with American citizens operating American flag-line vessels deemed by the Commission."

Page 2, lines 20 and 21, strike out "Commission for the use of the privately owned vessels, and" and insert "Commission for the use of the existing privately owned vessels, and in the case of vessels acquired subsequent to the enactment of this act an amount equivalent to 15 percent per annum of the purchase price of said vessel plus capitalized betterments, and."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, the two amendments in question are merely clarifying amendments and do not in any wise change the substance of the legislation as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECTIVE SERVICE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 162)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Armed Services and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The Selective Service and Training Act will expire on March 31, 1947. The only assured way of maintaining the Army and the Navy at their required strengths during the fiscal year 1948 is through resort to Selective Service. I have decided, however, after most careful consideration and consultation with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and with the earnest desire of placing our Army and Navy on an entirely volunteer basis at the earliest possible moment, that I should not recommend an extension of the act at this time. In order that my position may be better understood, the following facts are submitted.

The strength of the Army, including the Air Forces, must be maintained throughout the next fiscal year at 1,070,000 and the Navy, including the Marine Corps, must be maintained at a strength of 571,000 if this Nation is to have reasonable assurance of security. These requirements are absolute, and we must not divest the War and Navy Departments of the means of meeting any material shortages.

Personnel losses from the Army through separation during fiscal year 1948 can be computed with a reasonable degree of accuracy. They will reach a total of 360,000, or an average of 30,000 per month. Gains, on the other hand, cannot be so accurately determined. A recruiting campaign for volunteers for the Army was initiated in September 1945, but shortages in recruiting have heretofore forced the War Department to fill the gap through Selective Service. The last 2 months of 1946 provided an average of 18,000 recruits per month. During January 1947, however, they rose to some 35,000 enlistments and during the first 2 weeks of February were about 13,000. Giving weight to the fact that past records prove January to be the best recruiting month of the year, it is estimated by the War Department that if present efforts to obtain volunteers are continued, it can count with a fair degree of certainty on an average of 20,000 enlistments and reenlistments per month during the coming fiscal year. If only 20,000 recruits per month are obtained, the deficit in required strength will be about 120,000 by July 1, 1948. However, there is a reasonable expectation that better results may be obtained.

The War Department is now engaged in reducing the Army to the strength of 1,070,000 on June 30, 1947, provided for in the budget. In effecting this reduction it will shortly direct the discharge of all nonvolunteers.

The Navy Department is also reducing the Navy to the strength provided for in the budget for the next fiscal year. To maintain an average strength of 571,000 during the fiscal year 1948 the Navy will require approximately 150,000 recruits. Without the incentive of selective service it is not certain that this number of recruits can be obtained.

The Army and the Navy are still reducing their forces, and the Army is not using inductees for the full term the law allows; consequently, an extension of selective service at this time would be solely on the basis of predicted shortages during the next year. With a recent brightening in recruiting prospects this appears to be the logical time to shoulder the risks involved.

Therefore, I recommend that no extension of selective service at this time be made, but with the understanding that—

First, the War and Navy Departments will request the reenactment of a Selective Service Act at a later date if they are unable to maintain the Army at a strength of 1,070,000 men and the Navy at a strength of 571,000 through voluntary enlistments.

Second, the Army and Navy be authorized from appropriated funds to employ temporarily the necessary civilian personnel over and above those specifically authorized and appropriated for by the Congress to the extent necessary to balance any shortage of enlisted personnel when strength may fall below the required levels.

The efforts of the War Department to reach the desired goal of an entirely volunteer Regular Army are worthy of the maximum support on the part of the administration, the Congress, and the people.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1947.

THE ZIONISTS OR COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS ATTEMPTING TO STIR TROUBLE BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot remain silent while a little band of Communists who call themselves Zionists, and who are opposed by the conservative Jews as well as a vast majority of gentiles in America, are attempting to stir up a war between the United States and Great Britain over the Palestine question.

Somebody in Cleveland, Ohio, sent me a newspaper clipping showing the picture of one Rabbi Zapkinsky, who is over here for the purpose of stirring up trouble between Great Britain and the United States. This alien rabbi is quoted as saying:

> Eleven unknown agents Irgun have come to the United States to elicit sympathy and support for Palestine organizations which are actively fighting the British.

This organization of Zionists has been playing hand in glove with the Communists of this country. As I said, they are not supported by the conservative Jews of the Nation.

I, for one, am not willing to sit here and see this organization spread this poisonous propaganda and to try to stir up friction between the United States and Great Britain at a time when that great country is suffering in the agonies of a crisis the like of which she has never seen before.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CLAIM OF SWITZERLAND AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1040) to authorize the payment of $425.88 by the United States to the Government of Switzerland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] to give me some information on this. Has the Solicitor of the State Department been queried about this bill? I note the Navy Department recommends enactment and the Bureau of the Budget has no objection, but it occurs to me that perhaps the Solicitor might have some interest in this because it may establish a legal precedent. I wonder if that matter has been taken up with the Solicitor's office.

Mr. EATON. We have not taken it up with the Solicitor's office, but the Department of State is in favor of the bill.

Mr. CARROLL. Have they submitted a report?

Mr. EATON. We have a report; yes. The report is here.

Mr. CARROLL. It was not submitted with the bill. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. EATON. No.

Mr. CARROLL. But you do have such a report and they are in favor of it?

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to the proper representatives of the Government of Switzerland, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $425.88, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the loss of food and other items stored aboard the Japanese vessel Awa Maru, when that vessel was sunk in western Pacific waters.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS, ORDERS, MEDALS, AND EMBLEMS TENDERED BY COBELLIGERENT NATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1381, to amend the act of July 20, 1942 (56 Stat. 662) relating to the acceptance of decorations, orders, medals, and emblems of officers and enlisted men of the armed forces of the United States tendered them by governments of cobelligerent nations or other American Republics.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides "that officers and enlisted men of the armed forces of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized during the present war and for a year thereafter to accept from the governments of cobelligerent nations, neutral nations, or other American Republics such decorations, orders, medals, and emblems as may be tendered them, and which are conferred by such governments upon members of their own military forces, hereby expressly granting the consent of Congress required for this purpose by clause 8 of section 9, article I, of the Constitution: Provided, That any such officer or enlisted man is hereby authorized to wear any decoration, order, medal, or emblem accepted pursuant to authority contained in this act or heretofore accepted by such person from the government of a cobelligerent nation, neutral nation, or of an American Republic."

May I request the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] to explain why the necessity for this bill at this time, since hostilities have not ceased and we have 1 year from that date in which to confer these medals.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. DEANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It is very clear in the report. The bill therefore has the joint effect of permitting members of the armed services to accept decorations from neutral nations, and to clarify the act of July 20, 1942, so as to permit officers and enlisted men to accept such decorations awarded subsequent to July 20, 1942. That is all it does.

Mr. DEANE. This bill will carry it forward for what period of time?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. We do not know.

Mr. DEANE. What are the underlying reasons for this legislation?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. My own idea is that it is a very fine thing, particularly for enlisted men. They do not get a lot out of war except some infantry badges. It means a good deal to an enlisted man to have a ribbon from some of these countries when serving overseas after the war. The proposed law provides that officers and enlisted men of the armed forces of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized during the present war and for a year thereafter to accept from the governments of cobelligerent nations, neutral nations, or the other American Republics, such decorations, orders, medals, and emblems, and so forth. I cannot see any objection to it whatever. The bill came from the committee by a unanimous vote.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of July 20, 1942 (56 Stat. 662; 10 U. S. C. 1423a), be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:
> "That officers and enlisted men of the armed forces of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized during the present war and for a year thereafter to accept from the governments of cobelligerent nations, neutral nations, or the other American Republics such decorations, orders, medals, and emblems, as may be tendered them, and which are conferred by such governments upon members of their own military forces, hereby expressly granting the consent of Congress required for this purpose by clause 8 of section 9, article I, of the Constitution: Provided, That any such officer or enlisted man is hereby authorized to wear any decoration, order, medal, or emblem accepted pursuant to authority contained in this act or heretofore accepted by such person from the government of a cobelligerent nation, neutral nation, or of an American Republic."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made and include further quotations from the article from which I quoted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

RENEWAL OF 5-YEAR LEVEL-PREMIUM-TERM POLICIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1327, to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium-term policies for another 5-year period.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is now pending before the Rules Committeee a request from the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] for a rule on this bill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF EXPERIMENTAL SUBMARINES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1367) to authorize the construction of experimental submarines, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] if the purpose of this bill is not to change the appropriation of $30,000,000 to the construction of experimental submarines?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HESS], chairman of the subcommittee, to answer the question. He has all the information.

Mr. HESS. The bill merely repeals a statutory provision limiting the availability of the balance of funds appropriated for increase and replacement of naval vessels.

The money has already been appropriated but the act must be amended to permit these ships to be built.

Mr. CARROLL. In other words, $30,000,000 is to be used for building two experimental submarines.

Mr. HESS. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. It is a laudable purpose, but I want to call attention to the $50,000,000 we are asking for veterans' housing.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of February 18, 1946 (Public Law 301, 79th Cong., ch. 30, 2d sess.), or any other provision of law enacted prior to the date of approval of this act, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to undertake the construction of approximately 4,000 displacement tons of submarine vessels for experimental purposes in order to guide the future design and construction of such vessels.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That the cost of the vessels, the construction of which is authorized by this act, shall not exceed $30,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 731) to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I talked at length to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] concerning his meritorious bill. It seems that this bill was agreed to during the last session but I think it would be helpful to have the gentleman explain to the House just what the bill provides.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], the author of the bill, is here and will gladly explain it.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that there is no expenditure required in connection with this bill for this year because the budget has already been completed; and, further, if the present land remains under the Wildlife Service it will cost more than to create this national monument to a great statesman.

Mr. DEANE. Does the gentleman have any approximate idea of what the present cost would be?

Mr. LEMKE. The present cost—there will be no cost this year—will be $75,000. The monument to Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora will cost $35,000; and, then meeting the objection of the President to the bill, before that there was nothing for the reestablishment of the home where Theodore Roosevelt used to live, we added $40,000 to reestablish and reconstruct the original ranch home in which Theodore Roosevelt lived and wrote most of his books.

Mr. DEANE. Is there any difference of opinion between the Department of the Interior and the Wildlife Service on this subject?

Mr. LEMKE. There is some friction between the Wildlife Service and the National Park Service. The trouble seems to be between two subordinate bureaus within the Department of the Interior.

I have been assured by the National Park Service that if this bill is passed they will be glad to take it on; and, further, that a Great Plains National Park would be very desirable in connection with people going to Yellowstone Park from Chicago and the Great Lakes and regions in between.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from North Dakota has stated that the initial cost would be $75,000. What will the ultimate total cost be?

Mr. LEMKE. The ultimate total cost will depend upon what is done. There is no specific appropriation for any of these national monuments. What the National Park Service may desire to spend in bringing this monument into keeping with the rest of the Nation's national parks is something none of us can foretell.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. So the gentleman cannot tell the House what the ultimate cost will be.

Mr. LEMKE. Any more than I can tell what the ultimate cost of any other national park will be.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that the cost to the Government under this legislation will be no different than it is at the present time. This land is being administered by the Wildlife Bureau of the Department of the Interior and the cost would be approximately the same under both situations.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman talks about administration. I am talking about the construction cost of the memorial.

Mr. BARRETT. The memorial authorized to be constructed here is a statue of Theodore Roosevelt at a cost of some $35,000. Once it is constructed it will cost nothing to maintain.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. May I say that I am not going to object to this request, but I think it is high time we in this Congress begin to think about the Federal debt. It is these little things that set a precedent, it is the pyramiding of these little amounts that ultimately eventuate in large amounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this bill is passed, what precedence will this project take over existing parks that are now greatly depleted because of lack of funds, involving the building of roads and a great many other problems which the Interior Department indicates it cannot carry through because of the shortage of appropriations?

Mr. LEMKE. It would not take any precedence; in fact, it would come after those.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land, title to which is vested in the United States of America, and being in the State of North Dakota, and within the boundaries particularly described, as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where the north line of the right-of-way of United States Highway Numbered 10 intersects the east boundary of section 36, township 140 north, range 101 west, fifth principal meridian; thence southwesterly and northwesterly along the north line of said right-of-way through section 1, township 139 north, range 101 west, and sections 36, 35, 34, 27, 28, and 29, township 140 north, range 101 west, to the west boundary of said section 29; north along section lines to the northwest corner of said section 29; west along section line to the southwest corner of section 19, township 140 north, range 101 west; north along township line to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 140 north, range 102 west; west to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section 24; north to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section 24; westerly along section lines to the southwest corner of section 16, township 140 north, range 102 west; northerly along section lines to the northwest corner of section 4, township 140 north, range 102 west; thence west along township line to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 34, township 141 north, range 102 west; northerly through the center of sections 34 and 27 to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 27 of said township 141 north, range 102 west; easterly along section lines to the northeast corner of section 28, township 141 north, range 101 west; south along section lines to the southeast corner of said section 28; east along section line to the northeast corner of section 34, township 141 north, range 101 west; south to the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of section 35, township 141 north, range 101 west; easterly through center of sections 35 and 36 to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of said section 36 of said township 141 north, range 101 west; south to the southeast corner of said section 36; thence east along township line to the northeast corner of lot 3, section 2, township 140 north, range 101 west; southerly through the center of sections 2 and 11 to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of said section 11, township 140 north, range 101 west; easterly along section lines to the northeast corner of section 13 of said township 140 north, range 101 west; southerly along township line to the northwest corner of section 19, township 140 north, range 100 west; easterly along north line of said section 19 to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter; southerly through center of sections 19, 30, and 31 to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 31; easterly along the center of said section 31 to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter; southerly along the east line of said section 31 to the southeast corner; westerly along the township line to the east line of section 36, township 140 north, range 101 west; northerly along the township line between townships 140 north, range 100 west and 140 north, range 101 west to the north right-of-way line of United States Highway Numbered 10, the place of beginning, containing 35,270 acres, more or less, are hereby dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, and shall be known as the Theodore Roosevelt National Park. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to construct and maintain a road or highway through the park connecting with a State or Federal highway.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the condemnation of lands for sites for public buildings, and other purposes" (25 Stat. 357), to acquire title to the lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto that are privately owned within the boundaries of the said national park, and such property, when acquired, shall become a part thereof: Provided, That when the owner of such lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reasonable, the Secretary may purchase the same without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, donations of land, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto required for the Theodore Roosevelt National Park: And provided further, That title and evidence of title to land and interests therein acquired for said park shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of acquiring non-Federal lands within the boundaries of said park as established by this act, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to exchange federally owned lands within the Roosevelt recreational demonstration area project, located outside the boundaries of the park for State or privately owned lands of approximately equal value within the boundaries of the park, when in his opinion such action is in the interest of the United States, the title to any lands acquired under this section to be satisfactory to the Attorney General. Upon the vesting of title thereto in the United States, any lands acquired pursuant to this authorization shall become a part of the park and shall be subject to the laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to obtain by purchase or condemnation proceedings, as part of said Theodore Roosevelt National Park, the northwest quarter of section 33, township 144, range 102, and to reconstruct thereon the log ranch house 30 by 60 feet, the log blacksmith shop 16 by 20 feet, one log stable 16 by 20 feet, one log stable 20 by 30 feet, log dog house, three log rectangular corrals, and one log circular corral, as they existed at the time the premises were occupied by Theodore Roosevelt: Provided, That the total cost of such land and buildings shall not exceed $40,000.

SEC. 5. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," as amended.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak., with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts: Provided, That the cost of the monument shall not exceed $35,000 and there shall be conveyed to the United States such suitable site as may in the judgment of the Secretary be required for said monument: Provided further, That the village of Medora, or other public agency or organization, shall furnish in writing assurance satisfactory to the Secretary of its willingness to assume the perpetual care and upkeep of the monument.

SEC. 7. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right-of-way, or any other purposes whatsoever, or shall affect the right of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land.

SEC. 8. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 1, strike out "the northwest quarter" and insert "lots 2, 3, 4, and 5."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILADELPHIA NATIONAL SHRINES PARK COMMISSION

The Clerk called the bill (H. J. Res. 33) to amend the act of August 9, 1946 (Public Law 711, 79th Cong.), for the purpose of allowing the Philadelphia National Shrines Park Commission additional time in which to prepare and to submit its report to the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill, Senate Joint Resolution 33, be substituted for the House bill. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 4 of the act of August 9, 1946 (Public Law 711, 79th Cong.), is amended by deleting therefrom the date "January 3, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof the date "January 3, 1948."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill (H. J. Res. 33) was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAN CARLOS DRAINAGE AND IRRIGATION DISTRICT, ARIZONA

The Clerk called the bill (H. J. Res. 126) to authorize the San Carlos Irrigation and Drainage District, Arizona, to drill, equip, and acquire wells for use on the San Carlos irrigation project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what will this cost?

Mr. WELCH. It will not cost anything.

Mr. BARRETT. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that the cost of the project is $300,000; however, the entire amount is charged against the land and will be paid by the people owning the land there.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. So that ultimately there will be no cost to the Federal Government?

Mr. WELCH. There will be no cost to the Federal Government whatsoever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 60, an identical bill to the House bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the San Carlos irrigation project, Arizona, has been constructed under authority of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 475), as supplemented and amended; and

Whereas a contract has been executed pursuant to such legislative authority between the Secretary of the Interior and the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district providing for the repayment of the proper share of the cost of project irrigation works by the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district on behalf of project lands in private and public ownership; and

Whereas, at the beginning of the 1947 irrigation season, due to extended drought, there is virtually a complete lack of surface and reservoir water supply on the project for the irrigation of the lands of the district and the Pima Indians of the Gila River Indian Reservation, thus creating an emergency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be constructed an extension of the system of wells and pumping works of the San Carlos irrigation project, including the enlargement, rehabilitation, and repair of the present pumping and drainage works of the said project, and in order to expedite and assist the accomplishment thereof, the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district, is hereby authorized, (1) to develop underground water within and without the area of the San Carlos irrigation project exclusively for use as a part of the common stored and pumped water supply of said project; (2) to drill irrigation wells within and without the project area necessary for making underground waters available exclusively for use on all lands of the project, and equip the same with pumping facilities and equipment, including the deepening, replacement, and repair of existing project wells and equipment; and (3) to purchase with the consent of and under agreement with the owner thereof and to develop privately owned wells within or adjacent to the project areas, together with rights-of-way necessary to the operation of such wells: Provided, That the cost of the wells, exclusively for use as part of the common stored and pumped water supply of said project, equipment, and pumping works herein authorized to be constructed or acquired shall not exceed the sum of $380,000 and, within that limit, such cost shall be deemed a project charge to be distributed equally per acre over both the Indian lands and the lands in public and private ownership within the San Carlos irrigation project, and shall be repayable to the United States in accordance with existing law: Provided further, That the Secretary shall, at the earliest practicable date, enter into an agreement with the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district, which agreement shall describe the scope and extent of the work to be done by the district, the plans and specifications therefor, and such other provisions, in conformity herewith, as may be agreed upon between the Secretary and the district: Provided further, That the San Carlos irrigation and drainage district shall be reimbursed for costs expended by it in the construction and acquisition of such wells, equipment, and pumping works; and the Secretary is hereby authorized to make such reimbursement: First, by releasing the district from the payment of construction charges due the United States annually by the district under the repayment contract executed pursuant to said act of June 7, 1924, as amended, as such charges become due and payable, until the amount of the payments so released shall equal the total amount of the funds certified under oath by the district as having been expended by it for the construction and acquisition of wells and equipment under the terms of the agreement provided for herein, the first of such annual payments so to be released by the Secretary being that due from the district on December 1, 1947; or second, by paying to the district the full amount of the funds so certified as expended by it in the work authorized to be done, or any balance thereof not otherwise paid as hereinabove provided, out of appropriations hereafter made by Congress for this purpose; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $380,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 60 is identical with House Joint Resolution 126. In order to expedite the legislation, it is well to substitute the Senate measure which has already passed the other body in this form. This bill is to take care of an emergency situation where time is of the essence, and by substituting we can hasten final action.

This measure authorizes the project to provide 20 additional new wells on its area, half of which is on the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Final County, Ariz., and also to provide for deepening and improving some of the existing wells in connection with that project. Half of the project lands are Indian lands, and half belong to white farmers. As has been explained, the cost of this work is to be added to the total cost of the project and is reimbursable under the existing repayment contracts.

The original plan for this project built by the Indian Service contemplated a certain number of wells on the project which were to be put down as a part of the cost of the whole project. This arrangement contemplated supplying 80 percent of the total water requirement from stored water in the reservoir behind Coolidge Dam, with 20 percent to be supplied from wells on the project. The project was not entirely completed with regard to the necessary number of wells, and the existing wells have not been kept in first-class equipment because of the lack of material and supplies during recent years. Therefore, this measure merely expedites carrying out the original intent of the law.

The reason for great haste at this time is that a drought is continuing in that area, and there is too little water stored behind Coolidge Dam now to begin to supply the next growing season adequately. The planting season comes early in southern Arizona. In fact, the spring planting has already begun, and crop yield depends upon the prospective water supply, which this coming year must probably come from new wells and deepened old wells. For that reason, these farmers—both whites and Indians—are hoping for quick action to grant the authority to proceed with the work.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill (H. J. Res. 126) was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGALIZING DEPENDENCY ALLOWANCES TO SERVICEMEN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1363) to amend further the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I question the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] to advise us how many servicemen, approximately, are involved in this situation.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the inquiry, I would state that there would only be 12 to 24 in the entire group. One department reported that there would not be more than 12 that would come under the provisions of the act. It does not cover an especially large number, but it is a good thing in that it relieves them from penalization that now occurs.

Mr. DEANE. Has considerable study been given to this legislation?

Mr. BLACKNEY. Yes; it has been checked very carefully.

Mr. DEANE. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended by adding the following paragraph at the end of section 4 thereof:

"Payments of allowances which have been or hereafter may be made under this act based on a purported marriage and made prior to judicial annulment or termination of such marriage are valid: Provided, That it is adjudged or decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction that the marriage was entered into in good faith on the part of the spouse in military service or that, in the absence of such a judgment or decree, such finding of good faith is made by the head of the department concerned or by such officer of the department concerned as he may designate for the purpose."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF DEPENDENTS OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1376) to amend the acts of October 14, 1942 (56 Stat. 786), as amended, and November 28, 1943 (57 Stat. 593), as amended, so as to authorize transportation of dependents and household effects of personnel of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard to overseas bases.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the transportation of dependents and household effects of personnel of the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Coast and Geodetic Survey, incident to secret or confidential orders, and for other purposes," approved

October 14, 1942 (56 Stat. 786), as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

(a) Strike out the words "points to new stations in the United States to which such personnel may be subsequently ordered for duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That the wives of" as they appear in lines 13, 14, and 15 thereof, on page 786, volume 56, Statutes at Large, and insert in lieu thereof the words "points to current or new stations to which such personnel may be subsequently ordered for duty, at which restrictive conditions no longer prevail, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and without regard to cost of transportation previously provided for dependents and household effects to such points: Provided, That the wives of".

(b) Strike out the words "personnel concerned have been so ordered shall constitute authority" as they appear in line 26 thereof, on page 786, volume 56, Statutes at Large, and insert in lieu thereof the words "personnel concerned have been so ordered, or that they have been ordered to new duty stations or continued on current duty stations where their dependents are not restricted from joining them, shall constitute authority."

SEC. 2. The act entitled "An act to authorize the transportation of dependents and household effects of personnel of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard under certain conditions, and for other purposes," approved November 28, 1943 (57 Stat. 593), as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

(a) Strike out the words "United States, and from such points to new stations in the United States to which such personnel may be subsequently ordered for duty" as they appear in lines 21 and 22 of section 1 thereof, on page 593, volume 57, Statutes at Large, and insert in lieu thereof the words "United States, and from such points to current or new stations to which such personnel may be subsequently ordered for duty."

(b) Strike out the words "or Government quarters for their dependents are available" as they appear in line 24 of section 1 thereof, on page 593, volume 57, Statutes at Large, and insert in lieu thereof the words "without regard to cost of transportation previously provided for dependents and household effects to such points."

(c) Strike out the words "them, the wives of such personnel, or such other responsible persons" as they appear in line 7, section 2 thereof, on page 594, volume 57, Statutes at Large, and insert in lieu thereof the words "them, or have been ordered to new duty stations at which their dependents are not restricted from joining them, or have continued on current duty stations where restrictive conditions no longer prevail, the wives of such personnel, or such other responsible persons."

SEC. 3. Section 1 of this act shall be effective in all respects as provided in section 2 of the act of October 14, 1942 (56 Stat. 786), and section 2 of this act shall be effective in all respects as provided in section 6 of the act of November 28, 1943 (57 Stat. 593), as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EASEMENT IN LANDS IN LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 235) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to convey to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., an easement for construction and operation of a storm drain in and under certain Government-owned lands situated in that city.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to convey to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., under such terms and conditions as he may consider appropriate, a perpetual easement for the construction, reconstruction, inspection, maintenance, operation, and repair of a storm drain in, under, and along a part of a plot of approximately 15/10 acres of land located in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., and acquired by the United States through condemnation proceeding No. 2044–BH, Civil, in the District Court of the United States for the Central Division of the Southern District of California, metes and bounds description of which is on file in the Navy Department.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2102) to provide for a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor supply program, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I am not in a position to explain it. I am sure a request will be made to have the bill go over.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that this bill is programed for later on in the week, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the situation, perhaps, objection should be made, but I did discuss this with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the other day, and he said that the urgency of it was that the beet-sugar contracts are just now under way in certain parts of the country, and if we are to get sugar produced and have these beet-sugar growers signed up, they should know what the labor program will be. There is considerable urgency about it if you are going to have the sugar produced this year that we want in this country.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to say that the Committee on Agriculture was before the Committee on Rules this morning, and because of the urgency of quick action, a rule was granted for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1350) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, in view of the fact that the report accompanying this bill does not comply with the rules, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR PROMOTION OF SUBSTITUTE EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1713) to provide for the promotion of substitute employees in the postal service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to press the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] to explain the difference between the present figure of the retirement amount on the present annual basis, and the annual basis as proposed in the bill.

Mr. REES. The best information we have from the Post Office Department is to the effect that it does not change the amount so much that the substitute employee receives at the end of the year as in the long run. However, this measure would bring about a much easier method of computing his salary. The Post Office Department recommends the passage of the bill and all postal employee organizations support it. They tell us it will save a lot of time, energy, and expense in computing the salaries of these substitute employees. It is beneficial not only to the substitute employees but to the Post Office Department, and it will not cost the Government any more money.

Mr. DEANE. Does the Post Office Department sponsor this bill?

Mr. REES. It does.

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, of course the inquiry submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina is in connection with his duties as a member of the objectors committee on this side. As we all know, it is very important that Members introducing bills or committees reporting out bills make statements concerning them for the RECORD when requested to do so, because that plays a very important part in connection with the interpretation and the administration of the legislation in the future.

Mr. REES. If the gentleman will yield, it is of benefit not only to the Congress but the country to know exactly what kind of legislation we are adopting.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all substitute employees in the postal service shall be promoted successively at the beginning of the quarter following 1 year's satisfactory service in each grade until they reach the maximum grade authorized for the respective assignment, without regard to the number of hours they are actually employed in the postal service during the year.

SEC. 2. Each substitute employee in the postal service shall, for promotional and leave purposes, receive credit for one-twelfth of a year for each whole calendar month that the substitute employee has been on the rolls as a substitute since his last promotion as a substitute or appointment as a substitute, whichever is later: Provided, That when a regular employee has been reduced to a substitute position, the months of service as a regular employee shall be included with the months served as a substitute to determine the date he will be eligible for automatic promotion under section . of this act: Provided further, That the automatic promotion of a substitute employee in the postal service shall be withheld (1) for 3 months when such employee is absent on leave without pay and not available for duty for 90 days during a calendar year; (2) for 6 months when such employee is absent on leave without pay and not available for duty for 180 days during a calendar year; (3) for 9 months when such employee is absent on leave without pay and not available for duty for 270 days during a calendar year; and (4) for 1 year when such employee is absent on leave without pay and not available for duty for 360 days during a calendar year.

SEC. 3. Section 1 of the act of March 6, 1946 (Public Law 317, 79th Cong.), entitled "An act to provide credit for past service to substitute employees of the postal service when appointed to regular positions; to extend annual and sick-leave benefits to war-service indefinite substitute employees; to fix the rate of compensation for temporary substitute rural carriers serving in the place of regular carriers in the armed forces; and for other purposes," is amended to read as follows:

"Upon appointment to a regular position in the postal service, any employee who was a substitute in the postal service prior to July 1, 1945, shall receive credit for actual substitute service including time served as a special-delivery messenger, performed prior to July 1, 1945, computed on the basis of 1 year for each unit of 2,448 hours of service, but such credit shall not exceed 4 years. The credit thus computed shall be added to credit for the time the employee has been on the rolls as a substitute employee in the postal service on and after July 1, 1945, computed on the basis of one-twelfth of a year for each whole calendar month that the employee has been on the rolls. Upon the appointment of any such employee to a regular position he shall be placed in the salary grade to which he would have progressed had his original appointment been made to a regular position of grade 1, plus four grades, and the progression shall be computed on the basis of years of substitute service as herein provided. Any fractional part of a year's substitute service accumulated since the last compensation increase as a substitute shall be included with the regular service as a regular employee in determining eligibility for promotion to the next higher grade following appointment to a regular position: Provided, That no substitute shall be appointed to a higher grade of a regular position than the highest grade to which employees may progress through annual promotions: Provided further, That upon appointment of a substitute employee to a regular position he shall not be placed in or promoted to a grade higher than the grade to which he would have progressed, including benefits authorized by section 23 of Public Law 134, approved July 6, 1945, had his original appointment been to a regular position of grade 1: And provided further, That employees shall not be allowed credit for service performed under temporary or war-service appointments except when such service is continuous to the date of appointment as a classified substitute or regular employee."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTIFICATION OF STREPTOMYCIN UNDER FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2045) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, by providing for the certification of batches of drugs composed wholly or partly of any kind of streptomycin, or any derivative thereof, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what the occasion is for the enactment of this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. The occasion for its enactment is a request on the part of the Food and Drug Administration, which is concurred in by the manufacturers of this drug.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the specific purpose of it?

Mr. HINSHAW. The specific purpose of the bill is to include the drug known as streptomycin with insulin and penicillin in the requirement as to testing their capacity to do the work, and certification.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is it a protective measure?

Mr. HINSHAW. It is a protective measure, for the purpose of protecting the users and the doctors who prescribe the medicines. The bill states that the potency of the drug must be stated upon the bottle, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Has the American Medical Association said anything about it?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; but I assume the American Medical Association, having approved the other action, likewise approves this. If it does not, certainly the manufacturers want to have the testing done.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am wondering if there have been any complaints about this preparation to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. HINSHAW. The complaints come from both the manufacturers and the Department, that it is necessary to certify the potency of this drug in the normal use of it. Only through batch testing such as is done for penicillin and insulin can this be assured.

Mr. CARROLL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I explain to the gentleman from Ohio that there is a similar law applicable to penicillin and insulin, and this bill is to bring streptomycin into the same category, for the protection of the public, because there are manufacturers who are bringing much of these drugs onto the market without making the proper test. The Government desires to make that test, according to my understanding.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that streptomycin has cured a great many cases? I know of a man in the hospital who was operated on 16 times. The bone graft never took, but he has no infection at all, and streptomycin cured him.

Mr. CARROLL. It is a wonderful drug. They do not know how effective it is, and they do not know how toxic it will be. The Government has to experiment to test its qualitative and quantitative effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 301 (j) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 21, ch. 9), is amended by inserting "506, 507," after "section 404, 505."

SEC. 2. Section 502 (l) of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting "or streptomycin" after "penicillin."

SEC. 3. The heading of section 507 of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting "or streptomycin" after "penicillin"; and the first sentence of subsection (a) of such section 507 is amended by inserting "or streptomycin" after "penicillin."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE FEDERAL FIREARMS ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1778) to amend the Federal Firearms Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from New Jersey, the author of the bill, if I am correct in my understanding that this bill is merely to amend the law to correct a situation which arose in the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The gentleman has correctly stated the purpose of the bill. The subject matter of the proposed amendment came to the attention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by reason of a communication addressed to the Speaker of the House by Tom C. Clark, Attorney General. He pointed out in his letter dated February 3, 1947, an unfortunate situation which resulted in the setting aside of a conviction because of a deficiency which exists in section 1, subsection 6, of the Federal Firearms Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1250, U. S. C., title 15, sec. 901 (6)). This deficiency was pointed out by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in the case of Nicholson against United States, decided March 29, 1944 (141 Fed. (2d) 552). In that case defendant was convicted in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California of a violation of the Federal Firearms Act, in that he knowingly transported a firearm in interstate commerce after having been convicted of a crime of violence. He had previously been convicted of robbery in the first degree. The circuit court of appeals reversed the conviction on the ground that robbery had not been included with other crimes of violence enumerated in the definition contained in the Federal Firearms Act of 1938. In the drawing of the original bill the word "robbery" was omitted. It was undoubtedly an oversight. The amendment proposed by this bill is for no other purpose than to correct the mistake and make clear that robbery was intended to be included in the definition of crimes of violence.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, supplementing what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has said, does this bill have anything to do with requiring generally the registration of firearms such as shotguns and rifles, as has been proposed in other legislation?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The bill has nothing to do with the subject that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. SHORT. If it did, it would not get very far, I can assure the gentleman of that.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I can assure the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] that I am in full accord with the views that underlie the statements they have just made. If the amendment I have proposed had gone as far as to apply to the situation to which they have in mind, I would not have introduced the bill. It applies only to shipments by those individuals who have been convicted of crimes of violence, such as we know robbery to be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1, subsection 6, of the Federal Firearms Act of June 30, 1938 (52 Stat. 1250; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 901 (6)), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The term 'crime of violence' means murder, manslaughter, rape, mayhem, kidnaping, robbery, burglary, housebreaking; assault with intent to kill, commit rape, or rob; assault with a dangerous weapon, or assault with intent to commit any offense punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "section 1, subsection 6" and insert "paragraph (6) of the first section."

Line 7, insert "(6)."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARBLEHEAD MILITARY RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 450) providing for the conveyance to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, of Marblehead Military Reservation for public use.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if there is any consideration involved in this transfer?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There is no consideration involved in the transfer. This bill is patterned entirely on three bills which passed the Congress last year for the transfer of Fort Morgan, in the State of Alabama, the transfer of lighthouse property in the city of Atlantic City, N. J., and the transfer of lighthouse property in the city of Ipswich, Mass., and the transfer of 45 other parcels in the last omnibus bill which was passed by the Congress, none of which provided for any consideration.

Mr. DEANE. Can the gentleman advise us why the Bureau of the Budget does not recommend the passage of the bill?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I do not know whether the Bureau of the Budget objected to the bill, but perhaps the War Assets Administration did for the reason that all this property is surplus property. This property is an old landmark. It is historical property. It was the viewpoint of Congress, apparently, in passing these three bills last year, which were signed by the President, that old historic landmarks are not to be declared surplus war property.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, in this case, as in several other bills which we have been asked to consider, very few reports have been submitted. It is rather difficult to determine the merits of legislation without full and complete facts; and notice is here served on the House membership that in the future the committee be given full details, substantiated by documentary evidence, of the merits of all bills submitted under the Consent Calendar.

In this case it seems the Treasury Department has no objection. The War Assets Administration does not favor enactment; the Bureau of the Budget does not favor enactment.

I would like to ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over so that we may include reports from the last two agencies mentioned.

Mr. MANASCO. Will the gentleman withhold that request for a few moments?

Mr. DEANE. Yes; I withdraw my request for the time being.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. MANASCO. This bill was before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments last year. Our committee refused to report it on the ground that it would be establishing a dangerous precedent. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] cited several other instances where other committees had reported bills out favorably, transferring title to old forts and other sites, without any consideration. In my own district there is a small town of 2,500 people, which had representatives of the city council in Washington for 3 days last week. Our people tried to get this property for nothing, but they found out that under the Surplus Property Act they could not get it. So we submitted a bid for approximately $4,000 for the purchase of part of an abandoned prisoner-of-war camp to be used for recreational purposes.

The reason our committee last year opposed the passage of all bills granting property to cities, States, or other governmental bodies without compensation was because we thought we should recover as much money for the Treasury of the United States in the sale of surplus property as possible, to be applied to our staggering war debt. I am not going to object to this bill, but if the House passes the bill I am going to offer a bill to grant to the town of Aliceville, Ala., some part of the property that was used as a prisoner-of-war camp without compensation, because I do not think we should make a town of 2,500 people pay $4,000 for a piece of property for recreation purposes when you give other towns similar property for nothing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Without entering into a discussion of the problem confronting the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], it seems to me that he should start a bill of his own—but the facts in this case are distinguishable, without my passing judgment as to how I would vote on a bill which the gentleman from Alabama might introduce if reported out by a committee. The facts in this case seem to me clearly distinguishable from the facts in the gentleman's case. In his case the Government purchased the land recently in connection with war activities or activities which might have been connected with the war. In this particular case the Government purchased this property in 1835 and the Government has been the owner of the property for 111 years. The report clearly shows it was acquired in 1835 by the War Department from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. For $250.

Mr. McCORMACK. For $250, and the property has been used for the maintenance of a lighthouse. It has long been open to the public and is famed both as a landmark, which gives it historical value, and as a place to which the residents of the area have repaired for recreational purposes. For many years it has been a public gathering place, particularly for persons going to Marblehead for the annual summer regattas held there. Of course, I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO] will not object and will not offer any amendments, and I hope the objectors will permit this bill to be passed, because an examination of the report further shows that the Treasury Department, through a representative, testified that its only interest was in the continued maintenance of the light, and the right-of-way thereto. Well, the bill provides for that. Now, the position of the War Assets Administration was this: They object to any kind of a bill on the ground that its enactment would constitute a piecemeal disposal of surplus property, contrary to the provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, and would lead to the enactment of additional legislation of this type. That is all. That is a perfectly proper position for an agency to take as an agency, but unless something is done this property will be disposed of.

Unless this bill is passed this property will be disposed of to private interests, undoubtedly, and it will then be too late. We should adopt the procedure—and I am not talking about this particular bill—I supported the legislation passed last year—I think that instead of having this property sent back to the agency that had it declared surplus and sent to the War Assets Administration that we are using our own judgment as a legislature in saying that the people of this district, Marblehead—and it is not located in my district—are entitled to have this historic site continue. It is to be used for a public purpose. The bill specifically provides that it must be maintained as a public park and that it shall be up to the local government, not the Federal Government, to take care of the maintenance charges. The bill further provides that if it is ever discontinued title reverts back to the Federal Government. It seems to me that we have thoroughly protected the interests of the Federal Government and at the same time have a proper regard for the interests and sentiments of the local people. It seems to me that Congress, in these circumstances, will be justified in acting favorably on this.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MANASCO. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have not offered an amendment to this bill, but I am just watching this as a precedent that we are setting. The gentleman referred to this as a historic landmark. My town could not, at present, of course, be considered a historic landmark.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is historic because it sent the gentleman here, and that means a lot.

Mr. MANASCO. What I am trying to do is to make it a historic landmark.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman certainly is.

Mr. MANASCO. If the United States Government is going to give property away I want them to start with the poor folks in Aliceville.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to say this to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], so the record will show, that he is a very serious and able representative of his people. He has the respect of all of his colleagues without regard to party.

I think that on the facts of the gentleman's case it should be viewed very liberally. Congress should view the sentiments of local communities very liberally and not in a limited way. The agency involved having taken the position it feels is justified, the agency has done its full duty. The matter now comes before Congress for consideration and the agency is out of the picture. In viewing these matters they should be viewed liberally rather than in a limited way. While not committing myself I am practically stating that I hope the gentleman will introduce this bill, that it will be reported out and I am sure if it is, because of his persuading personality, the gentleman from Alabama will get it through the House unanimously.

Mr. MANASCO. If the gentleman will yield at that point I want to say that I was opposed to giving this property to anybody. I think it should be paid for, and it was at my suggestion that people from Aliceville came up here last week negotiating for the sale of the property at a fair market value, less the 10-percent preference that the War Assets Administration gives to States and municipalities. I think that policy should be followed with all the surplus property owned by the Federal Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think there are distinguishing features here. Here is something of real historic interest that has been enjoyed by the people of this area for decades and generations. The people have a historical attachment to it. In such cases, without regard to the section of the country, I think such historic sites should be preserved for the people of the locality.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield, if the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me.

Mr. DEANE. Certainly.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Alabama stated that this creates a precedent. I call his attention to the fact that three bills similar to this, identical in language, were passed during the Congress last year with the same point of view of the War Assets Administration. These bills were signed by the President last year. This bill therefore does not establish any precedent.

Mr. DEANE. In view of the explanation by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Coast Guard, or such agency of the United States as holds title, be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all improvements thereon owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation situated on Marblehead Neck at the east entrance to Marblehead Harbor, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately three and seventy-four one-hundredths acres; and said property being that which was acquired by the War Department from the Department of Commerce pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 28, 1935 (Public Law No. 81, 74th Cong.): Provided, That an area 100 feet square surrounding the lighthouse tower, with right-of-way both by land and sea, shall be reserved for lighthouse purposes: Provided further, That the town of Marblehead shall not have the right to sell or convey aforesaid property, nor to devote the same to any other than a public use; and in the event that said property shall not be used as above provided, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "than", insert the word "for" and after the word "public", insert the word "park."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 1 OF FEDERAL POWER ACT WITH RESPECT TO TERMS OF OFFICE OF MEMBERS

The clerk called the bill (H. R. 1777) to amend section 1 of the Federal Power Act, with respect to the terms of office of members of the Federal Power Commission.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 1 of the Federal Power Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 16, sec. 792), is amended by inserting immediately after the second sentence thereof a new sentence as follows: "Upon the expiration of his term of office a commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor is appointed and shall have qualified."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That concludes the call of bills on the Consent Calendar.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an article.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject of Battle of the Budget and also on the subject Justice Assured for Trainees Under the On-the-Job Training Program.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, part of my remarks today were to be addressed to the matter of conscription or extending the selective-service law, to which I was opposed. That would be a moot question at this time. I therefore withdraw my unanimous consent request to address the House for 20 minutes today and will reframe my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, during the last few days the press has carried the very disturbing news that this country, in order to stop Russia, must feed, clothe, and house the German people—that we must make Germany strong enough to stop Russia. If my reading of the press reports is correct, former President Hoover, who probably knows more about world conditions and world needs than any other individual, stated that unless we feed the Germans and give them materials of all kinds, including fertilizer which our own farmers need, to rehabilitate themselves and make their nation economically and militarily unbeatable, there will be danger of Russia not only overwhelming all of Europe but wiping out England as well.

It is also my understanding from what I read that Mr. Hoover stated that the Germans were the only people, other than our own, in the whole world who showed any inclination to work and save and maintain themselves. So it seems that what we have done over the last few years was to join Great Britain and Russia in destroying the German Government, its armies, its power to make war, its people—bring them to the verge of starvation—and that now, having destroyed them and their power to produce and protect and maintain themselves, we must take up the burden of reestablishing German military might. To do that, it appears we must first put the German people on their feet. If that situation is correctly pictured by former President Hoover, and I assume that it is, it is rather conclusive proof that we did not gain very much by this last war.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much did we gain from the first war?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I think that certainly we did not profit nor we did not learn anything by our experience in the first war. Had we, we would not have been led into this last one.

Mr. KNUTSON. No; dragged in.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, the gentleman says we were dragged in. I am inclined to accept that. I assume that the gentleman from Minnesota means that we were, though we did not know it, in a shooting, fighting war while the President was telling us that the administration was endeavoring to keep out of war. That is what the gentleman means, is it not, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I am not attempting to defend anyone. I long since gave up criminal practice.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is the situation in any event.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes, and I hope that the Members will not leave the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. During the fall of 1945 General Patton came to Washington and he came by my office, as he expressed it, to thank me for defending him on this floor when, as he said, he was on the battlefront and could not defend himself. In the course of the conversation he said, "Why do they want to feed Germany?" I said, "General, surely you are not charging that up to me; I have not insisted on it." He said, "I have been all over Germany." I believe he said he had flown all over Germany. He said, "They have the finest crops in Germany I ever saw." He said, "We did not shoot up the fields, we shot up the towns." Last year I was talking to General Bradley, who was General Patton's superior at that time, and I called his attention to General Patton's statement. I said, "Now, what is wrong?" He said, "The trouble was that the the Communists got in there, drove off the livestock and stripped the farms of the farm machinery, and so forth, and almost everything that those people had to make a living with."

Now, if we will put a stop to a gang of Reds we are sending over there or that are going over there, pretending to represent us, and let those German people go to work, they will make a living without the taxpayers of America having to feed them for all time to come.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is not only the population of Germany, as the picture is given us in the press, but it is the people of the Balkans, and the men and women and children of Greece at the moment, and we might as well add of China—in fact of every other nation on earth. If Great Britain is on the way out as an empire; is to go as other nations in the past have gone out, I do not know whether we can prevent that or not.

As former President Hoover is reported to have said, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] earlier today told us, it is extremely doubtful whether we here in America, some fifty million workers, can assume and successfully carry on the burden of rebuilding the war-devastated countries—feeding, clothing, and building homes for the undernourished people, then go beyond that, rebuild and equip their factories and put them into production so that they may successfully meet and turn back the forces of Russia and the countries she can gather to her aid.

From labor leaders we hear not a little about involuntary servitude, but, in our efforts to accomplish so much, will we not fasten a yoke upon ourselves, bring ourselves to our knees, and render us incapable of helping ourselves to pull our domestic burden, to say nothing of that which United Nations and its spokesmen, some here in our own country would load upon us.

But in any event one thing is sure: If we are to feed the Germans, if we are to contribute to the military power of Greece, if we are to meet Russia on every front—if we are to take over the task of seeing to it that Churchill does not live to see the dismemberment of the British Empire, and I am afraid that is what we are being led or driven to assume, then the food and all aid of every kind which goes across should have on it the label which will enable those who get it, and the same as to the clothes, those who wear them, to know that the things they get do not come from Russia but that they come from the United States of America, and that this country is the one which is feeding and clothing them and endeavoring to again make fertile the fields and enable the people there to plant and harvest their crops, make them a free self-sustaining nation. It is time that no more of our money, no more of our materials, be used for political purposes. In my judgment, the distinguished citizen was right when he said that UNRRA had misrepresented us and that it was time now that everyone who received anything from this land should know from whence it came.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia just for an observation.

Mr. COX. I asked the gentleman to yield because I wished to make the observation that it is my opinion that when the British Empire goes to pieces we lose all that we have. The responsibility of saving this country rests upon you gentlemen on that side. I have never been one who has found it particularly pleasing to blow Mr. Hoover's horn, but I believe that he is a great man and I believe he has a wide understanding of the problem. I intend to go along with the gentleman to the end that we do that which is necessary to save this country.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot go as far as the gentleman from Georgia. I do not think the life of this Republic depends upon the British Empire.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I say no, it does not. If we will attend to our own business, we, our young men and women, have the productive ability, the courage, and the determination to defend us against all enemies.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what I say.

But I do say that if we let this bunch, Zionist Communists, that is now undermining Great Britain succeed in destroying the British Government it will mean the collapse not only of Britain but probably of all western Europe; then communism, the greatest menace civilization has ever known, would overrun the whole European continent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; and if that is true, it is time that Americans begin to think of America.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and to expose and drive out the Communists that are boring in here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is time that we begin to make ourselves strong, able to meet all comers—so strong we can stand upon our own feet—all of which brings me now to the thing that is in my mind. This last war was won, as everyone knows, in the factories and by the American men and women in the factories, and those young men and women who went abroad. It was won by production here at home, that is the way it was won, on the home front and by the courage and sacrifices of our fighting men and women. Here we are, along in March, and no matter what kind of a law we pass, April 1 is coming. You can move Thanksgiving around but you cannot change April 1st.

Mr. RANKIN. April fool.

Mr. HOFFMAN No; you cannot fool everybody all the time nor the same folks twice with the same bait. So what? Labor disputes and strikes are destructive. No nation can remain strong unless it has production and contented workers. I do not know what the Supreme Court did today but I do know that January and February are in the past, that another coal strike may be on the way and that we have not yet on the books any legislation designed to prevent a coal strike, upon which all industrial production in this country depends. Nor have we a law to prevent strikes which injuriously affect the public health, safety, or welfare. Now, why? Is it so difficult? There are certain things about basic labor legislation that we all know we must have in the law. A law must be just. It must be fair. It must impose equality.

Saturday in a hearing of the Committee on Labor I heard the former head of a union and the present head of a union admit that certain practices on the part of organized labor, chiefly the officials, were wrong and should not be permitted. Then he was asked, "Are you willing that those practices which you admit are wrong should be spelled out in a law and a penalty applied when that law is violated?" That gentleman had just said that in his opinion the National Labor Relations Act should be amended so as to provide a fine and a prison sentence, one or the other or both, to employers who were guilty of an unfair labor practice. The present law does not make anything a union or a union member does an unfair labor practice. Yet when the question was put as to whether we should not define unfair labor practices on the part of the unions, he said, "No." You see the attitude. That is the attitude taken by practically every one of the labor leaders who appeared before the House Committee on Labor which is now holding hearings.

There are certain things such as jurisdictional strikes, secondary strikes, boycotts, violence on the picket lines which must be banned. Industry-wide bargaining which makes a monopoly of labor and which permits the union boss to sell his men as other men sell coal and steel should go. We must have those things covered by the law. We all know it. There is no difficulty in defining the objectives that we want to obtain. The difficulty comes, perhaps, in the wording of the various provisions. That is the business which in my judgment we should be about—now—so that before we get a strike in the coal industry we will have something on our books or at least we will have something to send over to the other end of the Capitol which will at least aid in preventing a Nation-wide strike. Then let the other body answer to the people if we do not get legislation. We are going to hold hearings, I understand, on labor racketeering. I saw a list of 15 or more witnesses who are to come down and explain or deny racketeering.

Permit me to ask, What is the necessity of holding hearings before a labor committee to determine whether there is or is not racketeering? Anyone who wants to learn whether over the past 5 or 10 years there has been racketeering in this country needs but to go over to the library and read Westbrook Pegler. It has been there for 10 years. All you need to do is to go to the public press and look at the pictures. Read the factual accounts of the reporters. All you need to do is read the hearings of the old Truman committee of March 1943 where it appears that $500,000—half a million dollars—was taken from men who wanted to work in the service of their country in building a camp where our men could be trained for war. Yet, before those men could go to work and complete that job of building training quarters they had to come across with $50 each. Why, the record is full of specific instances. We all know—if we read the press and if we are familiar with the situation in our own districts—we all know that for 10 years men have been forced to pay tribute in order to work, not only for themselves, but when they wanted to work for the Government. Now a veteran who fought to give the Chinaman and the Hottentot freedom must pay tribute before he can hold a job which he must have if his child and wife would eat. I can cite you an instance where the former Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison and the commander of the third district here in the defense area backed up and retreated, ran away in the face of union demands that machinery, turbines, guns, and planes belonging to the Navy, mark you, and supplies belonging to the Army, should not go across the picket line until negotiations had been carried on with union leaders. While our men were fighting and dying abroad, here at home high-ranking officials of both branches of the service backed up and backed down, stood with hat in hand until the union said that the supplies that our fighting men needed might go forward. And yet—and yet, it takes us more than 2 months to even bring out on the floor of this House a bill curbing the activities of labor. No—no, there are just a very few—you can almost count them on your fingers and toes—labor leaders, so-called, who are painting this unpleasant picture of labor and who are racketeering or collecting from individual workers.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman is familiar with the fact that Cecil B. de Mille, one of the greatest artists of all time, has been driven from the radio because he refused to be shaken down for money to finance a political campaign to which he was opposed?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that before the Labor Committee the other day I made an apparently very egotistical statement which was to the effect that I was going to make three of the best and greatest speeches that have ever been heard in this House on labor legislation. If I can get the time I am going to do it—three of the best and greatest speeches on that subject that were ever made here. Now, that is bragging some, and I am going to make good by taking the statement of Cecil B. de Mille, made before the Labor Committee, and cutting it up into three sections and reading it. It was the clearest, most logical, and most convincing statement that I have ever had the privilege of hearing. While I have the highest regard—and while I stand in awe of my colleagues here, I just venture to say there is not a man on the floor who can read that statement and offer any additional arguments for labor legislation. I commend it to you. I beg of you to get the statement and read it. I venture to predict that if you do you will say that that man's patriotism and his perseverance have far outrun his desire to make a few hundred thousand dollars by just paying a dollar to somebody for the privilege of working. He has rendered a patriotic service that it would be difficult to surpass.

So I come back. I want to go along with the leadership of this House. I propose to do so, but I do say it is about time—I see two or three or four members of the Labor Committee before me—I say it is about time that we in the Labor Committee begin to write a bill and that we do not put it off very much longer.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman be kind enough to repeat the author of the article he has been discussing?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include at the conclusion of my remarks the statement to which reference was just made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOEVEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say upon that subject. Can we not get together, we Republicans, upon whom the responsibility now rests, can we not now—not 2 weeks, not 2 months from now—write and bring to the floor a labor bill? That is what the people want; that is what the people expect; that is what they have a right to expect. United Nations, finding itself unable to agree upon world peace, is falling apart, or at least unable to make and maintain peace. So the United States is called upon to send the money, the food, the clothing, all things necessary to rebuild all nations which are in need. Again, we are asked to make safe Britain's position in Greece and in the Middle East. Again, Britain is asking for the tools, but this time she is not saying, as she said before, that if we gave her the tools she would finish the job.

Today, the situation is clear, the door is open, the way is clear—if we accept the invitation—follow the one-worlders, the United Nations—we will be sending your boys once more to fight on foreign soil. The very least we can do is to prepare for whatever is to come.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The statement of Cecil B. de Mille before the House of Representatives Committee on Education and Labor, February 21, 1947, is as follows:

To the Honorable the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives:

The American workman is regarded as raw material by most business management and most labor management. Congress must give the workman protection from both. His civil and political rights must be protected. He looks to this Congress to protect them. The average American workman is a real American. He wants his home and his children to be American. It is up to this Congress to restore his freedom as an individual and as a free citizen.

No domestic problem is more important to the general welfare of the United States than the problem of labor relations.

The people expect the Eightieth Congress to make such laws as are necessary and proper to hasten the solution of this problem.

Legislation alone will not solve it. It must be solved by labor and management bargaining in an atmosphere of freedom and equity.

But that atmosphere is lacking today because the present laws and recent Government policy have produced unfreedom and inequity.

New legislation can and must right these wrongs. Where a bad or mistaken labor policy has produced chaos, a new policy can and must produce order.

I thank the committee for this opportunity to present my views on this all-important subject. I do not hold a brief for either management or unions. My brief is for the American citizen as a human being. I am not a big businessman. I am a union member who has had some personal experience of a union's power over its members. That experience and a citizen's interest in the general welfare of the United States are my only credentials before this committee. In a democracy these credentials are sufficient.

I am a member of the Screen Directors Guild. I am a member of the American Federation of Radio Artists (known as AFRA). I have been a member of AFRA since it was organized. Under AFRA's union-shop contract with the radio industry, every radio artist is obliged to join the union in order to work at his profession. In 1944 my local of AFRA levied upon all its members an assessment of $1 to finance a campaign against a proposition appearing on the California ballot at the general election of that year. I personally favored the proposition. I refused to pay a dollar to oppose my own convictions as a citizen. For this adherence to my political right, I was suspended by AFRA and, under the provisions of the union shop, prevented from appearing on the radio program which I had produced for more than 8 years.

Because I refused to pay a political assessment, I was deprived of the right to work.

I am not seeking from this committee a judgment on my individual case. I am stating it as one example—one example among many that could be adduced—to show the power a union has under the closed or union shop.

There is no need of a fact-finding commission to spend months discovering facts that are clearly apparent to every Member of the Congress and every citizen of the United States.

Today—not tomorrow—is the time for Congress and the Nation to face the issues raised by the closed shop. The evidence is in. Neither Congress nor the Nation has anything to gain by delay.

The only question is, Can the closed shop be regulated so as to protect fully the freedom and rights of the individual worker, or do the workers' freedom and rights demand the abolition of the closed shop?

What George Washington said to his fellow citizens in his Farewell Address is, I am confident, no less true of the Eightieth Congress: "Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment."

I am confident that if this committee is convinced that its choice lies between the closed shop and the freedom and rights of American workers, it will without hesitation recommend that the closed shop must go.

For the purposes of this brief, I make no distinction between the closed shop and the union shop. In this use of language, I follow the precedent of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who said, with reference to the United Mine Workers' demand for a union shop in 1941: "The Government of the United States will not order, nor will Congress pass legislation ordering, a so-called closed shop." (Quoted in Harold W. Metz, Labor Policy of the Federal Government, pp. 145–146.) While the union shop may allow the employer greater freedom in hiring than the closed shop does, the effect upon the individual worker is the same in either case. His right to work is made dependent upon membership and good standing in a union, and it is for the worker rather than the employer that I am appearing before this committee.

I propose to show—

1. That the closed shop is a monopoly;
2. That the closed shop is undemocratic;
3. That the closed shop, by its very nature, leads to the invasion of rights guaranteed by the Constitution;
4. That there is at present no practical redress available to a union member whose rights have been violated by a closed-shop union;
5. That nothing short of abolition of the closed shop can effectively remedy its abuses;
6. That labor's gains need not be adversely affected by the abolition of the closed shop;
7. That there is ample precedent for the abolition of the closed shop;
8. That abolition of the closed shop is in accord with the will of the people.

1. THE CLOSED SHOP IS A MONOPOLY

That the closed shop is a monopoly of labor is self-evident. A monopoly is defined as "exclusive control of the supply of any commodity or service in a given market." (Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, fifth edition.)

I am not here primarily concerned with the monopolistic aspect of the closed shop as it affects the employer or the industry in question. Much could be said about this. In my own industry, motion pictures, for example, there is no doubt that closed shop practices are keeping fresh and needed talent out of the industry. I could cite instances from my own experience. For more than 30 years I have felt it part of my duty to motion pictures to give a hand and a start to creative young minds. More than once recently I have found that I cannot do that any more in certain fields, where the union has decided that seniority is a substitute for talent.

But here and now I am more concerned with the monopolistic effect of the closed shop upon the individual worker. It monopolizes his very right to work. This fact is established by these words of the Supreme Court of California.

"Where a union has * * * attained a monopoly of the supply of labor by means of closed-shop agreements and other forms of collective-labor action, such a union occupies a quasi public position similar to that of a public-service business and it has certain corresponding obligations. It may no longer claim the same freedom from legal restraint enjoyed by golf clubs or fraternal associations. Its asserted right to choose its own members does not merely relate to social relations; it affects the fundamental right to work for a living. * * * The question presented * * * is not one of prices or of serving the public but one of employment. * * * However, the principle is the same." (Joseph James v. Marinship Corp. et al. (25 Calif. (2d) 721, pp. 731–732).)

My union, the American Federation of Radio Artists, is an example of a labor monopoly. It has an industry-wide contract, under which no one can work as a radio artist unless he joins AFRA and keeps in good standing in the union. I cannot work as a radio artist anywhere in the United States where AFRA's contract is in force because I refused to pay a political assessment. When a man's right to work depends upon his submitting to such an imposition, the union's monopolistic power is too apparent to require further proof.
